HUNTSVILLE, ALA.

THE latter half of the scholastic year of this institution will begin January 25, 1858. The splendid buildings, elegant organization, the superior Faculty, and the extraordinary facilities of an accomplished education, recommend this institution to the consideration of every parent. The French Language is taught by Parisians, and taught possibly more thoroughly than any where else outside of a native French family. This a regular Boarding School of the highest order. Besides, Huntsville, as a location for a Female School, is point of beauty and healthfulness, has no equal in the South. I would refer to my patrons in Louisiana: Gen. D. M. THE First Term will commence on Monday, the 15th of March next. The course of instruction will be extensive and thorough. None but well qualified Assistants will be employed in the various Departments. The Religious training of the youth will be an object of primary importance. The Bible will be a text book, but all sectarianism will be scrupulously avoided. The discipline will be strict, but mild and parental. Spelling, Reading, and Composition, so much neglected in many schools, will receive particular attention. THE LIGHT AT HOME.

The light at home! how bright it beams,
When evening shades around us fall;
And from the lattice far it gleams,
To love, and rest, and comfort all;
When wearied with the toils of day,
And strife for glory, gold or fame,
How sweet to seek the quiet way,
Where loving lips will lisp our name
Around the light at home!

When through the dark and stormy night,
The wayward wanderer homeward flies,
How cheering is that twinkling light,
Which through the forest-gloom he spies!
It is the light of home. He feels
That loving hearts will greet him there,
And safely through his bosom steals
The joy and love that banish care
Around the light at home.

The light at home! how still and sweet
It peeps from yonder cottage door—
The weary laborer to greet—
When the rough tolls of day are o'er!
Sad is the soul that does not know
The blessings that the beams impart,
The cheerful hopes and joys that flow,
And lighten up the heaviest heart
Around the light at home.

LETTER FROM DR. DRAKE.

UNIFORMITY IN WORSHIP.

Mr. Editor: Is the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, connectional, or is it congregational? I ask the question, not because there is any doubt on the subject, but simply to bring the matter before the minds of your readers. It is evidently not only connectional, but the union is rather more close than that of any Protestant Church in the land. The Presbyterian and Protestant Episcopal Churches are connectional to some extent: the Baptist and Congregational Churches have no authoritative bond of union. I do not propose to discuss the expediency, effectiveness, and safety of the connectional principle at the present time. I assume that as a foregone conclusion: every Methodist has given his sanction to it in voluntarily entering the Church. It would seem to me that an individual or family might, with as much reason, isolate himself or itself from the state or nation in which he lives, as an individual congregation could declare itself independent of the Christian brotherhood of like faith. Certainly this was not the apostolic model.

The subject which I propose to discuss at present is the sacrifices and duties of those who enjoy the benefits of a connectional union. I say sacrifices, for to give up our predilections or natural rights on any subject, is, to some extent, a sacrifice. But these sacrifices must ever be made in all associations for mutual protection or improvement, civil or ecclesiastical. Take an illustration from military laws. Who does not see that to become effective, for the purposes of the organization, a giving up of natural rights, to a great extent, and implicit submission to general laws, whether tasteful or distasteful, is absolutely necessary? If one regiment or company should change its tactics to suit its taste or to become more modern, who does not see that in a general battle such change might breed confusion that would result in the loss of the day? The same is true, to some extent, of family or school government. To be effective, it should be uniform—general.

I have no hesitation in believing that the principle applies with great force to a connectional Church. In our own Church, for instance, every member has voluntarily surrendered his natural rights (if he had any in the premises) to prescribed systems of doctrines, forms of worship, usages, or ceremonies even of the pettiest character. These have been committed to the General Conference as the safest depository, and that they may be general, not local. How important is this to a minister eligible to every portion of the work, and liable at any time, without his choice, to be stationed any where. After he has made this sacrifice of his own choice of place, put himself at the absolute disposal of the appointing power, as he thinks for the general good, has he not a right to expect a homogeneous Church? Shall he, after submitting to go where he had no inclination, simply for the general good, find a single congregation, or his immediate predecessor, and he perhaps only a youth, has taken the liberty, in the exercise of what they claim as their natural rights, so to change the mode of divine service or other usages as seriously to interfere with his comfort, or perhaps violate his conscience? In submitting to the itinerant ministry, he has agreed to obey the rules of the General Conference, not to mend but keep them; but he never agreed to submit to the whims of individual congregations or individual preachers. Not to submit to such innovations is, in many instances, to create serious prejudice against himself, or to raise parties in the Church, so baneful to the prosperity of the cause. Is this justice to the preachers in our connectional Church? Is it not a flagrant violation of vested rights? Does it not greatly impede the unity of the spirit and the bonds of peace? I have seen two of our bishops put to the blush in conducting divine service in a church not a thousand miles from here by the choir persisting in its own plans, singing without lining, while the venerable man of God attempted to pursue our time-honored custom of lining the hymn. I have seen a choir take their seats in the usual place, sing a voluntary with marked vim and gusto, but when the minister rose to open the service, simply because they knew he would persist in what he considered the prescribed plan of conducting it, utterly refuse to raise the tune, and when raised by the preacher, neglect to sing. Can such contrarieties promote love and unity? And who is the offending party? Certainly he who introduces the innovation. I do not pretend to say that our customs and ceremonials are perfect and incapable of beneficial change; but who shall be the judge what the changes shall be? Most certainly the General Conference has the authority; no one else. No individual Church or preacher, whether wise or otherwise.

I have already intimated that the power to make changes was safest in the hands of the General Conference. That body is usually composed of grave ministers of the gospel, who have made these very subjects the study of their lives. Their observation, too, has been upon a wider field than most others. The thing, too, is done after full deliberation and interchange of opinion, and carried by a majority. In some instances changes are introduced by small minorities or individual preachers, and they not the wisest or most religious of the congregation. I have known a Church nearly destroyed and crippled for years in its moral influence by the determination of a small fraction to change the mode of seating the Church. The first organ introduced into the Church, South, to my knowledge, was done by a very small clique of young members of the Church, some of them not professing conversion, and a few outsiders. This, by many, is considered a grave innovation. It was foisted on the Church contrary to the known views of nearly all the older ministers of that portion of the country, including the Presiding Elder of the district. Can that be right in a connectional Church?

If changes must be made, let them be made legitimately. Let those who desire them petition the properly constituted authority of the Church, and lay their reasons before that tribunal. Every member of the Church has a right to do that; but most certainly individual congregations or preachers have no right to introduce changes upon their own authority. Let it not be said that these are little things and unworthy of the notice of a great mind. Then the innovator should be above making a difficulty about such small matters. They may be small in themselves, but in aggregation they are large. A grain of sand is small, but the sand on the sea shore is a mighty mass. The letting out of waters at first may be by drops; it soon becomes a sluice. Most of the innovations which have run down many of the Churches in spirituality have been introduced by individual taste; for some seem to think that a proper ground of change. They consult their taste in the matter of Church services as they would in the cut of their coat, and with many the latest fashion is always preferred. Good men often give way to avoid difficulty, and a half dozen presuming reformers will overrule a hundred grave Christians. The usage once established, to attempt its removal has the appearance of innovation and he who does it is cried out against as a disturber of the peace of the Church. New elements are introduced into the Church, the old fogies laid aside, neglected, often trampled upon. What a spectacle a connectional Church will make, permitting each congregation to indulge its own fancies about all the adjuncts of divine worship. What a medley! Now, the Church is decked out in all the paraphernalia of the most fashionable and modern innovations. An organ, choir, priestly robes, sermon read, church pewed—the poor nowhere—the minister late from the theological seminary. But the very next church you enter the organ is repudiated. Then the pews, but the men and women must sit promiscuously. Now they give out the hymn as they sing it; then they omit it. Now they stand when they sing, kneel when they pray; then they sit all the time. Now they pronounce the benediction standing, then kneeling; and so on to the end of a long chapter. A minister will have to be quite expert who can suddenly adjust himself to such a variety in his frequent changes. I knew the chairman of the committee on divine service, at one of our Conferences, feel it to be his duty to repeat quite a long programme to inform the preachers how to conduct divine service at that place. It puts me in mind of the neophite of a certain Church who, anxious to get his lesson against the public exhibition, said to his initiated friend, "See here, please show me the place where the people jaw back to the preacher."

"Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity! It is like the precious ointment upon the head, that ran down upon the beard, even Aaron's beard: that went down to the skirts of his garments." "One hope, one heart, one mind, one voice, 'tis heaven on earth begun." For a Christian minister or Christian layman, when he enters the house of God belonging to his own denomination, to know how to behave himself—to know where to sit, when to stand, when to kneel, when to respond, without fearing a mistake—how delightful. He does not say as Abraham in Gerar, "Surely God is not in this place;" but, like Jacob in the wilderness, he will say, "This is God's house and the gate of heaven." At once he will feel that he is not a "stranger and foreigner," but a "fellow citizen of the saints." How much evil that feeling might prevent; how much good it might do!

There is a class of ministers in the Church, and that perhaps not a small one, who could not conscientiously be pastor of a Church, where some of the innovations have been inaugurated. What are they to do? Many of them are not men of strife—do not feel that they are called to be reformers. They wish earnestly to have "peace and truth" in their declining days. Their mission is not entirely out—they still desire to work a little; but field after field is fenced out from them—fields, too, which their own valor won. The movers in this cause are oftentimes their sons in the gospel. If their sighs do not come into the ears of the Lord of Sabbaoth, surely they ought to be heeded by the children of their faith and prayer. If, when driven from the last field, they should be found sitting solitary in the wilderness, and the Master should demand of them, "Elijah, what doest thou here?" They may say, "Lord, we have been very jealous for thy Church."

In conclusion, permit me earnestly to entreat all the members of the Church, South, to stop this unauthorized innovation. Do not trample under foot the vested rights of others. If changes should be made, seek them through the legitimate chanels.

TO W. P. BARTON.

Dear Brother: It seems that my review and correction of the Minutes, as published by the committee, has touched you in a tender point. Hence, your answer is: "A Member is out of humor; has turned censor; had better read 13th chapter of I Cor., as it would much improve his religious feelings."

Just allow me to say, that I was in perfect good humor when I wrote that article—had a laugh or two over it with a venerable member of our Conference while writing it. It is wondrous strange to me that some persons always suppose a man to be mad if he speaks the truth without gloss, or takes it on himself to correct errors or mistakes. "I am not mad most noble" brother.

It was certainly understood that the Minutes should and would be correct; yet you say it was not "intended" to be a correct copy of the journals. It certainly was, so far as they pretend to contain facts, names, etc. I contend that there are errors in the Minutes as published by you; and have shown at least eight.

You ask: "Has a member the right to exercise the office of censor till it is certain the document has a public character?" I ask, What does it take to give a document a public character? I think when it is printed and sent out by mail to a hundred or more persons, and an urgent appeal made through a public journal for a hundred or more preachers to send in their orders for the document, it has a public character; and I or any one else has the right to notice its errors or mistakes. Or do you want the Conference to vote for its circulation? I fear for it.

You say that certain errors "resulted from having to run over 42 pages of manuscript for a name, all in four evenings." If you had watched you might have seen all the names omitted. Was it absolutely necessary to do the work in four nights? Who decreed it? No, my brother, we wanted a correct document, if it had required four months to prepare and bring it out. And you ought not to have published it until you knew it was correct.

"The report on education was never seen by me." It was only a few hours travel by mail to bro. Harris', and it could have been easily obtained.

"We regret the thrust at our present and former treasurers." Missionary, you mean. Well may you regret that it was necessary to call their attention to some facts. They have done business too loosely, and feelings and suspicions against the preachers have been created. We must suffer on from year to year, but their delinquencies must not be exposed.

"Their characters are above suspicion." I have never charged that they embezzled; but I do say that they have not published a correct report of moneys and objects for which given, and life members reported, for three or more years past.

But "either of them would have explained any seeming inaccuracy in their reports, if a member had asked them?" Explained! Where? and to whom? Their reports were published in the papers and annual report of the parent society. Would they publish their explanations thus? What good would explanations do to a private individual, when a hundred persons on a circuit read only the report as published. But while a treasurer allows himself to receive reports of money which he notes simply on a slip of paper, which he puts into his vest pocket, we may not expect a correct report. This was done at the last Conference.

The object of my first communication was to correct the errors of your publication—not to quarrel with you. Why did you not reply to bro. McTyeire and Dr. Drake? Ah!

A MEMBER.

P. S. If you will examine the Discipline you will learn where your (our) constitution is.

PIETY OF THE AGED.

Pliny writes of the crocodile, that she grows to her last day; so aged saints grow rich in spiritual experience to the last. An old Christian being once asked if he grew in goodness, answered, "Yea, doubtless I do, for God hath said, 'The righteous shall flourish like the palm-tree. (Now the palm-tree never loseth its fruit, says Pliny.) He shall grow like the cedar in Lebanon.' Those that be planted in the house of the Lord, shall flourish in the courts of our God: they shall bring forth fruit in old age, they shall be fat and flourishing.'" Psalm xcii. 12, 13.

LITTLE CHILDREN.

Whoever takes a little child into his love, may have a very roomy heart, but that child will fill it all. The children that are in the world keep us from growing old and cold; they cling to our garments with their little hands, and impede our progress to petrifaction; they win us back with their pleading eyes from cruel care; they never encumber us at all. A poor old couple, with no one to love and to love them, is a most pitiable picture; but a hovel with a small face to fill a broken pane, here and there, as the stranger goes by, is robbed of half its desolateness.

It is easier to borrow trouble than money.

WOMAN'S RIGHTS.

CHARACTERS.

Mr. Hanly, a merchant.
Mrs. Hanly, his wife.
Myrtilla, her sister.
Bridget, the cook.
Kitty, the chamber-maid.

SCENE I.—THE PARLOR.

Mrs. Hanly, and Myrtilla.

Mrs. Hanly. I am resolved, Myrtilla! This last outrage has determined me, and I henceforth revoke the promise, that in my folly once made, to serve, to honor, and obey. Out on me for a traitor to my sex!

Myrtilla. The traitors far exceeded the loyal; and I, you know, am soon to increase the number.

Mrs. H. You surely will not make any such promise?

Myr. I am no wiser than the rest of woman kind.

Mrs. H. Profit by my experience, and renounce the yoke before it is imposed.

Myr. My word is given, and this very moment, as you know, my future is expected.—Shall I renounce him?

Mrs. H. Better so than wear his chain. I tell you, sister, matrimony is a balance, and the weight is ever in one scale.

Myr. What matters it which scale is highest?

Mrs. H. Everything. The moment you ascend, you lose your foothold, and must swing as the greater weight commands.

Myr. Sister, I pray you to enumerate a few of the ills I may expect; nay, tell me some of those that you endure. The world supposes you a favored wife, and named but to be envied.

Mrs. H. I am married; and this world expresses all a noble mind abhors. Since the world began, woman has been a slave.

Myr. If this be true, usage would seem to indicate that He who made us intended we should serve.

Mrs. H. He made us equal; and an eternity of usurpation can not alter the decree.

Myr. I think it would annul it most effectually. But to the point. You just now complained of outrage. May I ask in what the wrong consisted?

Mrs. H. I wanted money, and my lord told me I could not have it.

Myr. Well, spoke he not the truth?

Mrs. H. The truth, Myrtilla! You will drive me mad! 'Tis bad enough to be compelled to ask my lord; 'tis infamous to be refused.

Myr. I do not see it thus. If I should ask another, be he lord or serf, for what he has not, his refusal is a necessity that would not move my wrath, however it might disappoint me.

Mrs. H. I could shake you, Myrtle, for your tameness! If that sex usurps the purse and holds it, 'tis but just that we should have all we demand, and at the instant, too.

Myr. We, then, should be the tyrants. I expect to marry a husband, not a purse; and, if I manage him aright, I have no fear but all I need will be supplied.

Mrs. H. O, yes! I think I see you now informing him of what he ought to have seen—that you are not dressed befitting your condition, and he must not be offended if you say, that you have worn out all the wardrobe you brought with you from your father's, and are sorry, extremely sorry, to be obliged to say that you must look to him for a new outfit!—O, 'tis glorious to kneel thus in the dust!

Myr. If I dress as well as he does, and have a reasonable share of what he may possess—

Mrs. H. You will never know the fact. He is the judge, and you must take the pittance he allows inferior in this to the drudge who knows her wages, and with independent face can claim her pay.

Myr. You go upon the ground that every husband is a tyrant and unjust. I am inclined to think the husbands I have seen have given too freely, and the ruin of too many has been hastened by the lavish bounty of the lord who could not say his lady nay.

Mrs. H. There comes my precious keeper! I will propose a plan at once to set me free.

Enter Mr. Hanly.

Mr. Hanly. Good evening, wife! and you, Myrtilla! How do you bear the approach of the dread hour that will suffuse the eye with tears of joy or sorrow?—which, 'tis hard to say.

Mrs. H. I have been warning her of her danger; but, like a bird beneath the serpent's charm, she waits her willing doom.

Mr. H. It is not well to alarm her, when the coure before her is so bright and free.

Mrs. H. Free! Call you it freedom to hold nothing, have nothing, and what you humbly ask to be refused? O, would I were a man!

Mr. H. That might involve the necessity of my becoming a woman.

Mrs. H. Why so?

Mr. H. I did not know you wished for a divorce—the natural consequence, if one alone should change.

Myr. Better stay as you are, and let the wife and husband change their duties. My sister to the business may attend, and her liege lord may govern here at home.

Mr. H. Done! I will surrender on the moment, and only regret the change can't be complete.

Mrs. H. Agreed! You hear, Myrtilla, he agrees to let me have full swing abroad, while he remains at home, to sew, or cook, or entertain the callers with an account of his experience in the kitchen, or perhaps with a hash of sentiment, which on such occasions, always flows from the heart, you know.

Myr. I hear, and I will judge between you; for on your experiment may hang my destiny. I pray you to begin this morning; for my hour of grace is nearly spent, and I would not plunge in the dark.

Mr. H. Come on! Here is the trunk, the bank-book, cash-book, notes, and all. Take them, and give me all the ensigns of your office—the keys, the cook-book, and the broom. O, what a king—a queen—I am already!

Mrs. H. You soon will feel the chain that I have worn so long. While I am dressing for the store, you may prepare a note, informing all the clerks that I am master there.

Mr. H. I will do so; but, lest you should repent too soon, I'll hint that I am ill; and you can then retreat, if you desire, and feel no shame or mortification.

Mrs. H. Word it as you please. I have no fear of a relapse, and will contrive to make perpetual your sudden illness.

Mr. H. Be it so. Let us lose no time.

(Mrs. Hanly and Myrtilla go out.)

Mr. H. (Writing and talking.) Well, I shall have a day of rest, at last. Since the banks refused to discount, I have had no peace. To-day my payments are heavier than usual, and I have not slept a whit. If Wife does not get cured of any wish to change, she must be more than my equal. (Folding his billet as she returns.) There, wife! That document will make you head of the concern. Now manage carefully.

Mrs. H. Never fear. Women are to cautious, and never speculate.

Mr. H. And always fail, I believe.

Mrs. H. I'll have some pocket-money, at any rate; and you shall never ask me twice for what you want. I will be a model husband.

Mr. H. More likely you will make me turn my coat twice. Business will make you economical.

Mrs. H. It shall not make me mean. I feel more concern on your account. You never did a thing in the house.

Mr. H. No matter; there is no mystery in keeping house. I'd teach it to an ape in half a day.

Mrs. H. I dare say the ape would soon know as much as his teacher. But I am wasting time. Good morning. You will not see me again till dinner; and then I shall expect a banquet.

Mr. H. You shall have one worthy of the occasion. Good-by. Success to you!

Mrs. H. I shall no doubt obtain it. (She goes out.)

Enter the Cook.

Mr. H. Well, Bridget, what would you?

Bridget. Please, sir, madam says I must look to yourself for the dinner.

Mr. H. What is there in the house?

Brid. Nothing in the wide world but the praties and ingyuns.

Mr. H. What else do we need, Bridget?

Brid. Mate, sir, and fish, or both, as it may plase.

Mr. H. I'll have a chowder, Bridget. Mrs. Manly would never let me have my favorite dish; and, now I am mistress, the inauguration dinner shall be chowder. Can you make a chowder, Bridget?

Brid. Aw, yis, sir. Do you think the likes of me can't make that same?

Mr. H. How do you begin? What fish do you prefer?

Brid. Fish, is it? Sure, there's nothing equal to the sahlt fish taken fresh from the wather, already suzaned, as it always is.

Mr. H. What?

Brid. The sahlt fish for me! It has no innards, you know, and needs no claning.

Mr. H. Bridget, you don't know what a chowder is!

Brid. It's the first time a gentleman ever towld Bridget Killmallybone that she didn't know her business! It is not I will put up with the insult from a miserable, hen-pecked, meddlesome, impartinent——.

Mr. H. That will do, Bridget! You may pack up and be gone.

Brid. Be gone is it, indade? It's not I will stay in your dirty presence another blessed minute! You may make your own chowther, and ate it, too, for all Bridget Killmallybone! (Putting her hands on her hips, insultingly.) I'll thank you for my wuges!

Mr. H. Wages! What is due?

Brid. Ten weeks, come Saturday.

Mr. H. (Aside.) Twenty dollars! I have not ten in my pocket, and wife has carried off the trunk. Bridget, you must wait till Mrs. Manly comes home, or call to-morrow.

Brid. I want me money now!

Mr. H. Call Miss Myrtilla.

Brid. Do your own culding! I am no longer your servant.

Mr. H. This is too bad! (He goes out to call Myrtilla.)

Brid. Sure, here is a work-box. That will fit me pocket like a glove. (She pockets it.) When a poor gairl is abused and chated as I have been, it is fair to defind herself.

Enter Ma. Hanly.

Mr. Hanly. There is your money. I have borrowed it. Begone!

Brid. It's not Bridget Killmallybone will hurry for the likes of you! I want my chist, 'twill not be safe to lave it in such kaping.

Mr. H. Well, take it, and leave the house this instant!

Brid. Sure, and I can not carry that same alone! If you will call the omnibus, and pay for the ticket, I will go; and, sure, no gentilman will refuse a ticket to a poor gairl!

Mr. H. There's a ticket. Stop that omnibus, and go to——.

Brid. It's not I will travel that road yet! Chowther, is it? (She goes out.)

Mr. H. Well, this is a bruvo beginiag!—No cook! Then I must call the chambermaid. (He calls at the door.) Kitty! Kitty! (Enter Kitty.) Kitty, I have dismissed bridget, and you must take her place to-day, and do her work.

Kitty. It is not I could cook the asiest dish in the cook-book. And if I could, who would make the beds, and swape the room, and dust the things, and——.

Mr. H. You can do it for one day, till I get a cook.

Kitty. It is not the likes of me will do another girl's work! You may get a chambermaid, too, while you are about it. I have engaged to go with Bridget, and only wait for me wages.

Mrs. H. How much is due you?

Kitty. Ten weeks, at nine shillings a week.

Mr. H. I will give you an order on my store.

Kitty. I want no orthers—the money is what I want; and you may give me it in gold, if you plase, as the law requires, for I can't rade the dirty bills.

Mr. H. Get, out! Leave the house, and come to-morrow.

Kitty. (She sits down on an ottoman, with determination.) It's here I'll sit till I am paid!—Sure, no genthilman will drive a poor gairl into the street, and not pay her her hard arnings!

Mr. H. Myrtilla! Myrtilla! (He goes out to find her.)

Kitty. Sure, it will be a week or more that I shall be seeking another place, and paying me board. Here is a gold pencil-case and spectacles. Sure, a poor gairl can not be blamed, if she pertects herself when she is wronged.—(She puts them in her pocket.)

Mr. H. (Entering with Myrtilla.) There is your money. Now, leave the house this instant, or I will have an officer here!

Kitty. Sure, it is that nades. the officer!—Hard times, if a pacible gairl must be abused in this manner? (She goes out very slowly.) I'll never do another gairl's work—not I!

Mr. H. Well, Myrtilla, if you had not happened to have the money, I should have been turned away by my own servants. A pretty pickle we are in! No servants, and no dinner!

Myrtilla. Don't be concerned. We will have a cup of tea for dinner, and I can make the beds. But what is this? Sister returned!—Pray what can be the matter now?

Enter Mrs. Hanly.

Mrs. Hanly. Well, here I am! (She plumps down on the ottoman the girl has just left.)

Mr. H. I am glad you have come, wife! I want some money sadly.

Mrs. H. You may want, for all me! Money, huh!

Mr. H. But I must have it; and I have nobody to look to but yourself. Now you are lord of the treasury, we shall expect to see some liberality. I tell you I must have five-and-thirty dollars!

Mrs. H. I tell you you shall not have a cent! O, dear! O, dear!

Myr. What is the matter? Has any accident disturbed you?

Mrs. H. Accident! Husband, go this instant to the store!

Mr. H. What is the matter, pray?

Mrs. H. Matter, bah! What is n't the matter? I had hardly entered the counting-room, before the clerk laid before me half a dozen bank notices of notes to be paid to-day!

Mr. H. Well, you prepared for them, of course?

Mrs. H. Prepared with a vengeance! How did you prepare for them?

Mr. H. As you did for the dinner, I suppose. What did you tell him?

Mrs. H. To go and pay them. He asked for the money, and expected me to furnish it. There was not a hundred dollars in the trunk. He then looked at the bank-book, and said you had overdrawn. I told him to let the banks wait. He said it would ruin your credit, and I had better borrow the money.

Mr. H. Well, you borrowed it, of course?

Mrs. H. Of course, I didn't! Borrow!—Whom could I borrow five thousand dollars of? I never saw so much!

Mr. H. We have to pay as much every day, Mrs. H. What do you pay with?

Mr. H. Money.

Mrs. H. Money! Where do you get it?—Do you beg, borrow, or steal it? I saw no money in the drawer, or trunk, or safe.

Mr. H. You should have borrowed a check.

Mrs. H. I got one without borrowing—an effectual check. Good Gracious, Hanly! tell me if this is the sort of life you lead?

Mr. H. You have a very fair specimen of it since the banks have been so tight.

Mrs. H. Bridget! Bridget!

Mr. H. Bridget has walked out.

Mrs. H. Walked out! What! in the forenoon? Kitty! Kitty! (Calling.)

Mr. H. Kitty has walked out, too.

Mrs. H. What do you mean? Why did you allow it? Pretty doings!

Mr. H. I proposed it.

Mrs. H. Proposed it! Hanly, what do you mean?

Mr. H. I mean that your two girls have dismissed themselves or me. I am not sure which way it stands.

Mrs. H. Then, what has become of the dinner?

Mr. H. Nothing: we had none to become of.

Mrs. H. Husband, you know no more about housekeeping——.

Mr. H. Than you do about storekeeping.

Mrs. H. Provoking! Myrtilla, you must think us a pretty pair of fools.

Myr. Very well matched, I must acknowledge. But, sister, I am not surprised at the result of your experiment. The hen was never made to swim.

(Mr. and Mrs. Hanly look each other in the face, at first with determination; but at last they relax, and burst into laughter.)

Mrs. H. You had better run to the store.

Mr. H. You know I am very ill of an illness you pronounced perpetual! How can I venture out?

Mrs. H. Begone, or I will be the death of you!

Mr. H. I will go; but, first, you will please to pay me "me wages."

Mrs. H. Put mine against yours, and we pass receipts.

Mr. H. Agreed! Good-by to the [illegible] kitchen!

Mrs. H. Good-by to the empty safe! When I complain again——. What will you have for dinner?

Mr. H. I must have a chowder; and Myrtilla must tell you why, while I run to the store and get an appetite. "A chowther, is it?"

A HINT FOR THE LADIES.

An exchange paper has a bit of advice to young ladies, setting forth how they may know whether a young gallant is really "courting" them, or only paying them polite attentions. The confounding the one with the other has been the source of very much trouble.

A young man admires a very pretty girl and must manifest it. He can't help doing so, for the life of him. The young lady has a tender heart, reaching out like tendrils for something to cling to. She sees the admiration; is flattered; begins soon to love; expects some tender avowal; and perhaps gets so far as to decide that she will choose a "white silk under that gauze, etc." at the very moment that the gallant she half loves is popping the question to another damsel ten miles off.

Now the difficulty lies in not understanding the difference between "polite attention" and the tender manifestations of love. Admiring a woman and wishing to make a wife of her are not always the same thing, and therefore it is necessary that the damsel should be on the alert to discover to which class the attentions paid her by fashionable young men be.

First, then, if a young man greets you in loud, free and hearty tones; if he knows precisely where to put his hands; stares you straight in the eyes; if he eats heartily in your presence; if he fails to talk very kindly to your mother; if, in short, he sneezes when you are singing, criticises your curls, and fails to be foolish every hour, then don't fall in love with him for the world. He only admires you, let him say what he will to the contrary.

On the other hand, if he is merry with everybody else, and quiet with you; if he be anxious to see your dear person wrapped up when you go out into the cold; if he talks very low, and never looks you steadily in the eye. If he romps with your sister, sighs like a pair of bellows, looks solemn when you are addressed by another gentleman, and in fact is the most still, awkward, stupid, yet envious of all your male friends, you may go ahead, and make the poor fellow happy.

Young ladies! keep your hearts in a case of good leather, or some other tough substance, until the right one is found without a doubt, after which you can go on and love, court and be married.

We consider this advice no sensible, that although it is open to the charge of bluntness, we have no hesitation in pressing it upon the attention of our lady readers.

WALKING INDICATIVE OF CHARACTER.

Fowler says: A short and quick step indicates a brisk and active, but rather contracted mind, whereas those who take long steps generally have long heads. Those who slowly draw their heels, drag and drawl in every [illegible] while those who walk with a springing, elastic step, abound in mental grasp and energy. Those whose walk is mincing, affected, and artificial, rarely, if ever, accomplish much; whereas those who walk carelessly, that is, [illegible] are just what they appear to be, and put on nothing for outside show. Those who in walking, roll from side to side, lack directness of character, and side every way, according to circumstances. In short, every individual has his own peculiar mode of moving, which generally accords with his mental character, so that, so far as you can see such modes, you can decipher such outline of character.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, MAY 7, 1858.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

April 24, 1858.

The Ingomar lost four hours by fog on Thursday morning, just below Baton Rouge. But for that detention we should have waked up to-morrow morning in Memphis, and there kept our whole Sabbath. As it is, we hope to be off the good boat by breakfast or very soon thereafter, distributing ourselves among the Churches.

Levees are all the talk. The question all absorbing and oft recurring, as we make landings, is not How's your health, or your crop, or your politics, but—"How's your levees?" The Mississippi is booming high and these artificial defenses against its encroachments have given way in some places; in others, the waves of a steamboat have washed over them. Plantations, well defended in front, shew a sheet of backwater that will pass off too late for planting cotton, this season.

We have on board a few men hunting "places;" they want rich land—have come here to find it; but the prospect of overflows rather dampens their ardor—the "bottom fever", as it is called. Napoleon, a small town at the mouth of the Arkansas river, was enjoying extensive water privileges as we passed it to-day. A small strip of dry ground near the bank reminded me of two lines of a hymn—

"Upon a narrow neck of land—
'Twixt two unbounded seas I stand."

So stands the brave town of Napoleon—water before and water behind, but not waterproof, for some of the houses have three feet of water "in the hold," as a sailor would say. Here that long muddy stream, the Arkansas, empties its muddy tribute into the Mississippi. One good looking building appears, the marine hospital. Numerous flatboats and five stern-wheel steamers attested its trade. Just opposite is a settlement, called Prentiss, trying to be a town—the county site of Bolivar, Mi., where we took on several "hands," which a passenger suggested had been driven out by the freshet and were going to be hired.

The waters are receding, but not without benefit to some, wide as the disaster has been to others. Although the unprecedented flood which is now submerging such a vast extent of country is destined to effect materially the prosperity and interests of those upon whom the calamity has fallen, yet its results will strengthen the maxim, that there is "no bitter unsweetened by its sweets." There have been millions of dollars' worth of timber—much of which has been cut for several years—lying in the swamps, waiting for water to float it ont.—This rise has afforded an opportunity to bring into market that mine of wealth; thus causing that hardy, industrious class of people, known as professional raftsmen, to rejoice at an interposition of Providence which is to them really a [illegible], and of immense value and convenience to the countries supplied with lumber through this channel. We have been informed by persons familiar with the quantities of timber now out in the swamps of the Yazoo alone and its tributaries, that, at a low estimate, five million dollars' worth will be saved and brought into market by this rise in the river.

To-day I heard a talk between a river bottom land hunter and a river bottom land owner, on this wise: "I work fifty hands—had a sorry crop years—yet I have just been down to New Orleans and drew from my commission merchants a trifle over $20,000, as proceeds of my cotton." To this the other, who plants in North Alabama, compared a note which did not abate his purpose of settling in this fist. His hands were eighty, acres planted in proportion, and he hardly cleared $10,000.

These acres sell like town lots. An old gentleman, who left our boat just below Lake Providence, told me his neighbor sold out last year for $22 per acre—and when he got $100 he would sell too, and was rather afraid somebody would offer it! There he was living and had lived for twenty-seven years (he numbered it by crops, saying I have made so many crops) without preaching or church—laying up treasure on the same level with mud turtles and ground squirrels. He took my suggestion kindly, that he was making a hard time of it to die and leave all. On my turning away said to a friend, "Reckon that fellow is a bishop," adding, he had seen a bishop once who was a grum old fellow.

Among interesting traveling companions we have Mrs. Gaines. She takes it bravely, the loss of her case before the U. S. District Court. Of course it will be taken up by appeal to the Supreme Court, where she is sanguine of success. She sues for her estate of millions, and the end is nigh. How surprised was I too see this lady! Instead of a person shrivelled with age and haggard with care and soured by long and vexatious lawing, I see a small lady elastic in her step, not moving or seeming like one over thirty-five years of age, elegant in manners, lively and witty in conversation and with as ringing a laugh as ever gladdened the heart.—She is a prodigy of energy and intellect. None of the lawyers that have won fame in searching out, disentangling and arguing the celebrated case now in litigation for twenty-five years, understand its points more thoroughly than herself. The various rulings and decisions, the evidence—all, are at her finger's end. She is eloquent on her rights and her wrongs. Having spent a fortune already on it, she is devising means to carry up her final appeal.—This will cost thousands. A heavy record and long bill of costs is to be paid for. To do this, she contemplates making an appeal to American women to aid her, or to arrange a course of lectures reciting a story thrilling as tragedy, or fascinating as a book. Either of the two last would succeed triumphantly and speedily.

[illegible] of widows and high water, reminds me [illegible] added to our list of passengers. She had started on a tour to Europe. Her plantation is on the river, upon the proceeds of which she is to draw for the expenses of the trip. "My, mercy, me!" exclaimed Madame, as she looked out on the banks ready to spill out and run over. And she turned back, after navigating this inland sea for a few hundred miles. So it is: a calamity to a cotton stalk here, is felt in the saloons of Paris and among the cabmen of Naples.

To-day a stout gentleman, fully in mid-age, got on board below the line of Coahoma county, in mud boots and felt hat. "Major," answered the usual queries about levees and was soon deep into raising pigs, the possibilities of clover in this climate, etc., throwing in a little "swearing" now and then: a hearty, democratic looking citizen, who had been taking a spring view of his possessions and pitching the crop. I learned, without having suspected it in the least, that he was no less a personage than a late candidate for the Vice Presidency of this great nation—Major Andrew Jackson Donelson.

Having paid my passage, in money current with the merchant, I can say the Ingomar is a boat, in all her accommodations, surpassed by none I have traveled on. The tables are spread about the spacious cabin and served on the restaurant principle. You mess with your friends, call for what you want, and take your time, within the margin of two hours, for breakfast and dinner.

The impression left by this letter would be very incorrect and incomplete, did I not state that among all this earthy, cottony, and money and table talk, we have some excellent Christian company, whose society is as genial as it is accessible. Bros. Marshall, Harp, Ivey, and Williamson, with Mrs. M. and A. and other ladies, making the voyage anything but tedious.

I must throw out this letter at Helena and we are now touching that wharf. Yours,

H. N. M.

Memphis, April, 26.

I find the chief topic here, Religion. Among the first placards that met my eye was—"A Union Prayer Meeting, at Odd Fellows' Hall, 4 P. M., every day: Come."

On Sabbath morning I had the pleasure of hearing an excellent and highly evangelical sermon by Rev. W. H. Seat, of Texas, in Wesley Chapel. This is chief synagogue of Memphis Methodists. It is a large and well-looking temple, but deficient in lights and singing. Yet there is gas, plenty of it; and there are voices, plenty of them. They only need conducting into their places, by proper pipes. Besides Wesley, under the pastoral care of Rev. J. T. Collins, there are Asbury Chapel, where a Church, large and spiritual is gathered and ministered to, and two smaller ones.

Spending a night at the delightful suburban home of my confrere, Rev. S. Watson, I had an appointment to preach at one of these; but it rained and thundered.

Rev. S. D. Baldwin—Armageddon and Dominion B.—is and has been preaching here with great acceptability and results. About forty souls have been converted and added to the Wesley Chapel charge the last week and an equal number to the other Churches.

Yesterday afternoon, I stepped into the Cumberland Presbyterian Chapel and found a large and serious assembly. Prayer meeting was led by a lay brother and well led. A committee from several churches has the direction of worship. Here they hold it. A Presbyterian brother, as I said a layman, conducted the services, in turn. Though a stranger there, how refreshing to my soul were these hearty, voluntary services. The leader was giving out, as I entered, that delightful hymn—

"Guide me, O thou great Jehovah!
Pilgrim through this barren land,
I am weak, but thou art mighty,
Hold me with thy powerful hand:
Bread of heaven!
Feed me, till I want no more."

All the people lifted their voices in praise and kneeled in prayer. May the time come, when in any place upon which a stranger falls, he can go to a prayer meeting! Things go on earnestly, but quietly: they move at a rate at which they can keep moving year after year. There is no natural limitation, therefore, to the movement.

Memphis: I have long wished for a personal inspection of this hill and the city set on it.—Its growth, since 1840, has been at prodigious strides. My friend, Miles Owen, Esq., took me over and around the city yesterday forenoon, in a ride of two or three hours. There is room outside of the town, if not in its corporate limits, for spacious grounds and roomy residences.—To the distance of three miles are cottages and villas—"homes" in every aspect of beauty and comfort. Instead of the blue grass grows the clover. Oak trees make the forests. The pine is nursed in their gardens, like a hot-plant, and a lady showed incredulity at my report that in Louisiana we make fence rails out of magnolias. Elmwood Cemetery, a forty-two acre lot, a mile or two from town, has received only a few instalments of mortal dust. There are buried my friends Revs. E. R. Porter and W. C. Robb. Soon here, as elsewhere, the necropolis will number more than the living city.

The navy yard has been given over by the U. S. government to the city. It lies where Wolf river empties into the Mississippi and has large buildings. A free school was emptying a living, laughing current of hopeful humanity from the main building, as I passed. Happy commutation—a free school in the place of an armory and such like.

Three railroads bring their tribute here daily: one (that connecting with Charleston, S. C.) finished; the others every day reach out further, southward and northward.

The papers to-day announce that the damage sustained by this road, on account of the late heavy rains, is so far repaired as to enable the trains to run through from this city to Stevenson regularly, with only a half hour's delay at Tuscumbia. The gap at Tuscumbia will be closed up by Wednesday at farthest, and the trips continue as before.

Arrangements have been made by Col. Samuel Tate, the President of the Memphis and Charleston Railroad Company, who has just returned from N. Orleans, by which the Jackson railroad is made the main stem of a through route by several diverging lines, upon each of which through tickets are to be had here.

The arrangements include the Jackon company for the use of their road to Jackson and Canton; the Southern company, whose road crosses the Jackson road at Jackson and extends to Vicksburg; the Mississippi Central road, which is completed to Goodman, in Mississippi, from which place stages will transport passengers over the unfinished road eighty-two miles to Water Valley on the upper section, and thence the railroad transportation will continue to the junction with the Charleston and Memphis road, which is within three hours of Memphis northwardly, and eastwardly extends to Charleston, Savannah, and all the southern Atlantic cities; and by the East Tennessee and Virginia road directly to the Virginia Springs, Washington City, Baltimore and the northern Atlantic cities.

Passengers wishing to avoid the staging can go by railroad to Vicksburg, and thence by steamer to Memphis, and take the railroad thence; or, they may take the packet directly to Memphis, and the railroad thence. On the East Tennessee railroad, the gap for staging was reduced about the middle of this month to only thirteen miles, and the cars will run without interruption all the way, by the 1st of May. Passengers may thus obtain through tickets via the packet line and Memphis, via the Jackson railroad, Vicksburg and Memphis, or via the Jackson road, the Mississippi Central and Grand Junction to the Memphis and Charleston railroad, and via that road on any preferred route, to any of the principal places of the North and East.

The schedule time by the last named route, via the Jackson road and the Mississippi Central, is to be four days and a half to New York; and the parties have offered to contract for the delivery of the great northern mail within that time. This includes eighty-two miles of staging in Mississippi. The prospects for the completion of the railroad on that line are very encouraging. The whole of the track has been graded, and iron provided for a considerable portion. And it is confidently believed that the contract will be made, in which event the entire road will be ready for use by the beginning of next year, and the schedule time from N. Orleans to New York will be reduced to three days and six hours.

I must say a word about this Gayoso House. It is a specimen, I take it, of progress and popular taste here. For elegance and completeness of furniture, airiness of apartments and comfort generally, it is unequalled by any thing in its line I have anywhere seen. Col. Cockrill, the proprietor, shows bills for furniture alone reaching $110,000. In a press, 800 guests can be accommodated. Think of a thousand linen sheets, eighty solid mahogany bedsteads and spring mattresses more, and other trifles in keeping and proportion.

Connected with the building is an apparatus for supplying the building with gas lights.—The Brussels carpets and marble mantels, all through the house, the frescoed walls and silver ware, are a luxury to look at; more so to use. The people are a power, now-a-days. The people afford palaces now: the community principle reaches its highest achievement, economically, in such a hotel as this Gayoso. The commissary department is worthy of these surroundings.

The river rises. I hope your low grounds can take a few inches more. H. N. M.

Reply to Theodosia Ernest.—We are requested by the author to say that the name of his book is not "Theophilus, or the Trial of Faith," as inadvertently stated by our correspondent "M." but Theophilus Walton, or the Majesty of Truth, a Reply to Theodosia Ernest." See advertisement.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

The question is frequently asked, (says the Nashville Christian Advocate,) "What will the General Conference do?"

To this we cannot be expected to give a definite or satisfactory answer. The usual business, of course, will come before the body, viz: A review of the administration. This will refer to the manner in which the Bishops have administered the government, and the Annual Conferences have applied the law in all cases affecting in any wise the general interests of the Church and the rights and privileges of the ministry and membership. The publishing enterprise of the Connection will demand special attention and will elicit much discussion. All feel the importance of this great department of the Church, and each member will give it his best and most matured thoughts. We shall not expect a full agreement upon all the questions involved; but we sincerely hope there will be, in the end, harmony of action. Sectional and local feelings and interests must yield to the general good, and brethren must be willing to sacrifice personal or local advantages, in order to secure the prosperity of our common Zion.

The Missionary and Educational interests of the Church will employ much of the time and attention of the body. These are among the most important items that will be considered by the General Conference. We sincerely hope a new impetus will be given both to the one and the other.

The boundaries of the Conferences, the change of the General Rule on "the buying and selling of men, women, and children, with an intention to enslave them," and the general financial interests of the Connection, will call forth, probably, a good deal of able discussion.

One other topic may be introduced, concerning which, however, we anticipate but little discussion; we mean "Lay Representation." In a few instances we have seen some inklings of a desire or purpose to have this question brought before the Conference in a shape that might lead to a general discussion, but we apprehend nothing serious will come of it.

Though our enemies are to be prayed for, God's enemies, as such, are to be prayed against: and when we see some of God's enemies remarkably humbled and brought down, that is an encouragement to us to pray for the downfall of all the rest.

DEATH OF REV. DUDLEY A. TYNG.

Zions Herald gives the following account of the closing hour:

"Smitten down by an accident, in perfect health, it might be expected that the instincts of life would make the thought of death terrible. It was not till an hour before he breathed his last that he had any expectation that he should die. But when it was announced to him, he at once exclaimed, 'Then it is well—it is very well! God's will be done.'

"The Philadelphia Press says, that then, after a few moments of composure, he called his friends present and the members of his family to his bed-side, to bid them a last farewell. He thanked his physician, who is not a professing Christian, for his kind attention, warning him with great earnestness to lose no time in giving himself to that Savior who was now sustaining him in the hour of trial. To each of his children he gave an affectionate farewell, hoping that, by the grace of God, and the care of a devoted mother, they might be early brought 'to know their Savior.'

"To his wife, who has attended to him with so much affection and fidelity, and through his illness, he included in his parting words the request that she would use her endeavors to bring their boys up to the ministry. He was now to say farewell to his venerable father, the Rev. Stephen H. Tyng, D. D. Taking his aged parent by the hand, he said with much earnestness, 'Stand up for Jesus! father; stand up for Jesus! and tell my brethren in the ministry, wherever you meet them, to stand up for Jesus!'

"At the close of this solemn ceremony, feeling that he was approaching his end, he requested those around him to sing a hymn. After a moment of silence, his own wife, notwithstanding the solemn circumstances under which this request was made, commenced singing the beautiful hymn—made doubly so by its appropriateness to the occasion—beginning,

'Rock of Ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in Thee.'

"The hymn was sung, and even while the echoes of that mournful strain yet floated in the air, the spirit of Dudley A. Tyng took its flight to other, and, as we have reason to believe, more blissful realms.

"At the meeting in Jayne's Hall, on Tuesday, a very singular fact was referred to in connection with Mr. Tyng's recent sermon in that hall, to an immense audience, from the text of scripture, 'Ye that are men, go and serve the Lord.'

"Toward the close of his eloquent discourse on that occasion, he asked pardon if he had said anything to offend his congregation, but adding, 'I must tell my Master's errand, and I would rather that this right arm (placing his left hand upon it where it has since been amputated) were amputated at the trunk, than that I should come short of my duty to you in delivering God's message.'

"The bold anti-sectarian principles of Mr. Tyng, and the cordiality with which he fraternized with his brethren of all denominations, endeared him to the hearts of thousands."

DR. MYERS AND THE METHODISTS OF CHARLESTON.

The following account of a pleasant incident in an editor's life, we find in the last Southern Christian Advocate. No doubt the Doctor deserves it all and more also. The Methodists of New Orleans have no idea of losing their editor. If they had, he would not have left without a substantial token of their affectionate regard. We hope there are no possibilities in his case.

"Many members of all the M. E. Churches in Charleston, with a desire to express their affectionate regards for the Rev. E. H. Myers, D. D., Editor of the Southern Christian Advocate, authorized a committee to surprise him, in his office on the 23d inst., with a beautiful and substantial token of their good-will. His term of official service being about to expire, and the contingences of the itinerant life rendering it possible that he may be transferred by the approaching General Conference to other duties, it was felt proper to convey to him a testimonial of their high appreciation of his zealous and efficient labors for their spiritual good. C. A. Greaser, Esq., the spokesman on the occasion, in a few feeling and suitable remarks made in behalf of the brethren, presented him with a valuable gold watch, on the exterior of which his name is beautifully engraved—and on the inside is this inscription—

'A Token of Esteem and Affection from Many Methodists of Charleston, S. C., April, 1858.'

"Dr. M. responded in a peculiarly touching manner. He evidently was deeply affected, and appreciated the feelings that prompted the gift. Long may he live to bless the church with his labors in the pulpit, and his pen in the chair.

"As soon as this ceremony was over, the Rev. James Stacy arose, and in behalf of the Pastors of the several M. E. Churches in the city, presented Dr. M. with a beautiful gold-headed palmetto cane. This was an agreeable surprise to the lay brethren present, and added no little interest to the occasion. Mr. Stacy's remarks were exceedingly appropriate, and the reply was in keeping with the cordial and affectionate sentiments uttered by him. All eyes were suffused with tears, and every one felt the blest influence of 'The tie that binds

Our hearts in christian love.'

"On the head of the cane is this inscription—'E. H. Myers from the Pastors of the M. E. Church, South, Charleston, S. C., April 23d, 1858.'

"Then follow the names of the P. E. of the Dist. and the ministers stationed in the city.—The benediction was then pronounced by Rev. W. Martin."

DR. W. T. HAMILTON.

From the following extract it will be seen that the Rev. Dr. W. T. Hamilton, who fell so sadly a few years ago, has been restored to membership in the Presbyterian Church, by the Presbyterians of South Alabama:

"An application was received from Dr. W. T. Hamilton, formerly of Mobile, praying that the sentence of suspension from the membership of the Church resting on him might be removed. This petition, together with the certificates of eight or nine ministers and laymen, personally acquainted with Dr. H., and now living in his neighborhood, clearly showed to all the members of Presbytery, that no good reason exists why the sentence of suspension should not at once be removed from the applicant. The documents were heard with the greatest interest, and every heart was filled with gratitude to God for the unmistakable evidence they afforded of the prudence of Dr. H. The whole matter was referred to the Judicial Committee, who at a subsequent session brought in a report recommending the removal of the sentence of suspension from Dr. H., and directing him to seek admission to the communion of the Church, where he might find it most convenient."

Missionary Intelligence.—Rev. John Wilson and wife and Rev. D. McGilvery have sailed for the mission of the Presbyterian Board at Bangkok, Siam; and Rev. H. V. Rankin and family, Mrs. Rev. T. L. Nevins, and Mr. William Gamble have returned to the mission of the same Board at Ningpo, China. Miss Emma G. Jones has returned to the Episcopal mission at Shanghai, China.

THE LATE FROST.

IN MISSISSIPPI.

The Yazoo Banner, of the 30th ult., noticing the recent frosts, says:

We are glad to learn from several of our neighboring planters that the cotton has sustained no injury here. The corn, we learn, is slightly injured; but the fruit has escaped unharmed, as far as we can learn.

The Kosciusko Chronicle, of the 30th ult., reports "a heavy frost" in Attala county on the night of the 27th, but has not a word as to the damage done thereby.

The Aberdeen Sunny South, of the 29th ult., the Carthage (Leake county) Herald, of the 30th, and the Port Gibson Herald, of the same date, have not a word about frost.

The Jackson Mississippian reports several frosts last week, "very seriously damaging the cotton crop."

The Natchez Free Trader, of the 30th ult., says:

The chilly weather of a day or two past, accompanied with frost, has had a deleterious effect on vegetation, affecting the young cotton, fruit trees and the gardens, not as seriously, however, as we at first surmised.

The Mobile Mercury publishes the following extract from a letter from a gentleman of Crawfordsville, Miss., the centre of the fine cotton region of that section, to his factor in Mobile, dated 28th ult:

Persons have been in to-day from different parts of the neighborhood, and I have made general inquiry as to the extent of the damage resulting from the late frost. In some instances the cotton is all killed, but the prevailing opinion is that there is seed enough to replant the portions of plantations which have been so injured as to make this necessary. Corn, they think, is not injured at all. There is plenty of fruit left unhurt. Wheat is not hurt. For the quantity of frost, it did very little real damage.

IN EASTERN TEXAS.

The Dallas Herald, of the 17th ult., says:

A gentle "norther" sprang up on Sunday morning, running the mercury down below 30°. It continued cold, and there was a slight frost in places on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday nights, but fortunately not enough to do any damage. The ground happened to be very dry, or it might have been otherwise. The frost was most perceptible on Tuesday night. The weather has now moderated. This cold weather was accompanied by heavy gales of wind, which together have given corn, vegetables, etc., a backset.

IN LOUISIANA.

The Plaquemine (Iberville) Gazette, of the 1st inst., says:

We had unusually cold weather during the greater part of this week. On Tuesday there was a slight frost, and overcoats during the entire day were not uncomfortable; and fires every morning were necessary as they were in December.

The West Baton Rouge Sugar Planter, of the 1st inst., reports the weather growing very warm though windy, and the crops promising finely.

The Bayou Sara Ledger reports frost on the mornings of the 27th and 28th ult., and that little damage was done to the crops.

The same paper says the Methodists are holding daily and nightly revivals in Bayou Sara, and it is understood that more than twenty persons have already joined the church.

The Concordia Intelligencer, of the 30th ult., reports frost on two mornings of last week, "severe enough to shew upon the young cotton."

The Donna Ceres says the inhabitants of the lower portion of Bayon Terrebonne, are beginning to suffer from the effects of the crevasses on the Bayou Lafourche.

IN ALABAMA.

The Demopolis Gazette, of the 30th ult., says:

We have had quite a cold spell of weather of several days duration. On Tuesday morning there was abundance of frost seen throughout the vicinity, but strange to say, the gardens escaped unscathed, and not a vestige of it can be seen even on the most susceptible and delicate plants. The extreme dryness of the atmosphere no doubt accounts for this. The cotton, although of course a little sickened by the cold weather, has also escaped.

The Marion Commonwealth, of the 28th, speaks of considerable frost in that locality on that and the morning previous, and adds, "Vegetation, so far as heard from, has not been damaged to the serious extent which might have been expected."

The Montgomery Advertiser, of the 30th, says it has no accounts of any serious damage in that county by the recent frosts.

The Montgomery Confederation, of the same date, says:

From observation in Lowndes and Autauga counties, we are satisfied that the recent frosts have been productive of no serious damage to the growing crops. It is true that on light, sandy lands, where the substance has been worked out long ago, cotton and corn look weakly and sick; but a few days of dry, hot weather will repair all the damage. On strong lands, particularly the red and black mulatto, the plants are looking remarkably sprightly and vigorous. Fruit remains unharmed.

The Eufaula Spirit of the South, of the 27th ult., says a white frost was very noticeable in some places on the 24th, but no injury had resulted from it. Crops of all kinds were looking unusually well.

IN GEORGIA.

The Columbus Sun, of the 28th ult., says:

We had another slight frost yesterday morning, but so far as we can hear it did no material damage to vegetation—or rather, we have not heard of its killing anything. But that it will injure cotton to some extent, no one acquainted with the growth of that product can for a moment doubt, as even cold mornings, without any frost at all, will give it what the planters call the "sore shin," and stunt it so much in its growth that it will take it some time to recover from it. We understand the frost a few days since had a very bad effect on the cotton in some localities, causing it to turn yellow and to look very sickly and puny, and in some places even some of it is dying, but we think this does not exist to an extent that will perceptibly affect the amount of the growing crop. The weather was quite cool all day yesterday.

The Augusta Evening Dispatch, of the 28th ult., says:

There was considerable frost in the vicinity of Augusta, this morning. Some report cotton injured, but we are disposed to hope that no serious damage has been done. It is still cold and windy.

A letter to the Dispatch, dated Calhoun, Ga., April 27, says:

We had a light frost with ice last night—killed down corn, potatoes, beans, etc., cotton, where there was any up, and slightly injured garden truck generally; fruit and wheat not seriously hurt, though the prospect for wheat is not as flattering as it was a few weeks since.

The Atlanta American, of the 28th, says:

Yesterday morning there was considerable frost and ice in this locality—and also a heavy frost this morning. Much damage has been done to vegetation in low situations. So far as we have been able to ascertain, the wheat and fruit crops have received but little damage.

THE RIVER—HIGH WATER.

Overflow of the River Up-Town.—On Monday the river began washing over the levee at several points up-town—opposite Josephine, Felicity, and Race, and Basin streets. In the evening the overflow was more brisk, owing, it was said, to the joint influence of a rise in the river and an adverse wind. The water, washing over at the different points, had the effect of swamping the streets in the vicinity, and Monday night Tchoupitoulas street, along by the cotton presses, was not to be traversed without wading. The overflow, however, is a trifle compared with a crevasse. The proper authorities were looking after the matter in the evening, and, unless the overflow shall subside of itself, it can be stopped very easily to-day.

Crevasse at Mme. J. M. Labranche's, St. Charles.—We learn, that about two o'clock Saturday morning, the levee, on the plantation of Madame J. M. Labranche, on the right bank of the river, in the parish of St. Charles, near opposite the Red Church, gave way and before daylight the breach was 75 feet wide and the water was rushing through it with a fall of eight feet, and making a roar that could be heard for miles. All the forces of the neighborhood were promptly sent to aid in endeavoring to stop the breach, and some are of opinion that they will be successful. It is to be hoped they will, for otherwise the consequences are likely to be very disastrous. There is said to be a considerable quantity of sugar on the plantation itself in danger of being lost; the neighboring plantations and the Opelousas railroad must suffer greatly.

Reports Monday night were very encouraging. It was stated that command of both ends of the break had been secured, and that Mr. Bailey, Chief Engineer on the Opelousas railroad, who had been summoned to take charge of the work, was quite confident of the break being soon stopped.

The Bell Crevasse.—The work on the Bell crevasse is still continued from both ends, but as yet with no effective result, and with scarcely improved prospects. The piling from the lower end is filled in and firm; that from the upper end appears of dubious stability; the interrupted distance open in the centre is about seventy feet; no attempt has been made to replace the piling washed away, and the river has appreciably risen during the past day or two. The contractor expresses confidence of being able to accomplish the closing of the breach, however.

The water having overflowed the Zeranger swamp, the Opelousas cars now stop at the twelve mile station. The road is pronounced to have sustained no damage.

The River.—The river is now higher opposite this point that it has yet been. It is forced on the levee at two or three points—as at the tobacco warehouses, for instance—by every high gust; but no danger seems to be apprehended. Accounts from above report it to be rising there also, and give accounts of overflows of great extent.

The Opelousas Railroad.—The cars of this road now stop at the twelve mile station, at Mr. Waggaman's plantation. The water from the Bell crevasse has overflowed the low ground above it in the rear known as the Zeranger Swamp, and prevented the cars from making their former stopping places. Mr. Seger yesterday examined all that portion of the road which is overflowed and pronounces it uninjured.

Vicksburg, May 3.—The river opposite this point continues rising at the rate of an inch every twenty-four hours.

A report reached us to-day that there had been a break in the levee at Point Leck-O, some 400 or 500 yards in length, that the rush of water through it could be heard for two miles, and that no land was to be seen for many miles round.

The accounts brought by the steamboat St. Nicholas are that the river continued to rise all the way as it came down; that Cammack's land ing and the country round about were overflowed, and that the land covered by the water which had poured in through the break in Henderson levee, below Warrenton, extends for ten miles in length and three in width.

ELEPHANTS IN INDIA.

A Calcutta correspondent of the New York Commercial Advertiser, in giving an account of a visit to Barrackpore, says:

"We saw the recently-arrived elephants from Burmah; they looked in good condition. There were ninety of them at the stables, and many were traveling about through the different streets and roads. I had a short ride upon one of the largest, who kneeled down to enable me to mount, and some of them made us a salaam with their trunks when told to do so by their keeper, or 'mahout,' as the driver is called. They are intelligent animals. A story was told me of a number of elephants in one of the Mofussil districts. One of them had committed a fault in refusing to carry a slight additional burden when told by the mahout that he would get extra grog for it. He was tried by court martial in the presence of twenty of his elephantine brethren and convicted, and on the keeper's reading the sentence, all raised their trunks in acknowledgment of its justice! Another was appointed to flog him, which he did by giving him fifty lashes with a long chain twined about his trunk, and the culprit received the whole meekly, well knowing he deserved it. They are very cunning as to weighing their food with their trunks when on a march, and if there is an ounce short they discover it, and insist on the regular allowance. When traveling they each have a gallon of grog a day, just as sailors and soldiers have their glass. These animals were at Barrackpore, recruiting after the voyage, and were soon to be sent up the country to serve in England's cause."

TAKING THE CLAWS FROM A TIGER'S FEET.

For some time past it had been observed that a splendid tiger in the menagerie of John Robinson, whose animals have been wintering here, was suffering from pain in the fore feet, and it was finally concluded that the claws were growing upward into the flesh. On Wednesday preparations were made for removing the claws. Ropes were passed around the body of the animal, and by means of which he was hoisted from his feet and suspended from the top of his cage. Another rope was then slipped around each fore-paw, which was pulled out of the cage between the iron bars. By means of instruments, the claws upon both fore-feet were then removed, and it was found that two or three of them had grown up into the flesh nearly half an inch, and others a less distance. As might have been expected, his tigership expressed his opinion of the surgical operation in the loudest manner.

HOME CIRCLE.

This very attractive and deservedly popular periodical is published monthly by Stevenson & Owen, Ag'ts, Nashville, Tenn., L. D. Huston, D. D., Editor, at $2 per annum, strictly in advance. Each number contains 64 pages royal octavo, embellished with one or more beautiful steel-plate engravings. The matter is mainly original, and of the most important and interesting character.

To ministers of the gospel, and all others who may be disposed to act as agents in procuring subscribers, a discount of 20 per cent. will be allowed on the subscription price.

As the patronage of this admirable issue has not yet been sufficient to meet the cost of its publication, it is therefore respectfully proposed that a prompt, energetic, and continuous effort be made in all the Conferences to increase the list of its patrons to at least twelve thousand!—Come brethren, you have but to submit the claims of the "Circle" to the Church and her friends, and this desirable object will be more than realized at an early day.

STEVENSON & OWEN, Ag'ts.

RAINY SUNDAYS.

The following capital plan to get people to church on rainy Sundays, is narrated in the New Covenant:

A good story is told of Rev. J. Burchard, of Watertown, N. Y., the famous revivalist, we suppose. We fear that his course would not succeed in all places; for some people have a terrible horror of a church on a rainy day. The story is that the Doctor told his parishioners he should reserve the best efforts of his mind for rainy days—and the worse the weather, the better should be his sermons—and he kept his word. The consequence naturally was, that his church was never so well filled, as in wet weather; and the harder the rain poured down, the more the people poured in, until it finally became his practice to pray the Lord to bless his flock with rainy Sundays.

THE ISLE OF PERIM.—The peace of Europe is now endangered by the claims set up by both England and France to the little island of Perim, about five miles in length and a barren rock, at the entrance of the Red Sea. The traffic between Europe and India ought naturally to go across the Isthmus of Suez, by the Red Sea. France wishes for a canal across the isthmus, and England for a railroad over it, and the possession of Perim is of great importance to England. She will probably take it, and ask France no questions.

PERSONS WAITING IN THE OFFICE will please observe that business letters are filed by the clerk. If they write but three words to the Editor or for publication, they must so write it, that it can be separated from the business letters, if they expect the Editor ever to see it.

THOSE WRITING TO DEPOSITORY will please observe the same rule. If matter for the three departments is contained on the same sheet, let it be so written that it can be separated, or better still, write it on separate slips; and then if it goes wrong, the fault is not with the writer—otherwise it will be.

In sending subscriber's names always give their Post-office, and say whether they are old or new.

In changing papers, always name the Post-office changed from as well as the one changed to.

THE WOMAN WHO LIVES WITHOUT EATING.

We have published several letters (says the Advocate and Journal) respecting this extraordinary case of suffering; they are important to scientific men, and painfully interesting to all; but perhaps we have given enough on the subject. Some letters on hand we must omit. The following from our friend, Rev. S. P. Williams, we give as the last; it cannot fail to interest and touch the heart of the reader;

"Mrs. Hayes is not yet dead: I have seen her several times. And after reading all that has appeared in the Advocate in regard to her, venture to communicate a few thoughts upon her case. Before she passed into this peculiar and afflictive condition, her health was for some length of time extremely poor. She ate but little, and that little occasioned a considerable amount of suffering. Sometimes it throws her into spasms. For nearly a year before she ceased to take refreshments altogether she lived wholly, or nearly so, upon the juice of dried raspberries, until that became a source of suffering. Then, for a time, she took occasionally a small quantity of cold water; and it is now nearly a year since she swallowed any liquid, to the knowledge of any one.—Indeed I have no doubt that a tea-spoonful of liquid put into her mouth would be the occasion of her death, unless the spasmodic action of her throat should expel it. Any person to see her ten minutes must be satisfied that there is no deception in her case. Her head and shoulders, one or the other, are in perpetual motion. She is frequently thrown forward, until she is nearly doubled together, and then the head thrown back, and her neck literally doubled, and the body forced back, and the whole face, chin and all, entirely buried in the pillow. This is done several times successively in less time than I take in writing it.—The last time in the series the face will remain nearly buried in the pillow, and she does not breathe for ten or fifteen minutes. Once she remained sixty-two minutes without breathing. When this is over, and the spasm passes off, she struggles for breath, and her head is rolled from side to side almost with the velocity of lightning for a moment or two; the face becomes red with the rush of blood to the head, and the skin quite moist with perspiration.—Then the spasm subsides into a gentle motion of the jaw and shoulder, keeping time, as one would think, with the action of the heart. Her skin about the face, neck, chest, and hands is delicate and healthy as the skin of an infant. The pulsations of her blood about the chest, neck, head, and arms, though exceedingly delicate, are quite regular. Her hair does not grow, nor is it worn off her head, as one would naturally suppose; except a little just upon the crown. The action of the liver is entirely suspended of course. The action and state of the lungs are perfectly healthy. They have been thoroughly examined by skillful physicians with the aid of a stethoscope, and are supposed to be perfect. Her nourishment is wholly from the atmosphere. The last nutriment, indeed the last swallow of water, she was known to take was in the last of June, 1857. The last time she was known to be conscious was last December. When she comes out of these long spasms she seems to cry for a moment, like an infant in distress.—At such times her husband thinks she may be conscious. It is most distressing to hear it.—She is not above the ordinary laws of disease. She has recently had a thorough case of the mumps, precisely as others have them. Her nails upon her fingers, like her hair, do not grow at all."

MADAGASCAR.—There has been another outburst of persecution under the cruel queen of this Island, following the expulsion of a number of Frenchmen from the capital in July last. Thirteen persons were stoned to death, and their wives and children reduced to slavery; between fifty and sixty were subjected to the ordeal of the Tangena or poisoned water, eight of whom died; nearly sixty were bound in chains, two of whom died; and a number more were reduced to slavery.

WATER IN THE DESERT.—Five Artesian wells have been bored in the desert of Sahara since May, 1856, all of which yield a plentiful supply of water, to the unbounded joy and gratitude of the natives. One of these wells was solemnly consecrated by the Marabouts, and named "the well of peace," another "the well of bliss," and another "the well of gratitude."

We take pleasure in publishing the following circular. It well explains itself:

"MESSENGER AND PORTFOLIO."

The Heracean and Eclectic Societies of the Columbus (Miss.,) Female Institute, propose to publish a journal, entitled as above. It will be divided into two equal compartments, one of which, the "Messenger" will be under the control of the Heracean Society, and the other, the "Portfolio," under the control of the Eclectic Society. The Editors will be chosen from their own membership.

The design of the publication is, primarily, to foster and encourage, among the young ladies of the Institute, the art of literary composition; secondarily, to furnish their friends and the public with a readable and instructive Family Paper—a paper which, by its genial vivacity, and its sincere advocacy of "the good, the beautiful and the true" wherever found, will always be a grateful visitant of the family fireside.

In the realization of their secondary object, they will receive efficient aid from some of the best writers in the country.

For the paper and its engagements, the subscriber holds himself responsible to the public. It will be issued semi-monthly, beginning about the first of March.

TERMS:—One Dollar per annum, invariably in advance.

Persons receiving this circular, are requested to act as agents.

All communications should be addressed to the undersigned.

HE DIED AS THE FOOL DIETH.

A correspondent of the Marysville (California) News communicates the death of John Thomas, at Deer Gulch. He had made a bet of $10 to $5 that he could "hold his breath" a longer time than Ephraim Marringer. They were both robust miners, and Thomas said he would "wit the five or burst!" Mr. Smallwood gave the word, and both drew in a long breath. Second after second rolled away into minutes, one—two—three minutes—and Marringer gave in with a loud puff, not being able to stand it longer. At this the spectators raised a loud laugh, but Thomas gave no sign or motion to show that he was aware of his having won the wager, but sat, with his head bowed upon his breast, still—immovable!—"Hallo, Thomas! Old fellow! You've won! What are you setting there for! Get up and stand treat," some one said to him. Not replying, the company became alarmed. They shook him—raised him from the chair—he was dead. A post mortem examination showed that the heart had been completely burst asunder, causing death instantly.

General Intelligence.

WEALTH OF ILLINOIS.—According to the returns of the county assessors of Illinois to the State Auditor, the aggregate value of real and personal property in that Commonwealth, (omitting several counties not yet received,) amounts to $403,477,367, being an increase of $72,227,240 over the total of the year 1756, or 22 per cent. difference in two years. As the assessors' estimates are always considerably below the real value of the property, the actual increase of wealth in the State during the period specified is probably near one hundred millions. This enormous expansion enables us to appreciate the rapid progress of Illinois since the commencement of the railway era, which has built up a great commercial mart on the lake shore of the State, and opened to the prairie farmers the markets of the Atlantic seaboard.

HANDSOME MOUNT VERNON CONTRIBUTION.—On the 22d ult., the Mount Vernon Association at Richmond, Va., received a check for eight hundred dollars from Wm. H. Brune, Esq., of Baltimore, treasurer of the Norfolk and Portsmouth fund. This sum is the unexpended balance of the amount subscribed by the citizens of Louisville, Ky., in aid of the yellow fever sufferers at Norfolk, and Mr. Brune has disposed of it as requested by the city council of Louisville.

The ladies of Halifax, N. S., propose to present a magnificent Bible, with a carved bird's eye maple case, to Lady Inglis, "as a token of their sympathy with her privations and sufferings, and estimation of her Christian faith, hope and fortitude, by which she was animated and sustained at Lucknow; and of respect and admiration for its heroic and brave defender, Major Gen. Sir John E. W. Inglis, K. C. B., a native of Halifax."

A CHRISTIAN GOVERNMENT SUSTAINING PAGANISM. There are 8292 idols and temples in the Madras Presidency, India, receiving from government an annual payment of 876,780 rupees. In the Bombay Presidency there are 26,589 temples and idols under state patronage, receiving 305,875 rupees, besides 392,718 as an allowance for temple lands. The entire patronage of the East India Company for all its territories amounts to 1,715, 586 rupees, paid annually in support of idolatry.

THE KING'S FIRST THOUGHT.—Professor Morse states that he was told by Benjamin West, the great American painter, that in 1776, when he was residing in London, he was in the palace painting the portrait of King George III., when a messenger came and delivered to him a copy of the American Declaration of Independence. The king read it, and remarked, "Well, if they can be happier under the form of government they have chosen than under mine, I shall be happy."

A COSTLY HEADDRESS.—The crown of state worn by Queen Victoria on the occasion of her daughter's marriage is valued at $670,000. It contains one ruby and four large diamonds, each valued at $50,000, two diamonds at $10,000 each, twenty at $7,500 each, besides a great number of diamonds and pearls of less value. This large mass of jewelry is seven inches in height and five inches in diameter at the rim, and weighs nineteen ounces ten pennyweights.

INDIA.—According to the latest returns, the area of the British states in India, in Bengal, Madras, and Bombay, is 837,412 square miles, and the population 131,990,901; of the native states in the same provinces, 627,910 square miles, and the population 48,376,247; making the total of British and native states 1,465,322 square miles, occupied by a population of 180,367,148.

All is tranquil at Canton under the rule of the allies, and order has been completely maintained. Yeh, the governor of Canton, was taken prisoner. The emperor of China has declared war against Russia, and the Chinese have commenced hostilities against their establishment on the Amoor river, where Russians had encroached on the Chinese empire.

It is stated in an Athens journal that a manuscript copy on parchment of the Gospels in Greek, and bearing the date 480, has recently been found in the garret of a house in that city. It is said to be in good preservation, and has been deposited in the public library of Athens.

A PRINTING-PRESS IN A HAREM.—A small printing-office was lately sent to Constantinople from Paris. The press is to be worked by the ladies of the harem of one of the great Pashas residing on the Bosphorus.

BARON MUNCHAUSEN.—Miss Brewster (daughter of Sir David) in her "Letters from Cannes and Nice," says: "Baron Munchausen is at Nice. My father met him at a picnic the other day, and heard from him the history of his celebrated namesake. One of his ancestors had a chaplain who was famous for drawing a long bow—told in fact the most false and extravagant stories. His patron, the Baron of those days, wrote a book out Herading Herod, being a collection of still more marvelous adventures for the purpose of shaming the priest; for which laudable design he was punished, by having his own name held up to posterity as the story-teller par excellence." This shows that it is very dangerous to lie, even in jest.—The Munchausens are a Hanoverian family.

Among the rare and curious books and manuscripts recently sold by auction in London was a copy of Cicero de Senectute et Amicitia, printed by William Caxton, in 1481, which produced the enormous price of $1325. It was formerly the Merly copy, purchased at that sale for $1000 by the Marquis of Blandford, resold at White Knights for $435, and afterward in Trotter Brockett's, for $2400. The London papers report that this was "a remarkable fine copy of a most rare volume."

PAPER FROM MOSS.—The recent invention of Dr. Terrey, of Detroit, demonstrates that excellent paper may be manufactured from moss.—There is an abundance of the article in Texas and Louisiana, and it is expected that a large export will be made of it for the purpose of paper making. The gathering and drying of the moss require but little capital, and a large business can be done in its production and forwarding to market on small means.

CURE FOR THE BITE OF A MAD DOG.—A writer in the National Intelligencer, says that spirits of hartshorn is a certain remedy for the bite of a mad dog. The wound, he adds, should be constantly bathed with it, and three or four doses, diluted, taken inwardly during the day. The hartshorn decomposes, chemically, the virus insinuated into the wound, and immediately alters and destroys its deleteriousness. He has also tried it in rattlesnake bites and found it efficacious.

Lord Chancellor Northington suffers much from the gout; and once, after some painful waddling between the woolsack and the bar, in the House of Lords, he was heard to mutter: "If I had known that these legs were one day to carry a Chancellor, I'd have taken better care of them when I was a lad."

An official list of the victims of the memorable earthquake at Naples, on the 16th of December, shows the total number of deaths to have been 9350, and the number of wounded 1359. At Montemurro, alone, 5000 persons were crushed to death by the falling of the houses.

A GOOD TRADE TO FALL BACK ON.—All the princes of the royal family of Prussia, according to an ancient usage, must learn a trade. Prince Frederick William, who recently married the Princess Royal of England, learned the trade of a compositor in a printing-office in Berlin.

CURE FOR POLYGAMY.—Punch says that President Buchanan need not throw away powder and shot upon the Mormons. Let him send them fashion books. The necessity of crinoline will destroy polygamy. It will render Brigham Young himself unable to support more wives than one.

Dr. Livingston has returned to Africa in the employ of the English government, and $25,000 have been placed at his disposal for the prosecution of his views.

SUNDAY.—One of the most beautiful expressions of Longfellow is this; "Sunday is the golden clasp that binds together the volume of the week."

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT.

Its wonderful effects and consequent popularity—perhaps no article in the history of the Materia Medica ever acquired the same patronage, was subjected to the same number of severe and different tests, and met with so few failures as the Mustang Liniment. It has justly been styled a Panacea for all external Wounds, Cuts, Swellings, Emptions, Sprains, or Bruises on man or beast. It is so far a medicine of surprising virtue, that physicians are compelled to prescribe it; and from some remarkable cures of chronic and distorted Rheumatic cases it has naturally attracted much attention from the first scientific minds of the age. No family can afford to be without a bottle of the Mustang Liniment in the house. Beware of imitations.

The genuine is sold by respectable dealers in all parts of the world.

The Wonderful Success of Dr. Hostetter's Celebrated and unrivalled STOMACH BITTERS, from the time of its introduction to the public, proves conclusively its manifest superiority over any other preparation of the kind now manufactured. Its action on the digestive organs is of the most pleasing character, removing all diseases or morbidity, and giving the system a sound and healthy tone in cases of Dyspepsia, loss of appetite, general debility, or physical weakness, its operation is most beneficial indeed; some of the most direful cases that have ever been under medical treatment have been entirely cured by this great agent. As a bode, Hostetter's Bitters are most delightful, especially before meals.

TRADE Infernal Irritation occasioned by Worms has a sympathetic influence on the whole system, producing dyspepsia, nervousness, palpitation of the heart, low spirits, loss of memory, fits, and great debility. These complaints are generally ascribed to other causes and useless or worse than useless medicines are prescribed, when a single bottle of Wiser's Canadian Vermifuge would expel the vermicelli and restore the patient to perfect health. In all such cases try the Vermifuge.

Be particular and remember the name "Wiser's Canadian Vermifuge." This is the only article that can be depended on. Remember this. For sale by

COMMERCIAL.

The New Orleans Price Current, of the 5th, says:

With unfavorable weather during a portion of the time and other obstacles to progress, the week opened with but limited transactions in the market generally. Buyers of Cotton claim concessions, while the receipts of Sugar and Molasses are not sufficiently ample to admit of any operations of much magnitude. In the various articles of Western Produce, also, the business has been limited, though about previous prices have generally prevailed.

On Monday the Anglo-Saxon's advices, from Liverpool to the 21st ult., four days later than those previously to hand, were before the public, reporting an advance of ⅛ @ ¼d in the Liverpool Cotton market, with sales for four days of 40,000 bales, the market closing buoyant.—Manchester advices are reported favorable and Consols are quoted at 96⅜ @ 96¾, which figures indicate an advance of ⅛ ₰ cent. since the arrival of the Arabia. Yesterday the Europa's advices, still three days later, were received, confirming the advance above noticed and reporting the week's sales to have been 88,000 bales. Consols had further improved an ⅛ ₰ cent., being quoted at the closest 96¾ @ 96⅞ for money.

In our market Monday the sales barely reached 2500 bales. Yesterday, with a return of fair weather, there was a better attendance of buyers than for some days previous, and offers to a considerable extent were made, but in many instances at a lower range of prices than holders were inclined to accept, as they are strengthened in their firmness, not only by the favorable foreign advices, but also by accounts received within the last day or two of new and extensive breaches and overflows in important cotton regions. Nevertheless sales were effected to the extent of about 11,000 bales, our quotations being generally well sustained for the Middling and better grades, but still leaving the lower descriptions comparatively neglected and mostly nominal. The sales of the three days sum up 14,900 bales.

COTTON—Arrived since 30th ultimo, of Louisiana and Mississippi 9318 bales, Tennessee and North Alabama 799, Arkansas 633, Mobile 187, Florida 54, Texas 675; together 11,966 bales. Cleared since the same date, 28,748 bales. Stock in presses and on shipboard not cleared on the 1th inst. 308,216 bales.

The receipts at this port since 1st September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida, and Texas) are 1,464,231 bales, against 1,404,055 bales to same date last year; and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year is 14,190 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries as compared with the same dates last year, there is a increase to Great Britain of 145,736 bales, and a decrease to France of 25,249 bales, and to other foreign ports of 76,002 bales.

SUGAR—LOUISIANA—The receipts have been too limited to admit of any operations to much extent, and the sales of the past three days have been confined to about 1200 hhds, prices being generally firm at the range of the following quotations:

Inferior and Refining	2¾ @ 4
Common to Good Common	4¼ @ 5¾
Fair to Fully Fair	6¼ @ 7
Prime	7¼ @ 7¾
Choice	7¾ @ 8¼
Centrifugal and Clarified	6 @ 8¾

Arrived since the 30th 1289 hhds 116 tierces and bbls—cleared 274 hhds 139 bbls.

MOLASSES—The three days sales sum up about 1800 bbls, and we now quote for Inferior and Fermenting to Good 26 @ 29, Prime to Choice 30 @ 31c ₰ bbls; half-barrels 30 @ 35c ₰ gal. for Fermenting to Choice. Refinery rebolled 32 @ 33c in bbls. and 34 @ 36 in half-barrels. Arrived since the 30th 1823—cleared 215 bbls.

MONETARY AND FINANCIAL.

Thursday Morning, May, 6.

COTTON—There was quite an active demand yesterday resulting in sales of fully 16,000 bales. Prices were well sustained.

The Money market shows some symptoms of amendment, and really prime names can be placed more readily at 10 ₰ ct, though other good signatures are passed at 11 @ 12. Still, as the season progresses, capitalists are desirous of making their investments, and, where the paper is at all satisfactory, are less disposed to insist on extreme rates.

We have dates from New York to Wednesday evening last. The Post says:

The Money market remains uncomfortably easy. The difficulty in employing capital is on the increase. When Banks that have capitals of $700,000 to $1,000,000 have only $15,000 to $30,000 offered on discount day, as has been the case to-day, it is evident that the Money abundance is daily increasing.

A Syllogism!

PROPOSITION 1st.

Every Lady and Gentleman desires a beautiful head of Hair.

PROPOSITION 2d.

The use of Lyon's KATHAIRON will, without fail, produce such an one.

THEREFORE:

Every Lady and Gentleman will, of course, immediately commence using Lyon's Kathairon. All pronounce the Kathairon to be the finest and most agreeable preparation for the Hair ever made.

Its immense sale—nearly 1,000,000 bottles per year—attests its universal popularity. Sold everywhere for 25 cents per bottle.

POETRY.

THE HUMAN HARP.

BY DAVID BATES.

There is a harp in each human breast,
The strings of which are never at rest;
Where viewless fingers breathe, and linger—
Awaked by thousands of viewless fingers,
That plays, like the hum of fairy wings,
Their tunes on its thousand quivering strings.

This heaven-born harp is a priceless boon
In its mortal frame; with its strings in tune;
But, whether tones of this living harp
Are gentle and tender, flat or sharp,
Whose louder sung, depends always
On the ear that hears, and the hand that plays.

How touchingly tender is its moan,
As it gives to sorrow its monotone!
While, touched by the palsied hand of Fear,
It whistles quick on the startled ear;
And its strong-wrought frame in frenzy leaps,
While Passion its slumbers sweeps.

But happier spirits are hovering near,
And the music they play we love to hear;
They throng each heart, of the grave and gay,
And many a note I've heard them play—
So often too, are they playing the same,
That we know their touch, and call them by name.
There is Love, who comes on his flattering wings,
Ah! how it thrills when he touches the strings!
Pain thinks he is heard all over the land,
As he strikes the chords with a master-hand;
But Faith and Hope, in the mission given,
To touch the notes that are heard in heaven.

They linger still, when the rest are gone,
And left the frail harp broken and lone;
And when Death plays the last sad strain—
Breaking the chords he ne'er shall touch again,
They bear it away, with joyous wing,
And sing it anew where the angels sing.

CHARITY.

The secret that doth make a flower a flower,
So framed it that to bloom is to be sweet,
And to receive to give.
No soil so sterile and no living lot
So poor, but it hath somewhat still to spare
In household odors. Charitable they,
Who, be their having more or less, so have,
That less is more than need, and more is less Than the great heart's good-will.

Sidney Dobell.

OBITUARIES.

Died—On the 14th inst., of cancer, at the residence of her brother, John C. Barrow, of Bolivar county, Ms., Mrs Mary Hamilton, age 59 years and 5 days. At the age of 26 she sought and obtained the pardon of her sins, and from that time to the day of her death she lived a consistent member of the M. E. Church, South. The cancer, of which she died, made its appearance about four years since. At the time she was convinced that it was really cancer she was also convinced that death was inevitable, and though she had lived a faithful member of the Church and obtained the witness of the Spirit that she was an heir of God and a joint heir with Christ, she notwithstanding her deep piety, had for years great fears of death; and as her end of life declined, she became anxious that all doubt and fears should be removed. For this she and her friends prayed till all was bright before her, and she felt that death had lost his sting and the grave her victory. The deceased may truly be said to have been one of the excellent of the earth. Amiability of disposition and affability of manners were prominent and lovely traits in her character. Meek and gentle of spirit, generous and kind in her nature, true and unreserved in her friendships, full of benevolence to all and ever striving to promote the comfort and happiness of those around her, she greatly endeared herself to "the loved ones at home," was a general favorite with her relatives and much esteemed and admired by all who knew her.

Of our dear departed sister it may emphatically be said, she was a Bible Christian and an eminent saint of the Lord. For the last six months she was confined to her room, and the greater part of that time to her bed; but the Bible was her constant companion, and well did she profit by its companionship. The sun of her Christianity shone with increasing brightness, and shed a heavenly lustre all along her pathway; but it was at the setting hour—at the evening horizon—amidst the clouds of human weakness, natural infirmities and rallied powers of darkness, that his light and splendor broke forth and shone with the most unearthly brightness. There were none who witnessed her afflictions that had ever seen the like before. For marks the Lord destined her far out upon the very verge of life's shore, as a witness of his power and grace, to bless and save. Sister Haselrigg has left many friends and an only brother to mourn her loss; but the writer would say to them, in the language of inspiration, that she can not return to them, but they can go to her.

James H. Shelton.

Died—At the residence of her husband, on Lake Bisteneau, Bienville parish, La., on the 24th day of March last, Mrs. Sarah Tooke, wife of James J. Tooke, formerly of Talbotton, Ga., and daughter of Col. James Wimberley, of Muscogee county, Ga.

Sister Tooke was born 30th Oct., 1815, was raised in Talbot county, Ga., and had been an acceptable member of the M. E. Church for near thirty years, having joined the Church when quite young. Her disease was of consumptive character, and of four years continuance. More than a year ago, she said to me she had not been free of pain for five minutes at a time for three years past. She is said to have had the consumption, combined with the asthma. For six months before her death she was confined to her bed. She never complained, but on the contrary, whenever speaking of her severe afflictions, she said it was the will of God that it should be so, and that it was all right. Her faith seemed to be deeply fixed in Christ her Savior. I believe she was never known, through her long protracted sickness, to doubt her acceptance with God. She spoke of dying as she would have done under other circumstances of making a visit or taking a trip to some more or place of pleasure or delight. Spoke of what would be the condition of her family when she should be gone with perfect self-possession, and ever evinced a perfect willingness to acquiesce in the will of God. She retained her proper mind to her very last moments, and died as she had lived, manifesting strong confidence in the promises of God.

Sister Tooke leaves an affectionate husband and seven dear, kind children to mourn her departure; but the husband and three of the children that have attained the age of accountability, entertain the pleasing hope of meeting her again in a clime where

"Sickness, sorrow, pain and death
Are felt and feared no more."

Homer, La., April 19, 1858.

J. L. Wright.

P. S.—Southern Christian Advocate please copy.

Died—January 4, 1858, in Tuscaloosa county, Rachel C. Elliot, daughter of David and Jane Elliot. The deceased was born August 8, 1843. She had been for several years a member of the Methodist Church, having joined when young. Her life was exemplary, maintaining her confidence to the end. She had been a child of suffering—her last sickness was protracted. She seemed to have little hope of recovery from the first. She was much engaged in prayer, and there is no doubt but her sufferings were sanctified and her spirit fully prepared to enter into the abode of the blest ere it was called away from earth. Her end was peace. "O death, where is thy sting?" She gave a clear testimony to the power of religion to give victory in death.

She was an affectionate child and her love for her family was manifested in her dying hours. She bid all adieu and exhorted them to meet her in heaven. May all who attended her death be made wiser and better. May her death be sanctified to the good of her family. J. A. P.

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

Edited by Mary.

LITTLE PILGRIMS.

Close beside the wicket-gate,
Lo! two little children stand,
Each with grave and earnest brow,
And a pilgrim-staff in hand;
Stand to read that promise free,
"Knock, and it shall be opened."

Well they know beyond the gate
That a toilsome journey lies,
Many dangers must be met,
Ere they hope to reach the prize;
But they pray God's grace to win,
And they knock and enter in.

Children, you are pilgrims too,
Traveling onward day by dey;
Some toward the wicket-gate,
Others on a broader way.
All forgetful of the prize
Promised to you in the skies.

O! while yet your pilgrimage
Is but just begun below,
Pray that God will guide your feet
In the way that they should go;
So that when life's journey's done,
Gladly shall your prize be won!

Young Reaper.

THE HAPPY CHANGE.

"Well, you shall have your way, nad I will have mine; for you always think your way so much better," said Emily to her youngest sister Martha.

"No, dearest Emily, you are deceived if you suppose I thlak myself alwsys right and you wrong. Although I am younger than you, still I cannot help telling you what a wicked thing it is to break the Sabhath, for you know the Lord has commanded us to keep the Snbbath day holy."

"Now stay, Marths, I have been lectured long enough. I did not intend to work; I only wanted to go to see Mary Simpson, and ask her to take a walk with us this evening, for the weather is so beautiful and fine."

"But, Emily, could you not spend your Sunday evening better?"

"I do not thiak I could, Marths. And in what way do you thlnk I could spend it better?"

"Why, come, and go with me to chapel this evening; there is to be a sermoa to young people, and I am sure you will not repent going?"

"Well, I will not go to-night; somo other time when I feel more inclined to go I will go with you."

"Emily, deurest Emily, I have one thing to say to you. What advico would our dearly beloved mother, who is now dead and gone, give us were she now living? Would she wish yon to go to walk, or go to chapel? Don't you remember hearing her dying words when she called us both to her bedside, to bless her children for the last time, and how she prayed for us that God would protect us from all danger, and that as we grew in years he migbt inspire our hearts to love and serve him—and, though she was going to be separated from us on earth, that we might all meet round the throno of God?"

"Martha, I cannot bear to heur yon talk so; I will accompany you to chapel this evening; and do, my doarest Martha, pray for me, for your words trouble me much."

"Yes, Emily, I will pray for you, and you must pray for yourself; for the Lord has promised to give pardoa to all who call upon his holy name. But come, it is near six o'clock, and we shall be too late for chapel."

They both bastily dressed and went to chapel. The minister was giving out the 416th hyma:

"Fly, ye sinners, to yon mountain,"

Emily felt those words strike her heart—she saw herself a sinner in the eyes of her Maker, and longed for pardon. Tho words of her dying mother still rang in her ears. After singing and praying, the minister took his text from these words, "Behold, now is the accepted time. Behold, now is the dny of salvation." "My dear young friends," commenced the minister, "I know you all wish to be saved and go to heaven. Then pray to God to pardon yon. Pray now—pray this day—put not off till to-morrow, for yon know not what a day may bring forth.—Before another snn rises you may be launched into eternity. That grim tyrant, Death, may now be watching you, to seize you before this night closes; and if you are not prepared, oh, how awful will be your condition! I entreat you to give your hearts to God, and let it be to-night before you close your eyes in sleep," etc., etc.

Emily whispered to her sister, and said, let us go out of the chapel, for I have tho hendacho very bad and feel very faint." Martha instsatly complied with her sister's wish. As soon as they got out Emily burst into tears. "O Martha, Martha! what shall I do? Pray for me!" Martha did pray for her—that God would bless and pardon her. When they arrived homo, Emily fell down on her knees and cried, "God be merciful to me a sinner! Pardon me, I beseech thee, O Lord!" She wrestled and prayed for two hours, and God did hear her prayer.—He burst her boads nsunder, and the once thoughtless Emily became a steady, zealous christian, and an ornament to society; and I have no donbt, if she had lived, she would have done much good, but God saw fit to take her away, and she died rejoicing in the God of her salvation.

THE DISOBEDIENT KITTEN.

"Now," said an old puss to one of her children, as she washed her face and paws, "I charge you, Kitty, not to go into the next gentleman's yard, for great dog Jowler lies there: he has horrid teeth, and a terrible snarl, and he is always on the look-out for stray cats. Remember, and keep at homo; we have a sung garden, a sweet baymow, kind friends, capital tit-bits, and work enough—rats and mice a plenty. So, do not stroll off with bad compaay, visiting places where you have no business to be, and disgracing your bringing up; for you know better, Kitty, you do."

But Kitty had a saucy look; she boxed her mother's ears, in play to be sure, hoisted her tail, and away she frisked after a dead leaf.—Kit did not look nt all like minding, and after her mother had gone to bed on the haymow she kept up her mooulight rambles, golag abont nobody knows where, and cutting up all sorts of capers, like a silly little Kit as she was.—One night, when she and some of her thoughtless compaulons were scudding across Jowler's yard, he, much disturbed by their noiso at an hour when he thought all hoaest folks ought to be a bed and asleep, started up and made after them in a violent rage; and poor Kitty, in her fright, got entangled in some briar bushes, and so fell into Jowler's power. He seized her by the neck with his terrible mouth, shook the breath out of her body, and tossed her over the fence.

"O! O!" cried Mary and Willy, when they found their little favorite stiff and cold the next morning. "O," cried their mother, pussy's mistress, "you little puss! she bid fair to be an excellent mouser." "O dear!" mewed tho old cat; "O dear! such are the fruits of disobedience. How many a wilful child comes to an untimely end!"

It is bad to commit sin, but it is a great wickedness indeed to plead for it, especially to plead for Baal, that idol, whatever it is, which possesses that room in the heart which God should have.

THE GREATEST
Medical Discovery
OF THE AGE.

MR. KENNEDY, of Roxbury, has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures

EVERY KIND OF HUMOR,

From the worst Scrofula down to a Common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases, both thunder humor. He has now in his possession over one hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.
Two bottles are warranted to cure a nursing sore mouth.
One to three bottles will cure the worst kind of pimples on the face.
Two or three bottles will clear the system of biles.
Two bottles are warranted to cure the worst canker in the mouth and stomach.
Three to five bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Erysipelas.
One or two bottles are warranted to cure all humor in the eyes.
Two bottles are warranted to cure running of the ears and blotches among the hair.
Four to six bottles are warranted to cure corns and running ulcers.
One bottle will cure scaly eruptions of the skin.
Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of ringworm.
Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the most desperate case of rheumatism.
Three to four bottles are warranted to cure the rheum.
Five to eight bottles will cure the worst case of scrofula.
A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranied when the above quantity is taken.
Nothing looks so improbable to those who have in vain tried all the wonderful medicines of the day, as that a common weed growing on the pastores, and along old stone walls, should cure every humor in the system; yet it is a fixed fact. If you have a humor, it has to start. There are no IFS nor ANIS, buina nor ha's about it suiting some cases, but not yours. I peddled over a thousand bottles of it in the vicinity of Boston. I know the effects of it in every case. It has already done some of the greatest cures ever done in Massachusetts. I give it to children a year old, to old people of sixty. I have seen poor, puny, wormy-looking children, whose flesh was soft and flabby, restored to a perfect state of health by one bottle.
To those who are subject to a sick head ache, one bottle will always cure it. It gives great relief in catarrh and dizziness. Some who have taken it had been costive for years, and have been regulated by it. Where the body is sound it works quite easy, but where there is any derangement of the functions of nature, it will cause very singular feelings, but you must not be alarmed; they always disappear in from four days to a week. There is never a bad result from it; on the contrary, when that feeling is gone you will feel yourself like a new person. I heard some of the most extravagant encomiums of it that ever man listened to.
Manufactured by DONALD KENNEDY, No. 120 Warren street, Roxbury, Mass. Price $1 per bottle.

DOCTOR HOOFLAND'S
CELEBRATED
GERMAN BITTERS.
PREPARED BY
Dr. C. M. JACKSON, Philad'a, Pa.
WILL EFFCTUALLY CURE
LIVER COMPLAINT, DYSPEPSIA, JAUNDICE,
Chronic or Nervous Debility, Diseases of the Kidneys, and all diseases arising from a disordered Liver or Stomach.

Such as Constipation, Inward Piles, to Fullness or Blood the Head, Acidity on the Stomach, Nausea, Heartburn, Disgust for Food, Fullness or Weight in the Stomach, Sour Eructations, Sinking or Flottering at the Pit of the Stomach, Swimming of the Head, Hurried, and difficull Breathing, Fluttering at the Heart. Choking or Suffocating Sensations when in a lying posture. Dimness of Vision, Dots of Webs before the Sight. Fever and Dull pain in the Head. Deficiency of Perspiration, Yellowness of the Skin, and Eyes, Pain in the Side, Back, Chest, Limbs, etc., Sudden Flushes of Heat, Burning in the Flesh, Constant Imaginings of Evil and great Depression of Spirits.
The proprietor, in calling the attention of the public to this preparation, does so with a feeling of the utmost confidence in its virtues and adaptation to the diseases for which it is recommended.
It is no new and untried article, but one that has stood the test of a ten years' trial before the American people, and its reputation and sale is unrivalled by any similar preparations extant. The testimony in its favor given by the most prominent and well-known Physicians and individuals in all parts of the country is immense, and a careful perusal of the Almanac, published annually by the proprietor, and to be had gratis of any of his Agents, cannot but satisfy the most skeptical that this remedy is really deserving the great celebrity it has obtained.

CAIRO, Egypt, Feb., 1858.

THE MOSK OF AMR.

In old Cairo is seen this edifice, built by the Saracen conqueror, whose name it bears. It is a building of peculiar interest, more so than almost any other in the country. It is said to have been composed of one thousand and one columns, and no two alike. On erecting it he is said to have exclaimed, "With this mosk the religion of St. Elam rises—with its fall perishes the faith of our holy prophet. This nation perisheth with it." And his prophecies seem to be fulfilling to the letter. It has been a grand and noble building, covering a vast space of ground, with an open court within in its center and a fountain for ablutions. A corridor surrounds this magnificent temple, with a double row of columns in front so close together that they almost meet. One of them has a traditional virtue attached to it, and it is called the "Eye of the Needle." If a person can squeeze through it he is entitled to Muhommed's parsdise, and it is considered salitary in healing diseases. One of our good friends, a clergyman from America, of small stature, passed through enhurt, but with difficulty. One row of arches has nearly fallen to the ground, and its broken columns lie scattered about. The fountain in the center is crumbling away, its roof falling and the fragments hanging like broken icicles, ready to dissolve by the rays of the sun, until not a particle is seen where they rose. The water is no longer there for holy ablutions, and the worship in that temple seems deserted, while no one puts forth a hand to stay the progress of its ruins, as if its destiny was sealed by a futality inevitable. The viceroy of Egypt, with millions at command, takes no interest in this noble building, but leaves it to the hand of time, which is slow in its operations, the climate being so dry that buildings, which in our country if made of such slight materials as most of these would be swept away in a few months, will last here for years. That which is composed of stone in this building remains, but the unburnt brick fall to pieces. This mosk, the oldest in Egypt, was constructed 638 after the christian era, and in a form to resemble the works of nature—its open court as if surrounded by a forest of arching trees, which upon one side are so thick as almost to resemble forest scenery. Standing at one end and looking down through the vast rows of columns and arches, there is an impression felt like that of nature divested of imagery in the works of art. The tomb of Amr is in one corner of this building, enclosed by a wall with a latticed door and window where we could stand in the spacious temple and view his monument, and around upon the thousand columns brought from Grecian and Roman temples to adorn this mighty one for the Moslem's faith, built upon the ruins of the ancient Egyptian Babylon, whom Amr founded a city, now degenerated into the most miserable Arab village in the suburbs of the capital. No dwellings can surpass these wretched habitations of mud walls, where the goats, donkeys, chickens and pigs, with the families, all live together. The goats feed upon their house tops, covered with straw, flat and a few feet from the ground.

The mosk known as Gama Taylean, founded 879 years after Christ, is the oldest in the metropolis, having been erected nearly 100 years before any other part of the city. This edifice is large with an open square and fountain in the center. Its peculiarity is the introduction of the pointed arch, which was established 100 years before its introduction into England. The windows are very small and protected by thin bars of wood or iron, which form a sort of lattice work for the circulation of air. The minaret is unlike any other in Cairo, having a winding staircase around the whole reaching to the top. We ascended this after climbing over broken walls and through gates guarded by a fierce set of Mohammedans looking out for backsheesh. From the summit we enjoyed one of the finest prospects in the city, which lay like a map beneath us—the pyramids, the Nile, the sandy desert, the citadel, the tomb of the Mamelukes and the Mukattan hills, with another which is called the chair of Moses; for at this place it is said he looked over the whole camp of Israel as it was arranged to leave Egypt—the very place where they, in all probability, started for the promised land. The mosk, as it lay beneath us, showed its extensive plan; and its roof, with its domes and cornices, presented a singular combination of curious architecture, which will soon crumble away, as no effort is made to stay its progress. The windows are broken and the fountain despoiled of its beauty; while its open court and passages are lined with a set of people the most wretched, squalid and miserable that it is possible to imagine, who gathered around us in fifties, crying out "backsheesh," and beating our poor donkey boy because they could not get more than we gave them.

THE CAMP OF THE CESARS.

This fortress forms one of the most interesting sites of Cairo. Strabo, in speaking of it says: "In sailing up the river we meet with Babylon, a strong fortress built by some Babylonians who had taken refuge there and had obtained permission from the king to make a settlement. At present it is an encampment of one of the three legions which garrison Egypt." The entrance to this grand fortress by its splendid archway is completely filled up with sand, and nothing is seen but the cornice which rose in an arch above and the Roman eagle carved upon a stone under one of its corners, entire. The bastions on each side are still grand and imposing in their ruins, and are beautiful in design. The third has crumbled away. The walls of this great camp are like adamant; the cement, perfectly Roman, which unites the brick, is as solid as a rock—unlike any Egyptian manufacture. This was the central point of Egypt, from which all the roads were known to radiate, and the most important position in the time of the Cæsars. It covers a vast space of ground, and we entered through its massive, heavy gate into its interior departments by narrow, winding passages, like the streets of a city—a labyrinth, from which a person could never find his way out without a clue. We passed from the halls of justice to courts and palaces by ascending old heavy stone steps, winding about up vast heights through these antiquated walls which unclose the encampment. In this climate the stories of all the buildings are double the height of ours. The difference of the materials which enclose the great dilapidated stairway were shown us by a friend: some marked by the reign of Nebuchadnezzar in large stones; over them Roman brick with cement: how true we can not tell; but antiquated they surely are. Some parts of the buildings show great rudeness of architecture; others a degree of perfection in contrast. The open court with seats, was primitive; and while sitting there we began to people those halls in imagination with Roman heroes and warriors, who mounted these same steps in military glory and occupied the same seats; and a Mark Anthony, perhaps, following the light footsteps of Egypt's fairy queen, Cleopatra, and casting all his honors and spoils at her feet. The upper rooms of the building—which are very beautiful and look out upon the city, and which we reached by many more flights of steps and through passages and halls—might have been, some one of them, her banqueting hall, where she dissolved the precious pearl to surprise her enamored captive by the extravagance of her meal. The windows are large, occupying almost one side of a room, without glass, and elegantly designed, covered with a lattice work of carved wood, giving air as well as shade, so essential in sunny Egypt; and then the doors opened upon the flat roofs, out upon which we walked and had a fine view of the peculiar oriental scene. But oh how changed since the time of the Cæsars! The glittering helmet and plume enter here no more, and the passage where the horse and the rider passed through in triumph of earthly glory into the open court is closed with sand, and the palm and the olive now flourish and silence reigns in the vast halls once filled with the legions of the Roman army. "Behold, therefore, I am against thee and against thy rulers: And I will make the land of Egypt utterly waste and desolate: From Migdol to Tyre, even unto the borders of Ethiopia."

The hall of justice has become transformed into a Coptic church. There is another also in one of the rooms above, with some fine carving upon wood. We were shown a massive gate in our passage, of such heavy proportions that a kind of saw was fixed inside of its bolt with many teeth attached, signifying that it took so many inches at a time to open it. In another part of the camp, lower down, is a place of worship called Jeremiah's synagogue—a singular looking place, dark and dusty, but still interesting from its associations with that people. The throne of the high priest has an arch of fine wood adorned with Hebrew characters nicely carved upon it, still visible. A little curtained recess, in the wall revealed their rolls, well kept, and in another remote corner of the building, high up, another curtained recess or closet, beneath which the holy fire was kept burning. In this place tradition says the manuscripts of Jeremiah's Lamentations were safely secreted, and that they were written here. We passed around this synagogue into a dark, winding passage leading down beneath the building to a well, which must have been used for the camp in ancient times.

Not far from the Pretorium we entered a dark, narrow alley through an old, massive gate and passed into another Coptic church called St. Stepheas, an obscure looking building of the same character as the other churches.—Here tradition says St. Peter wrote his epistles. "The church that is at Babylon elected together with you, saluteth you: so does Marcus, my son." The Copts claim the honor of the epistles being written from this ancient Babylon. This church is not far from the one built, as they say, over the grotto where Joseph and the Mother of our Lord were hidden on their flight into Egypt.

These Copts are a peculiar people—perfectly distinct in character and position. They have suffered so much from persecution that their countenances wear a subdued and grave aspect, and they are looked down upon by the natives. Their black turbans add to the peculiarity of expression, and there is no mistaking a Copt. They are the only people who take the Bible for their text-book, although they have some traditions. They suffer no innovations from former customs, but adhere strictly to those of their fathers in ceremonies of worship and all their institutions. Education has been sadly neglected among them. Mrs Leider, the wife of the English missionary, has labored 20 years here and done much for the Copts, as they have patronized her efforts and received great benefit. We visited the school, which was composed of 90 girls. It is conducted on the monitorial plan—two Coptic girls acting as monitors.—They are instructed in the Bible, catechism, and useful branches of housekeeping, and one part of the day is devoted to plain sewing and needle-work. The girls are all dressed in their oriental costume with veils, but uncovered faces. There were a few with blue veils; these were Mahommedans, and this the mark of distinction. Some with red; these are worn by girls betrothed, even at the age of 6 or 8 years. Some Armenians were pointed out, of a fairer complexion. The Copts are all dark. They are all taught in the Arabic translation of the Bible, as it would be useless to teach them in any other language than their own.

We visited the Greek and Armiuian churches. Neither of them suffer the women to worship with the men; but they occupy a gallery—one with a wiery net work all around it, through which they could look into the body of the church; the other with a lattice of wood, high up. The women had no books, but seemed to be repeating a prayer and bowing. The Greek women appeared more listless in devotion than the Armenians. Their church was more splendid and the congregation larger.

THE REVIVAL.

Our exchanges still teem with accounts of the progress of the great awakening. The N. Y. Examiner collects from correspondence and exchanges for April 23,000 as the number of hopeful conversions. The numbers are reported from places, for the most part, where the work is just beginning or in full progress. We give the report from one state as a fair specimen of the rest:

RELIGIOUS INCIDENTS AND ITEMS.

A pious merchant in Chicago who was doing business with a country customer, unconsciously pulled out his watch and said, "It is almost 12 o'clock—almost time for the prayer-meeting." "What!" said his astonished customer, "do you have a prayer-meeting at this hour?" "Yes, for business men, at Metropolitan Hall; will you go?" They went together. The sinner was awakened. He returned home—was converted—his partner was converted—a clerk was awakened—a noon prayer-meeting started there, and the future results of the simple remark, "It is almost time for the prayer-meeting," are known only to God.

At a noon prayer-meeting in Chicago, it was lately stated that a pious gentleman had been out of town, and was returning in the cars—He was introduced to a lady, and among other topics of conversation, he spoke about the welfare of her soul. Not more than ten minutes were taken up with this subject, and yet impressions were made on her mind never to be effaced. They separated and in a few days the gentleman received a letter from the lady, informing him of her ceaversion, and saying that his short conversation with her was blessed of God to this happy result. "How glad you must feel," said a friend to him, "that you improved that opportunity!" "Yes," he replied, "but how ashamed I am that I have lost so many opportunities equally good."

The revival prospers all over Upper Canada; in Lower Canada it is chiefly confined to Quebec and Montreal. In Montreal the Union prayer-meetings have been held as often as three times a day. Union prayer-meetings are held at Hamilton, St. Thomas, and other places; at St. Catherine's there have been over 100 conversions.

Of the Senior Class in Jefferson College, which consists of seventy-six members, all but thirteen are now members of the church, or profess to entertain a hope in Christ. It is thought that at least forty members of the class will enter some Theological Seminary in the fall.

President Stearns, of Amherst College, says, "Nearly three-quarters of our number were previously professors of religion, about twenty of them having taken their stand publicly on the side of Christ some months before. Of the remainder, between forty and fifty have been hopefully converted during the term, leaving less than twenty in the whole college undecided. Besides these, ten or twelve who had once been professors, some of them giving little, if any evidence of piety, were awakened and converted anew, while nearly the whole body of Christian students seemed to receive a fresh baptism of the Spirit. Of the Senior Class, but three or four remain who have not openly commenced the Christian life. Of the Junior Class but one, and he a serious inquiror, if not a Christian. Of the Sophomore Class four or five. Of the Freshmen nine or ten."

Twenty converted Romanists have lately united with the German Methodist church in Bloomington, Ill.

OUR PUBLIC MEN.

"It is a pleasant thing, observes Lord John Russell, in his Life of the Poet Moore, "to reflect that the men of our age and nation, whose characters have been unfolded to the world by the publication of their letters and their lives, have been proved generally to be men of honest hearts and pure intentions. A century has made a great change for the better. If we compare Wellington to Marlborough, Southey and Moore to Pope and Swift, we shall find that the standard of moral worth, though still far too low, has been vastly raised in the period which has elapsed since the commencement of the 13th century."

Sanctified disappointments lead to amendment; we inquire what is God's will, and are ready to do it.

LADY OF ENCOURAGEMENT.

Oh! what if the prospect be clouded,
And what if the sunlight be fled;
The bright sun himself may be shrouded,
And the bright crown be torn from his head
But he bends never long to the rigor
Of the tempest that beats on his form;
And he comes forth anon full of vigor,
More glorious because of the storm.

From the sun let the soul take its morn),
Nor shrink 'neath the battle of life;
Near the cypress grows ever the laurel,
And we pluck, as we please, from the strife,
Though the foe presses on with his legions,
And we bend for the hour to his will,
Keep you calm in the turbulent regions,
And the triumph enures to you still.

GILMORE SIMMS.

JOHN WESLEY AND LITTLE CHILDREN.

The London Watchman says: "Many facts, illustrative of Mr. Wesley's notice of little boys, might be gathered before the present generation passes away, which would place his kindly feeling toward juveniles in a more favorable light than the extract from Redding's 'Fifty Years' Recollections.' That extract, says a correspondent of the Watchman, reminded me of a conversation with Mary Birch, an old disciple in Leeds, some years ago. She informed me, that, on one of Mr. Wesley's visits, he was going to preach at the old Chapel. She and her son William, then about four years of age, were standing near the pulpit stairs, the chapel being crowded to excess. The boy contrived to escape from her side, and took his seat on the pulpit steps. When an opening was made for the venerable man to pass, she saw her child seated on the center of a step, which would impede Mr. Wesley's progress, but she could not reach him. Mr. Wesley went forward, and, instead of being harsh with the intruder, he said to him, 'My little boy, will you have some spice, or a kiss?' The boy said, 'Some spice, sir.' 'Well, then, I will give you both,' said Mr. Wesley. He gave him a lozenge from his waistcoat pocket, and kissed him. He then took him by the hand, and gently drawing him on one side, passed into the pulpit."

Mr. Wesley took a deep interest in the early conversion of children. In his Journal for 1746 are two instances, almost in juxtaposition.

"In the afternoon, being at Mrs. Fenwick's, and seeing a child there ten or twelve years old, I asked, 'Does your daughter know Christ, or know that she has need of him?' She replied with much concern, 'I fear not; nothing has ever affected her at all.' Immediately that word came into my mind, 'Before they call, I will answer.' I was going to say, 'Come, let us call upon God to show her she has need of a Savior;' but before the words were pronounced, the child turned away her face, and began crying as if she would break her heart. I could get no word from her but, 'My sins, my sins!' We then besought God to carry on his own work."

"I was glad of having an opportunity here of talking with a child I had heard of. She was convinced of sin some weeks before by the words of her elder brother, (about eight years of age,) dying as a hundred years old, in the full triumph of faith. I asked her abruptly, 'Do you love God?' She said, 'Yes, I do love him with all my heart.' I said, 'Why do you love him?' She answered, 'Because he has saved me.' I asked, 'How has he saved you?' She replied, 'He has taken away my sins.' I said, 'How do you know that?' She answered, 'He told me himself on Saturday, "Thy sins are forgiven thee;" and I believe him; and I pray to him without a book.' I was afraid to die; but now I am not afraid to die; for if I die I shall go to him.'"

COL. BENTON'S RELIGIOUS VIEWS.

Rev. Mr. Cowan, who delivered the funeral sermon over the remains of Col. Benton at St. Louis on the 16th inst., says that the deceased gave to those who had the privilege of being with him in his last illness, "the most satisfactory evidence of having made his peace with God." He also related the following incident:

"The mind of the deceased doubtless has long been interested in a greater or less degree, on the matter of his salvation. It may not be improper here to mention a circumstance which occurred in the year 1851. I was engaged in a protracted meeting, in Scott county, in the town of Benton. The deceased visited the place during the meeting. He attended the exercise which took place during his stay in town. He listened attentively to the sermon. My text was, 'Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian.' At the close he came up and took me by the hand, and placing his mouth close to my ear, he remarked, in allusion to my text, 'It is all my own case—it is all my own case,' and burst into a flood of tears. Those, therefore, who have intimately known his history, especially in the latter years of his life, have not been surprised at the happy termination of his earthly career."

CLERICAL ELOCUTION.

The New York "Churchman" is very pointed in its comments upon what it characterizes as the appearance of "irreverence, lightness, or flippancy" of some clergymen in the public reading of the Scriptures. It particularly condemns "the' secular practice of pronouncing the ed in words of such ending," and declares that it is unbefitting the solemnity of public worship. "More especially" (says the Churchman) "where such words occur as damn'ed, sav'ed, preach'ed, and the like, to say damn'd, sav'd, preach'd, has a flippancy about it quite out of character with the solemn subject in hand." The writer quotes distinguished authorities upon the subject, and adds: "As well might we tolerate the introduction of such expressions as can't and won't and couldn't and wouldn't and don't, and the like, in the reading of God's Word, as to reconciled to the clipping and corrupting of the pronunciation in such instances as those we have referred to."

MANLINESS.

Learn from the earliest days to insure your principles against the peril of ridicule. You can no more exercise your reason if you live in the constant dread of laughter than you can enjoy your life if you are in the constant terror of death. If you think it right to differ from the times, and to make a point of morals, do it; however rustic, however antiquated, however pedantic it may appear, do it—not for insolence, but seriously and grandly, as a man who wore a soul of his own in his bosom, and did not wait till it was breathed into him by the breath of fashion.

There is no greater argument for trusting in God for the future, than remembering his kindness and faithfulness in the past.

ANECDOTE OF MR. CLAY.

The following is related by a highly respectable Baptist minister of Kentucky, illustrative of a very important duty. We commend it, says the German Reformed Messenger, to the careful perusal of all our "men-fearing" heads of families.

He had just commenced preaching, and had for a few years been married and keeping house. He was in humble circumstances, and of a limited education—modest and retiring to a fault. It was with great difficulty that he could summon resolution to address a congregation. Mr. Clay, in the discharge of his duty as a lawyer, came to the neighborhood of our informant ('Clover Bottom,' Woodford county,) to have surveys made of some land, then in litigation. He was accompanied by another lawyer of note. They made the humble cabin of brother B. their home. On the first night they stayed with him, our brother was reduced to great extremity. He was in the habit of holding family worship morning and evening; but he trembled at the thought of doing so in the presence of guests so distinguished as Mr. Clay and his friend. His little children were becoming sleepy, and his wife, by significant gestures, suggested that the time for prayer had come. Brother B. hinted to his guests that perhaps "they would choose to go to bed." But Mr. Clay, with great politeness, said that "he did not feel at all sleepy, and that, unless it were intrusive, he would be happy to enjoy his society longer." Of course brother B. could not object. Still, the matter of prayer could not be postponed without sending the children to bed in advance, which was contrary to his settled principles of procedure. At last, with considerable trepidation, he stated to Mr. Clay and his friend what was his custom, and said that they could stay and unite with his family in their devotions, or retire, at their option. Mr. Clay promptly, and with some feeling, replied that "they would remain by all means; that the earliest recollections of life were associated with such exercises; that his father was a Baptist minister, and his mother was still a member of that communion, and that they had taught him to reverence the institutions of religion, and none more so than that of family worship."

Brother B. then proceeded with his wonted exercises, but with much fear and trembling. He says that he never felt so much embarrassed in his life. When the season of prayer was passed, Mr. Clay approached him and said: "Mr. B, never again feel the least hesitation in the discharge of your duty to God on account of the presence of men. I saw your embarrassment, and remained on purpose that you might never feel it again. Remember, my dear sir, that every man of sense will respect the individual who is not ashamed to acknowledge his dependence upon his Maker; and he deserves only contempt who can cherish any other feeling than reverence for 'the consecrated hour of man in audience with Deity.' And what are myself and friends here, but frail and feeble mortals, like you and your children, indebted for all that we are to the great Fountain of Good, and dependent on Him for every blessing of life! We and you are destined to the same grave, and to the same final retribution. The king upon his throne and the beggar in his rags are the same in the eyes of the Omniscient. Think of this, Mr. B., and you will never hesitate again to engage in prayer to God on account of the presence of men. For myself, I would rather know that the prayer of a pious man, no matter how humble his position in life, were ascending in my behalf, than to have the wildest applause of listening senators."

Mr. Clay and his friend then retired for the night. Mr. B. says it was the best lesson of his life. He afterwards heard the great statesman in all the grandeur of his eloquence; but he insists that in no effort he ever heard, was he so impressive as on the occasion named.

THE PHILOSOPHER'S STONE.

It is said that John Randolph once suddenly rose up in his seat in the House of Representatives, and cried out, "Mr. Speaker, Mr. Speaker, I have found the philosopher's stone. It is, Pay as you go."

John Randolph said many wise things, but perhaps no one better than this.

"Pay as you go," and you can walk the streets with a manly front, looking at men in the eye without flinching. You will not have to cross the way to avoid a dun, or look into the shop windows to avoid seeing a creditor.

"Pay as you go," and when you laugh, it will be a right honest and hearty one.

"Pay as you go," and when you sleep you will not dream of bills which you can't pay, or wake up to credits which you cannot support.

"Pay as you go," and your home will be your home—happy, cheerful, contented, safe.

"Pay as you go." But there is one debt which you cannot pay—the debt of shortcoming and sin to your Lord and Sovereign. That can only be cancelled by the blood of Jesus Christ. Accept his suretyship and you will then act only be square with this world, but what is far more important, square with the terrible reckonings of the world to come.—The Child's Paper.

TRAINING STEERS TO WORK.

There is but one right way to train steers to the yoke, and that is by getting them into a yard from which they cannot jump. Here keep them going 'round until you can handle them easily; handling well is one of the first and most important points to be gained in the training of steers. If they are to be gentle cattle, they must be learned to handle well. They can be learned to handle gently by feeding them nubbins of corn, from the hand, rubbing and scratching them, etc. When you can approach them at pleasure and handle them, put on the yoke and keep them going around you until they obey your voice and motion. One man can train several pairs of steers at the same time. They should be yoked on different sides, and driven in the yard until thoroughly broken to drive; then take them out, and if you want an up-headed, fast-walking pair, do not put them to drawing heavy loads at first, but load them by degrees until you have them trained to work.

Young steers can be discouraged and much injured at even light work, such as dragging, and should not be kept at it until worried. The advantages of this manner of training steers over the usual mode are numerous, not the least of which is being able to accomplish more in four days, than by the old way in so many months.

HEARTS.—Like flakes of snow that fall unperceived upon the earth, the seemingly unimportant events of life succeed one another. As the snow gathers together, so are our habits formed; no single flake that is added to the pile produces a sensible change—no single action creates—however it may exhibit—a man's character.

EDITOR TURNED SHEPHERD.

George W. Kendall, one of the proprietors of the New Orleans Picayune, owns large estates in Texas. Writing to a friend in Boston, he describes his mode of life as follows:

You may, perhaps, wish to learn the mode and manner of my life hereaways; let me enlighten you. Three days in each week I ordinarily pass at my rancho here, three or four miles from New Braunfels, with my family; two days I spend at the Estancia, a place of mine, 30 miles west, and where my flocks of sheep are pastured; and the other two I am on the road backwards and forwards, my conveyance an old Jersey wagon, with two trusty horses. There is one gap of eight miles on the road without a house, and another of twelve; yet the way is not lonesome. I never pass over it without seeing an abundance of deer, turkies, ducks, partridges and the like; I carry alongside of me a double barrel gun, a Sharpe's rifle and one of Colt's revolvers and some kind of game is sure to grace my wagon, both going and coming.

My sheep now number some 3000, and finer flocks you never set eyes upon; in May I hope to be able to count upwards of 4000, as my lambs come in April. I have, besides, a fine gang of brood mares, besides some forty cows, and, like the elder Mr. Norval, "to feed my flock and increase my store" is now "my constant care." Did I not once tell you that I had much rather see my lambs skipping upon the hills and playing in the valleys than to witness the pirouetts and entrechats of the best corps de ballet that ever existed. If I did not say as much to you it is nevertheless true. And since I have been here on this spot in person, now nearly two years, I have had extraordinary good luck; I have not lost two per cent. of my sheep per annum, and when I tell you that 20 per cent is the average loss the world over you may well imagine that my success is remarkable. I never sell a ewe or anything which produces; I have pasturage for 20,000 sheep and any number of horses and cattle, and to see all this space covered is now what I am working for.

ANECDOTE OF A GOOD WIFE.

It is no uncommon thing for Christian people, under the pressure of worldly business, to neglect family prayer. The Christian Herald states that many years ago, when the country about Cincinnati was new, a Christian farmer, who had employed a number of hands to aid him in clearing his lands, took it into his head that he would not have family prayer in the morning, because the time he would spend on so many hands was more, he thought, than he could afford to lose. He had made up his mind to get rich in haste, and determined that religion should heed to business. When he informed his pious wife of his purpose, she expostulated with him, but in vain. Morning came, and the workmen were hurried to breakfast, and hurried out to work without a breath of prayer.

The next morning the farmer and his men went out, as usual, to their work. The sun began to climb up the sky, but no breakfast horn was heard. They grew angry, and looked anxiously toward the house; they listened, but still the expected summons did not come. After waiting an hour or two beyond the usual time, they went to the house. No table was set, no coffee was boiling on the fire, no food was cooking over or before it. The good wife was knitting quietly, with the big Bible open on her lap.

"What does this mean?" cried her husband; "why isn't our breakfast ready?"

"I thought you were in such a hurry about your work that you would not have time to eat it."

"Have time to eat it! Do you think we can live without eating?"

"You can live without eating as well as without praying. The spirit needs the bread of heaven as much as the body needs the bread of earth."

"Well, well," said the farmer, "get us some breakfast, and we will have prayers again every morning, no matter how busy we are, or how many workmen I have."

She got the breakfast, and he kept his word. The lesson was a good one, and was never forgotten.

DON'T DESPISE SMALL THINGS.

Some years ago a gentleman visiting a farmer in Telland, Connecticut, took from his pocket a small potato, which somehow had got in there at home. It was thrown out with a smile, and the farmer taking it in his hand to look at it, a curious little boy of twelve, standing at his elbow, asked him what it was. "Oh," said he, "nothing but a potato, my boy; take and plant it, and you shall have all that you can raise from it till you are free." The lad took it, and the farmer thought no more about it at the time. The boy, however, not despising small potatoes, carefully divided it into as many pieces as he could find eyes, and put them into the ground. The product was carefully put aside in the fall, and planted in the spring, and so on till the fourth year, when, the yield being good, the actual product was four hundred bushels! The farmer seeing the prospect that the potato field, would, by another year, cover his whole farm, asked to be released from his promise.

HANDSOME MEN.

"We were speaking of handsome men, the other evening, and I was wondering why K—— had so lost the beauty for which, five years ago, he was famous. 'Oh, it's because he never did anything,' said B.; 'he never worked, thought, suffered. You must have the mind chiseling away at the features, if you want handsome middle-aged men.' Since hearing that remark, I have been on the watch to see whether it was true—and it is. A handsome man who does nothing but eat and drink, grows flabby, and the fine lines of his features are lost; but the hard thinker has an admirable sculptor at work, keeping his fine lines in repair, and constantly going over his face to improve the original design.

RIDICULE.—The quality of turning men into ridicule, and exposing those we converse with, is the qualification of little, ungenerous tempers. The greatest blemishes are often found in the most shining characters; but what an absurd thing it is to pass over all the valuable parts of a man, and fix our attention upon his infirmities—to discern his imperfections more than his virtues!

It is good to appear for God when we are called to it, though there be few or none to second us, because God can incline the hearts of those to stand by us, from whom we little expect it. Let us do our duty, and then trust God with our safety.

The man who is proud of his money, has rarely anything better to be proud of.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, MAY 15, 1858.

LAST SABBATH.

Our Sabbath the Methodist Churches of the city and Algiers enjoyed the ministrations of brethren from the Presbyterian Churches, now meeting in the General Assembly. The congregations, as far as we have heard, were delighted and edified. We heard sermons at the Carondelet Street Church, from Rev. Dr. Baird, of Mississippi, in the morning, and from Rev. Mr. Hoyt, of South Carolina, at night. These brethren gave us the pith and marrow of the gospel, and their sermons came to their hearers with a heavenly unction. Our colored brethren of Wesley Chapel were not neglected. Rev. Mr. Galbraith, of Baltimore, preached to them at 4 P. M. The sermon was one of great fitness and acceptability. There were present a goodly number from the North and West. They expressed themselves highly gratified, and congratulated the pastor on having such a congregation to preach to. So far as we are able to learn the Methodists of New Orleans are doing what is in their power to entertain the members of the assembly. This is as it ought to be.—The presence of these men of God in our families will their ministrations in our pulpits will bring a blessing which no hospitality can remunerate. Our pulpits will be occupied on next Sabbath by members of the assembly. The following are the appointments for the day.

McGehee Church.—May 16th, Sabbath, 11 A. M., a sermon by Rev. John Steele. Same evening, 7½ P. M., a sermon by Rev. D. McQueen.

Trinity Street Church.—May 16th, Sabbath, 11 A. M., a sermon by Rev. D. X. Junkin, D. D. Same evening, 7½ P. M., a sermon by Rev. Dr. [illegible].

Morgan Street Church.—May 16th, Sabbath, 11 A. M., a sermon by Rev. D. Stevenson. Same evening, 7½ P. M., a sermon by Rev. D. T. Carnahan.

Howe Chapel.—May 16th, Sabbath, 11 A. M., a sermon by Rev. D. Tully. Same evening, 7½ P. M., a sermon by Rev. R. D. Morris.

Church in Algiers.—May 16th, Sabbath, 11 A. M., a sermon by Rev. Alexander Swaney.

Wesley Chapel.—May 16th, 4 P. M., a sermon by Rev. H. B. P. Willis.

Wesley Chapel.—May 16th, P. M., a sermon by Rev. A. D. Montgomery.

The Advocate of next week will contain the Address of the Bishops, besides full proceedings of the General Conference.

The General Assembly is expected to adjourn on Tuesday next.

Answers.—Atlantic Monthly.—In the Advocate, of April 24, we published some verses called "Day Break"—verses they are of singular beauty and poetic merit. Through some inadvertence we failed to credit them to the Atlantic Monthly, from which they were taken. We cheerfully make the acknowledgment.

The Reformation Revived.—There is remarkable news from Bohemia. It is reported that the Reformation put down in this country by the Romish Church centuries ago, by fire and sword, is likely to break forth again with renewed power. The priests are generally prepared to leave the Church, if some provision can be made for their support. Dr. Nowotny, who has become a Protestant, gives the names of thirty-five who, like himself, have forsaken the Church, and left Bohemia in search of a livelihood. It is thought that fully two-thirds of those who remain are ready for a similar movement when Providence opens the way.—It is to be hoped they may carry the people with them, and still retain their fields of labor in their native land.

Setting an Example.—The Buffalo Advocate says: "As the Southern Church is to have a General Convention in May, we hope that the measures of reform which have been generally and fully discussed in their papers may become the law of the Church. Lay-representation, with some other modifications are demanded. Our Southern brethren now have the opportunity of setting an example to their Northern brethren which may influence favorably the General Conference of 1860."

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Natchez, May 7, 1858.

We have been holding meetings in the M. E. Church in this city for more than five weeks, and the religious interest still increases. We have four services every day, to-wit: At half-past 5 in the morning, at 10, at 4, and at night. Last evening nineteen were at the altar, and yesterday morning twenty-one. God is doing great things for us in Natchez, "whereof we are glad." Numbers are being added to the Church. J. P. Lindsman.

Mr. Editor: We have just closed a protracted meeting at Isabella Church, on the Centerville circuit, which continued three days. The work commenced unexpectedly at a week-day appointment, at the close of a sermon by Rev. Thos. Green, warm from the heart and bedewed with the Holy Ghost. It had its desired effect, causing sinners to weep, mourners to pray and Christians to rejoice. Power was in every word, and his countenance was as if the light of glory reflected upon it. There were two conversions and four accessions, and the membership graciously revived. This is sometimes uncommon in this country, as it was not in the season of the year that revivals generally commence. But notwithstanding the call to temporal things, we should remember that we are commanded to put our house in order. I left the altar crowded with weeping penitents, and my constant desire and prayer to God is, that they might be saved. B. W. Brown.

The number of probationers received in the M. E. Church in New Jersey is, for the last six months, 12,462, and the work is still progressing.

The General Conference.

The fourth General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was held in the Hall of the House of Representatives of the Tennessee Legislature, Nashville, Tenn., beginning Saturday morning, May 1st, 1858.

The session was opened by the venerable senior bishop, Joshua Soule, by reading Colossians, singing the Hymn, and offering an appropriate and impressive prayer.

"And are we yet alive,"

The Secretary of the last Conference called the list of the Annual Conferences:

All the bishops were present, to wit: Joshua Soule, James O. Andrew, Robert Paine, George F. Pierce, John Early, Hubbard H. Kavanaugh.

Bishop Soule vacated the chair, which was taken by Bishop Andrew.

On motion of Hugh A. C. Walker, Thomas O. Summers, of the Alabama Conference, was elected Secretary.

A communication from A. W. Putnam, G. A. Blackie, and John Melgs, Com. of the Tennessee Historical Society inviting the Conference to be present to-day at a "celebration of the establishment of the first government in this city and county" was received and read; and on motion of Alexander L. P. Green, the Conference resolved to accept the invitation, and to adjourn for that purpose at 11 o'clock.

On motion of Jefferson Hamilton, the Presiding Elder of the Nashville District, and the stationed preachers of Nashville and Edgefield, were appointed a Committee on Public worship.

The Rules of the General Conference of 1854, were read, and, on motion of John F. Hughes, the first article was changed so as to read, "This Conference shall meet at 8½ A. M., and adjourn at 12½ P. M."—a motion of James Stacy, to amend the fourth rule, and a motion of Edward Wadsworth to add a new rule having been laid on the table, the Rules as amended, were adopted, and, on motion of George W. Langhorne, were ordered to be presented, in connection with a list of the standing Committees and the residences of the Delegates.

John B. McFerrin announced that the Book Agents proposed to issue during the session of the Conference, a Daily Christian Advocate, in which shall be published, the proceedings of the Conference, whereupon,

On motion of David R. McAnally it was Resolved, that the General Conference approve the purpose of the Book Agents to publish a Daily Christian Advocate, during the present session of the Conference, and will give it our hearty support.

On motion of A. L. P. Green, Resolved, That the following standing committees, be appointed, to consist of one member from each annual Conference, and that each delegation appoint its own member on said committee:

1. On Episcopacy.
2. On Itinerancy.
3. On Books and Periodicals.
4. On Boundaries.
5. On Missions.
6. On Revivals.
7. On Sabbath Schools.
8. On Education.
9. On the Tract Society.

Resolved, 2. That the following Committees be appointed by the President:

1. On the Claims of the American Bible Society.
2. On Temperance.

Resolved, 3. That a Committee be appointed to ascertain from the Records the exact vote in each Annual Conference on the Alabama and Holston Resolutions, and report to the Conference.

A Resolution to authorise the Secretary to employ two pages to attend the Conference was offered by Charles K. Marshall, and not adopted.

The hour of adjournment having nearly arrived, on motion of A. L. P. Green, the Conference adjourned, with the benediction by Bishop Andrew.

Monday, May 3, 1858.

Conference met at half-past eight o'clock, Bishop Andrew in the chair; who opened the session by reading the eighty-sixth Psalm, and giving out the hymn on page one hundred and seventy-nine:

"Oh might my lot be cast with these,
The least of Jesus' witnesses!"

The minutes of Saturday were read and approved.

The list of Conferences was called over, and the certificates of several newly arrived delegates received.

The following committees ordered on Saturday were filled up with a delegate from each Annual Conference, to wit:

Caples, N. Scarrett, J. Hamilton, S. J. Davies, S. Anthony, L. P. Lively, J. Lusk, James Atkins, R. W. Kennon, W. B. Rowzie.

Reports from other committees were called for, but none were presented.

Petitions, memorials and appeals were called for, when W. W. Bennett, from the Virginia delegation, presented a memorial from the Church in Washington City, asking for an agent to raise funds for building a new Church in the National Metropolis.

This memorial was referred to a special committee of three.

A. H. Mitchell, of the Alabama Conference, presented a memorial from the Quarterly Conference of Prattville, Ala., proposing an alteration of the Discipline on the subject of Temperance; which was, on motion, referred to the Committee on Revisals.

The same delegate presented another memorial from the same parties, setting forth that the discussion of the subject of Lay Delegation in some of our Church papers was injurious to the peace and prosperity of the Church, and praying the General Conference to take no action in this matter.

It was moved to refer this memorial also to the Committee on Revisals.

L. M. Lee moved, as a substitute, to refer it to the Committee on Itinerancy.

Messrs. Campbell, of Mississippi, and Evans, of Georgia, opposed the substitute. T. W. Dorman, and others, advocated it.

The substitute did not prevail, and the memorial was referred to the Committee on Revisals.

On motion of E. Wadsworth, of Alabama, a paper was called up which was laid temporarily on the table on Saturday, proposing an additional rule of order, as follows:

17. Whenever a member shall move that the question be now put, the vote on such motion shall be taken without debate; and, if two-thirds of the members voting shall sustain the call, the President shall put the question then pending, and in case there is an amendment, or substitute, it shall be put in regular order, until the main question is reached, and the whole matter disposed of."

The proposition for an additional rule was rejected.

J. W. Fields, of the East Texas Conference, presented a memorial concerning certain property bequeathed to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, by Payton S. Wyatt, deceased, and praying that said property might be appropriated to the benefit of the Boston Circuit, Clarksville District, East Texas Conference.

This memorial was, on motion, referred to the Committee on Missions.

W. G. Carter, of the Virginia Conference, presented the following, which was seconded by Leo. Rosser:

Resolved, That a committee of ——— be appointed to prepare a course of study for the candidates for ordination in the Traveling Connection, and report the same to this General Conference for its approval.

After some discussion, the resolution was laid on the table for the present.

L. Pearce, of the Mississippi Conference, proposed the appointment of a Committee of ——— on Ministerial Education.

L. Campbell of Mississippi, sustained the motion, and suggested to fill the blank with nine.

D. B. Nicholson, of North Carolina, moved, as a substitute for nine, a member from each Annual Conference, to be appointed by each delegation, which was accepted by the mover.

Wm. A. Smith, of the Virginia Conference, and W. G. Caples, of Missouri, opposed the motion.

J. B. McFerrin thought the appointment of such a committee premature—the subject of ministerial education might be referred to the standing Committee on Education.

B. M. Drake, of the Mississippi Conference, proclaimed himself opposed to theolgical schools, but advocated the appointment of the proposed committee.

L. Rosser offered the following as a substitute, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the committee on Education be instructed to consider especially the subject of Ministerial Education, and report thereon.

L. M. Lee presented a paper from two quarterly conferences in Virginia, proposing certain alterations in the Discipline, which was referred to the Committee on Revisals.

On motion of J. B. McFerrin, the Conference now proceeded to the election of an assistant Secretary, when E. H. Myers was nominated and elected by a unanimous vote.

F. E. Pitts moved the following, which was carried:

Resolved, That the Book Agents be, and hereby are, instructed to send a copy of the Daily Advocate to the address of each member of the last Tennessee Legislature.

On motion of J. B. McFerrin, it was

Resolved, That the pastors and ministers of the several evangelical churches in this city be, and hereby are, cordially invited to occupy seats within the bar, at their pleasure, during the session of this General Conference.

Also, that Dr. Sehon, our Missionary Secretary, be especially invited to occupy a seat in the General Conference as shall suit his convenience.

W. W. Benoett, of the Virginia Conference, in the behalf of Wm. T. Smithson, Esq., of Washington City, made a communication, proposing an engraving of the General Conference; whereupon, it was moved by E. Wadsworth,

That we approve of the proposal of William T. Smithson, Esq., and that we request Rev. W. W. Bennett to call on each member of the Conference for an ambrotype likeness of himself, and for subscriptions.

The following, being offered as a substitute by D. S. Doggett, was adopted:

Resolved, That we approve of the proposal of W. T. Smithson, Esq., of Washington City, to execute an engraving of the present General Conference.

Conference now adjourned.

EPISCOPAL CONVENTION.

The convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church, of the Diocese of Louisiana, assembled at Christ Church, New Orleans, Thursday, May 6, 1858.

On Friday May 7, the Bishop of the Diocese delivered his annual address to the convention. He referred to the university which has lately been inaugurated under the auspices of the Southern diocese of the church, and stated that it had been incorporated under the title of the "University of the South." The locality for this seminary of learning had been fixed on the plateau of the Cumberland Mountains.—Vigorous efforts have been made towards the completion of the enterprise, but it had been deemed advisable, in consequence of the late general financial embarrassment, to delay, for the present, the collection of subscriptions. The whole matter, however, was in the hands of prompt and judicious men, and a confident belief was entertained in the complete success of the undertaking.

The summary of the Bishop's labors and acts, other than those performed as Rector of Trinity Church, New Orleans, shows that during the last conventional year, he had baptized one white adult and six children, held twenty-three confirmations, at which he had confirmed two hundred and fifty-seven persons; had ordained four deacons and one priest; consecrated one church, laid the corner stone of one, transferred four clergymen, received into the Diocese six, and given his official consent to the election of one bishop.

On Monday, the 10th, the Committee on the State of the Church reported at some length, and among those especially noticeable, stated that during the past year several new church edifices had been erected, and that several more were in progress, with sufficient means; that several new parishes had been organized; that the expansion of missions among the colored population was most gratifying, almost every minister in the country having several congregations in charge; that the preparation of a special service among the colored people was judicious.

The Convention adjourned on Monday, sine die.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

This body met on Thursday morning, May 6, in the First Presbyterian Church of New Orleans. The assembly was opened with a sermon by Rev. C. Van Rensalaer, D. D., the last Moderator: Text—2 Cor. 13th chap. and 11th verse—"Be of one mind, live in peace; and the God of love and peace shall be with you." The subject of unity, peace and blessedness was handled with marked ability, and the heart of the preacher seemed deeply imbued with the spirit of the text. The exposition was most happy, and every way suited to the occasion. Drs. Scott, Howe and Stanton were nominated for Moderator. Dr. Scott having received a minority of 16 votes over his competitors on the first ballot, was declared elected. Little was done the first day beyond the usual preliminaries of organization. We give an abstract of proceedings as late as possible, condensed from the reports of the Daily True Witness, and other city papers:

SECOND DAY.

Friday, May 7, 1858.

The General Assembly met at 9 o'clock, and was opened with prayer by the Moderator, Wm. A. Scott, D. D.

Resolutions were adopted to make committee reports on "Reports of Boards" the order of the day, as follows: namely, Board of Domestic Missions, Saturday; Board of Foreign Missions, Monday; Board of Education, Tuesday; Board of Publication, Thursday; Board of Church Extension, Friday. It was ordered that the hour for each report should be 10 o'clock, A. M., and that no report should occupy more than two hours.

The first order of the day was then taken up, and the annual reports of the Board of Foreign Missions, the Board of Domestic Missions, and the Board of Education were laid before the Assembly. The following is an abstract of the report of the Board of Education:

ABSTRACT OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

1 MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

Candidates.—The following table of the statistics of candidates show the operations of the Board of Education in the Ministerial Department.

The number of new candidates received has been	103
Making in all from the beginning (1819)	2630
The whole number on the roll during this year has been	385
In their Theological course	122
" Collegiate "	178
" Academical "	83
" Stage of study not reported	6
" Teaching, or otherwise absent	6— 385

The aggregate number of candidates this year is two greater than last year; whilst the number of new candidates is eleven more than were received last year—an increase that is encouraging chiefly from the fact, that there is no decrease.

STATE OF THE TREASURY.

The following is a general view of the pecuniary affairs of the Board during the ecclesiastical year. The accounts closed on the 18th of April, which is about two weeks earlier than usual.

1. CANDIDATES' FUND.

Receipts	$47,103 07
Balance	2,370 29—	49,473 37
Payments		43,432 35
Balance		$6,041 01

2. SCHOOL FUND.

Receipts	$5,507 27
Balance	36 96—	5,544 25
Payments		5,458 20
Balance		$86 05

3. MISCELLANEOUS FUND.

Balance	$3 76

4. AFRICAN FUND.

Receipts	$83 24
Balance	1,387 45—	1,470 69
Payments		90 00
Balance		$1,380 69

Total receipts for the year, $52,693 60; total income, $56,462 06; total payments, $28,980 56; total balance, exclusive of the permanent African Fund, $6511 52.

From this statement, the Assembly will perceive that the treasury of the Board has been in a highly prosperous condition. In no year since the organization of the Board, has so large an amount been contributed by the churches to the education of candidates for the ministry.

CAUSES OF ANXIETY TO YOUNG MEN AND CANDIDATES.

The Board have judged it expedient to present to the Assembly and to the churches, the consideration of some of the causes of anxiety to young men, who think of entering upon the work of the ministry. As the present time, in the providence of God, invites many young men to turn their attention to this subject, its candid and sober discussion may result in good. The following are the topics discussed, under this head in the Annual Report.

1. The want of sufficient piety.
2. The want of sufficient evidences of a divine call to the work of the ministry.
3. The want of peculiar means.
4. Advanced age, beyond the usual period.
5. Ill health.
6. Defectiveness of early education.
7. A profession in life already selected, and entered upon.
8. The scanty salaries of ministers.
9. The opposition of relatives and friends.
10. The want of natural ability.
11. Obscure birth in a low condition of life.
12. The ministry is too vast a profession.

These various topics are discussed with the purpose of removing the objections and anxieties of candid and inquiring minds. Throughout the whole discussion, the Board not only assume, but lay stress upon the following propositions: 1. The individual possesses, in other respects, the qualifications requisite for making a useful minister. 2. The Holy Spirit can alone give a call to the work. 3. The standard of mental and moral requirement, prevalent in the Presbyterian Church, is not intended to be lowered by the arguments and incidents herein stated, but on the contrary, the age demands higher qualifications than any preceding one.

2. GENERAL CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

PRIMARY OR PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS.

The number of Parochial Schools, as nearly as can be ascertained, is about one hundred. Of these, thirty-two have been aided, during the year, by the funds of the Board. Six of these schools report considerable religious interest among the pupils.

PRESBYTERIAL ACADAMIES.

The number of academies, under the care of Presbyteries, is sixty. An annual religious interest has extended in several of these institutions.

ASHMAN INSTITUTE.

This institution under the care, of the New Castle Presbytery, and designed for the education of young men of color, is in a hopeful condition. Four of the students expect to go as missionaries to Africa.

COLLEGES.

The number of Presbyterian Colleges, under ecclesiastical supervision, or controlled by ministers and members of the Presbyterian church, is twenty-four.

Revivals of religion have been reported in Davidson College, N. C.; Oglethorpe University, Ga.; Hanover College, Ind.; Washington College, Pa.; Jefferson College, Pa.; and the College of New Jersey, at Princeton, N. J. Some particulars are contained in the report, to be laid before the Assembly.

Verbal reports were made from the Seminaries of Danville, of Princetown, of Alleghany, and of Union Theological Seminary; but the printed documents of their respective Boards, and of other Boards, not having yet arrived, they were not presented.

Rev. Mr. Coe, Secretary of the Board of Church Extension, was announced as present and ready to receive contributions.

The Centennial Celebration of the re-union of the Synods of New York and Philadelphia, recommended by the last General Assembly, was fixed for Wednesday next.

A report was read from the Committee on the Fund for the relief of disabled ministers, and referred to the Committee on Systematic Benevolence.

A resolution was then adopted forthwith to fix the time and plan for the next annual meeting of the General Assembly.

The vote being taken resulted as follows:

For Indianapolis, 142; for Cincinnati, 24; for Rochester, 22; and for Pittsburg, 21. The Moderator declared Indianapolis the choice of the General Assembly.

A recess of fifteen minutes was taken.

On resuming the session, it was

Resolved, That when the General Assembly adjourns, it shall do so to meet in annual session, in the third Presbyterian Church of Indianapolis, on the third Thursday in May, 1859, at eleven o'clock A. M.

Overture No. 5, representing the alterations made by the "American Bible Society in the standard English version of the Bible," having last year been referred to the present meeting, was then called up.

On motion of Dr. Breckinridge, the Overture was read and referred to a Committee, with instructions to draft a report which shall be a minute expressive of the views of the Assembly on these subjects, and in reference to the claims of the Bible Society on our Churches.

The Overture so referred is as follows, viz:

1. The American Bible Society has, by the terms of its Constitution, no legitimate right to alter in any way, the common and accepted English Scriptures, as they stood at the period of the creation of that Society.

2. Concerning the said English Scriptures, the American Bible Society has full power to print and circulate them, and to collect and manage funds for those purposes. But it has no power to edit them, in any other sense than to keep them in the exact condition in which the standard English Bible stood at the formation of the Society.

3. This General Assembly, and the Church it represents are, and from the beginning have been, warm and unanimous supporters and friends of the American Bible Society. And it is in this sense we feel called on to say that we neither do nor can allow, on our part, of any, even the smallest departure from the original principles on which that Society was founded; and to express the settled conviction that the continued support of that Society by the Presbyterian Church, depends upon the strict adherence of the Society to those clear and simple principles.

4. The Board of Publication of the Presbyterian Church will consider and report to the next General Assembly a plan for the preparation and permanent publication by it, of the common English Bible, in a form suitable for public use, with the standard text unchanged, and the usual accessories to the text commonly found in pulpit English Bibles, from 1611 to 1847.

On a motion to make the subject the special order of the day for Monday next, at 11 o'clock, A. M., an animated discussion ensued, in which Messrs. Findley, Breckinridge, and Hewitt participated. The motion was adopted.

Rev. John Woodbridge presented a report of his attendance as the Delegate of this General Assembly to the last "General Synod of the Reformed Dutch Church of the United States." The report was accepted.

A most interesting communication was forwarded to the Assembly by Rev. Frederick Monod, from Dr. G. Fish of France, in the name of the "General Synodale of the Presbyterian Church of Paris." It was referred to the Committe on Foreign Correspondence.

THIRD DAY.

Dr. Hogg said he was informed by the permanent clerk, that at the annual meeting of the Assembly, three years ago, it was resolved to insert in the minutes the names of the speakers, and of all movers and seconders of resolutions. He moved that the resolution be rescinded.

Mr. Erskine opposed the motion, on the ground,

1st, That the insertion of the names makes the record more complete;

2d, That the consciousness of a speaker that his name is to appear, is calculated to make him feel his responsibility, and to be more circumspect.

3d, It looks badly for the Assemblies of different years to appear unstable and inconsistent. He hoped that Dr. Hogg would present better arguments in support of his motion.

Dr. Junkin corrected the statement as to the names referred to: none having been specified in the resolutions except those of the speakers. He agreed with Mr. Erskine that such a record is calculated to save time by making the members chary of their speeches, and careful what they say.

Mr. Rankin was in favor of the resolution as it now stands, because it renders justice to all. For his own part, he would be unwilling to have his poor speeches futhered by the reverend D. D's.

Dr. Hogg had hoped that the motion to rescind would have been adopted without discussion. He was unable to conceive any good purpose to be served by cumbering the minutes with names. Can members possibly be in earnest in desiring a record of every speech that has been made on this little motion? An adherence to the resolution makes invidious distinctions between those who speak and those who more wisely, perhaps, hold their peace.

The motion to rescind was then adopted.

The first Order of the day, being the reception and commitment of Presbyterial narratives on the state of Religion and statistical reports was then taken up.

On motion of Dr. Hogg, tellers were appointed to go through the house and collect the reports.

Dr. Musgrave, Secretary of the Board of Domestic Missions, gave the Assembly a brief summary of its action during the past year, of which the following is an abstract:

Notwithstanding the extraordinary commercial and financial revulsion which have overtaken the country, and produced for a time almost a total suspension of business of every kind, and bringing bankruptcy to thousands, the Board have been able to execute the work entrusted to them with extraordinary success. Indeed, no sooner had the gloom began to disperse, than the contributions to its treasury largely increased. In the month of February, the receipts exceed those of the corresponding period of the previous year by $5000. The Board have increased the number of missionaries by twenty, making the number now employed 600. The appropriations for the past year, are slightly in advance of those made during the one preceding it. The total receipts are $105,277 52; the entire disbursements for the same period are $104,143 67. The receipts for the Board are considerably above the record of any previous year, and this increase is not the result of individual bequests so much as of the contributions of the churches. The excess of increase in the past year over any preceding one, is above $8000. An average reduction of $300 has been made in the appropriation to each Missionary, in view of the embarrassments of business; but the churches in which they labored have increased the amount which they contributed to the salary: so, that the salaries received by those engaged in Missionary labor average $500 in each.

The Reports from the Missionary churches indicate the most extraordinary success. There is a sensible manifestation of the influence of the Holy Spirit in a revival of the Church and an awakening of the people. Although the fruits are not reported to this Assembly, it can be confidently stated that such an extensive interest on the subject of religion has never been witnessed.

Dr. McKinney, from the committee on the "Report of the Board," made a report and offered resolutions as follows:

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

The committee on the report of the Board of Domestic Missions, presented to the Assembly for consideration and adoption, the following resolutions, viz:

1. Resolved, That the deepest gratitude of this Assembly is due to God for his goodness in that during a year of great financial embarrassment, He has disposed and enabled his people to supply the wants of the Board, making the period to close happily with an increase of funds and laborers.

2. Resolved, That this Assembly give devout and honest thanks to God for the outpouring of His Spirit upon our Missionary Churches, in common with the other portions of His beloved Zion.

3. Resolved, That the Assembly rejoice in the increase of contributing churches, and now cherish the hope that, by due effort, all may ultimately be induced to do their part in the work.

4. Resolved, That while the Board have frequently made their appropriations, still the wants of funds is such, and the demand so great and numerous, that there is a large amount of work which can scarcely be attempted; and that the Assembly request that a large portion of funds should still be absorbed by unproductive churches; some that remain feeble from year to year are, it is well known, like hives, which send forth their annual swarms. But all are not such. Presbyteries should look into this and cease to recommend, or should unite two or more churches in one charge, thus husbanding both men and means for labor in productive regions.

5. Resolved, That in view of the happy working and bright prospects of the scheme of systematic benevolence; the Assembly suggest to the Board the propriety of considering the question whether the services of the Associate Secretary might not be dispensed with, and the amount of the salary of the office saved.

6. Resolved, That the Assembly is pleased with the effort of the Board to increase the number of itinerant laborers, believing that the system may be extended to the great advantage of spursely settled districts.

7. Resolved, That the failure on the part of nearly one third of the missionaries to send a special report for the use of the Assembly is to be deeply regretted, and that in the cases where such failures is the result of negligence, the missionary has shown himself unworthy and should not be re-appointed.

The proposition to amend the fourth resolution by striking out the words "and cease to recommend," aroused a vigorous and able debate, in which the principles of church benevolence were broadly brought out and the history of weak churches strongly portrayed. In this debate Drs. Breckinridge, Musgrave and McKinney, and Rev. Geo. Hall, participated, until the hour of taking up other business arrived, when the resolutions were, on motion, recommitted to the committee.

The assembly then took a recess of fifteen minutes, after which the Rev. J. M. Young, of South Carolina, representing the General Synod of the Associate Reformed Church of the South was introduced to the assembly.

In an eloquent and feeling manner he presented the greeting and congratulations of the synod to the assembly, and gave a brief history of the synod and its present condition.

The report of the committee appointed by a previous assembly to conduct a correspondence on the subject of union between the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church and the Synod of the Associate Reformed Church of the South was read. This correspondence suggested two important difficulties in the way of union, the difference of the two bodies on the subject of psalmody and intercommunion.

A motion was made to continue the Committee of Correspondence, which was afterwards amended by one discharging the committee from further consideration of the subject, and the relinquishment of measures for union on account of inherent difficulties in the way.

Dr. Breckinridge made an eloquent address on this subject against further efforts at union, characterizing the demands of the Associate Reformed Church as inadmissible, not presenting that spirit of broad Christian liberality which favored further discussion, and elaborating the proposition that what the assembly wanted in its constituent elements was homogeneousness, which whould not exist if the two bodies should be incorporated.

Dr. Hogg forcibly presented the same views with additional arguments for the cessation of measures tending to secure union. Several members followed on the other side of the question.

Pending the discussion the hour for adjournment having arrived, the whole question was ordered to be placed upon the business docket, which is equivalent to laying it on the table subject to call.

The assembly, after a prayer by Dr. Rankin, adjourned to Monday morning, 9 o'clock.

FOURTH DAY.

Monday, May 10.

Rev. Dr. Stanton, chairman of the committee of foreign missions, then presented its report on the action of the board the last year.

The veneruble Secretary of the Board of foreign missions, Walter Lowrie, Esq., occupied the attention of the assembly for an hour, giving one of the most lucid and satisfactory expositions of the operations of the board the past year, and so pathetic a description of the martyrdom of missionaries and native Christians in India as to melt the whole house into tears.—He gave detailed information in regard to the missions among the American Indians, those in Africa, India, Siam, China, California and South America, which illustrated the mighty influence now exercised by this church organization upon the civilization and christianization of the world.

The business details of his remarks presented the following statistics:

The receipts of the Board of Missions from all sources the past year, (including a special contribution to repair the losses of property in India) have been $223,077 79.

The expenditures have been $207,057 50 (the sum specially donated for India, $18,112 57, being reserved,) leaving a balance against the board of $1186 29.

Thirty missionary laborers have been sent during the year; twelve of these were returned missionaries; and ten others are now waiting an opportunity to embark for the fields to which they have been respectively designated.

Under the direction of the Board there are nine missions among the American Indians; one among the Jews, and one to the Chinese in California, within the limits of the United States.—There are two in South America; two in Western Africa; one in Siam; three in China; two in India, embracing fifteen stations, and extending over a region of country of more than a thousand miles; besides which pecuniary aid has been extended to the evangelical societies of Belgium, Paris, Geneva and the Waldenses abroad.

Connected with the various missions there are 170 missionary laborers from this country; 70 native helpers; 50 principal stations and out-stations; 22 organized churches, and nearly 1,000 native youth under Christian schools connected with these missions.

The sad disaster at Futtehgurth, India, sent out, under the most painful circumstances of suffering from the hands of the Sepoys, the lives of eight missionaries and two of their children; others have died on the missionary field; a loss of a large amount of property has been sustained in India, and the mission work in China has been partially suspended, but still the work of foreign missions has shown manifest progress since the last meeting of the General Assembly; and when in the greatest straits the Board has found relief in the generous contributions of the church.

Rev. Mr. Hays of Allahabad, India, addressed the Assembly giving an account of the population of India, their habits and castes; the principles of government adopted by the British in India; the constitution of the army; the causes of the insurrection, and its melancholy progress, marking everywhere its path in blood, until it involved his station in its terrible scenes; and the dispatch of himself with the women and children of the fort by an order of the military commandment to Culcutta.

The speaker, by facts and illustrations, showed that the missionary effort in India had not been a failure. It has destroyed human sacrifices to Juggernaut, eradicated the custom of widow-burning and infanticide, and even this very revolution, which seemed so inauspicious and disastrous to the missionary work, would result in the Government of India broadly announcing Christianity as the ruling policy of its administration, and opening the whole of that vast country as one of the most successful missionary fields since the apostles left Jernsalem to preach glad tidings to men.

Dr. Hewitt followed in an address turning the wail from India into a hallelujah of triumph.

Dr. Edward, of the Choctaw Indian mission, then gave an interesting account of the progress of that mission. It had, he stated, 16 churches, 13 ministers, 4 licenciates, and 1636 communicants, 1206 children were attached to its schools. It had contributed $1274 to church benevolence, and $703 to foreign missions.

The second order of the day, viz: the Bible revision question, was then taken up, and Dr. Breckinridge presented the following minute on this subject, expressive of the opinions of the assembly.:

By a vote of the General Assembly of 1857, an overture of that body, which is printed in its minutes, pp. 35–36, relating to the American Bible Society's new standard English Bible, and to the best method of preserving in its integrity the common version of the English Bible, was specially referred to the consideration of the present General Assembly. During the year which has intervened, the attention of the Christian public has been directed to this important subject in a very unusual degree; and so far as this assembly has the means of judging, it is apparent that the Presbyterian Church throughout the country is decidedly opposed to the line of conduct, in the premises, pressed by the late Committee on Versions, of that society, and to the circulation by that society of their new standard English Bibles. It is, therefore, a matter of great satisfaction to the General Assembly, that the Directors of the American Bible Society have resolved to cease publishing and circulating the aforesaid new standard Bible, and to resume the publication and circulation of the standard English Bible, in exclusive use by the society, before the late work of collation and change commenced, about the year 1847. We also cordially approve the further action of the Board of Directors, so far as it secures a more vigilant oversight in the future, of the work of its Committee on Versions, and prevents any future change either of the text of its necessories, without the careful consideration and special order of the Board of Directors. With regard to any change whatever, either in the text of the English version of the Bible, commonly called King James' version, or in the accessories to that text as they were commonly printed at the foundation of the American Bible Society, we do not admit that the said society has any power or authority to make any alteration in said accessories or said text, except such as appertain to a printer, and not to an editor. By the text of King James's version, we do not mean a copy corrupted by errors and unauthorized changes, no matter where that copy may have been printed, nor how these errors originated, nor who may have ventured to make these changes. But we mean the true text in English, produced and published after the labors of the translators appointed by King James the First, of England, which for nearly two centuries and a half has been the standard Bible of all people speaking the English language, and which the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America is resolved to preserve in its integrity and purity, and to use and circulate.

Along with the greater portion of the Christian public in this country, we have confided to the American Bible Society the great work of circulating the English Scriptures in the version in common use, and, while we deeply regret the serious error into which it was betrayed, its recent action in the premises demands a cordial response from all the earnest supporters of the great work in which it is engaged. In discharge, therefore, of our duty as the General Assembly of our branch of the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ, to which he has committed his most blessed word for the guidance and salvation of men, we have made this deliverance; and upon the terms herein set forth, we reiterate our approval of the principles upon which the American Bible Society was founded, our desire to co-operate with our brethren of all Christian denominations in united efforts to furnish the whole world with the word of God, and our earnest recommendation to our people to give liberally to the support of this great cause.

This minute was adopted without dissent, when the assembly adjourned, after prayer by Mr. Stevenson, until 9 o'clock to-morrow.

FIFTH DAY.

TUESDAY, May 11.

The chief subject of discussion, to-day, was the proposed union between the General Assembly and the Synod of the Reformed Church of the South. Long and able speeches were made on the motion to grant a committee of conference to meet a similar committee sent by the Synod. Drs. Breckenridge and Hogg were opposed to the conference. Mr. Cobb spoke at length in favor. At the hour of adjournment the subject was not disposed of.

SIXTH DAY.

WEDNESDAY, May 12.

Report on Theological Seminaries was received. An interesting feature of the proceedings for the day the celebration by the assembly of the centennial anniversary of the reunion of the synods of New York and Philadelphia. The Moderator, assisted by the members of the assembly, opened the religious exercises according to the usual forms of the church. Rev. Courtlandt Van Rensselaer, D. D., then delivered the historical discourse.

Towards the conclusion of his centennial discourse, Dr. Van Rensselaer, in referring to the great field of labor opening to the church, spoke as follows:

The old French war, which was in active operation at the time of the re-union, in 1758, was a war of principles, of races, of religions; and God gave might to right. By the treaty of pence, all the French possessions in North America reverted to England; and over the whole valley, east of the Mississippi, (with a small exception,) and North of the Ohio, the flag of liberty and King George waved its triumphs in the air, throwing its shadows on the prostrate emblems of France and the Bourbons. Then was achieved the first victory which announced the future destiny of all this glorious region. As between England and France, God vested this country in England, to retain it until the young Republic should become of age.

Next came the war of the Revolution; and the West, having been annexed to the colonies, the colonies were now to be dissevered from England, in order that the West, with the East, might be cultivated for the whole world.

Thus did God mark out for the Church a country vast in extent—to be added to in future years, but now first guaranteed to the Church—vast in its increasing extent, until lake mirrors gulf, and sea surges into sea. How great has been the political and civil influence of the last century upon this country! And who can tell what another century shall bring, of increase to this magnificent inheritance of liberty and religion? How the ignorance of man clouds the vision of faith! And yet, methinks, faith can see into the vista of years. Like as the eye, with a telescope, unravels the tangled skein of nebulæ in the skies, faith can behold the confused mysteries of Central America taking their places as stars in the firmament of our Union. And as astronomers think there is some central point whither the whole system is tending, so, were I to theorise about the territorial center of our republic, when expanded a century hence, I would say it might be here, in the city of our centennial celebration; here, in New Orleans, where lines from the North and South and West meet, a triangle enfolding a problem of greatness; here, on the highway to the whole of the glorious Pacific states; here, in contiguity with Texas and with the states of the great Mexican peninsula all the way down to the Isthmus.

The resolution calling the attention of the Board of Domestic Missions to the expediency of dispensing with the services of the associate secretary of the board, thus saving for the employment of missionary labor the sum of $2100, awakened a general debate, and were passed.

DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

MR. EDITOR: On the plantations of John Robinson, Esq., in Madison county, Mi., the Rev. J. S. Harris is employed as missionary, and as the number of negroes held by Mr. Robinson is from five to six hundred, the mission is an important one. I visited two of the plantations and heard Mr. Harris' manner of conducting religious exercises. He began by catechising both children and adults, and certainly the readiness with which they answered the questions would be esteemed creditable in any Sabbath school; and when we consider that, with rare exceptions, they cannot read, good evidence is given by them that they appreciate the importance of knowing by heart the commandments and attributes of God, their Savior, and the Holy Spirit.

Mr. Harris very faithfully attends to this important duty and impresses upon them the importance of it. Very earnest attention was given to all he said to them. I supposed that a very simple discourse would be delivered to them; for, being a Northern Presbyterian, I had no idea that a negro could appreciate a meutal effort of more than ordinary quality; but when Mr. Harris commenced preaching I perceived that an earnest desire to illustrate the goodness and glory of his Divine Master aroused in him that power which is always manifest in zealous Christian ministers. He strives faithfully to win their souls for Christ. I observed that the negroes love him for his devotion to their immortal interests, and were deeply impressed as he spoke of that everlasting life which awaits the people of God.

For three years he has served his God on Mr. Robinson's plantations faithfully; and certainly he is a good man who shuts himself out from the world, as it were, to preach the gospel to negroes at their quarters unheard, unknown, and unappreciated by his white brethren generally. Mr. Harris did like a good soldier of the cross, forsake all for Christ, and with much fear and trembling yielded to the persuasion and prayers of the Rev. Mr. Montgomery, and gave up a lucrative pursuit for the self-denying one of the gospel service. Your Church has a very efficient minister in him. I have heard some of the greatest preachers on earth and have never listened to one more lufgely endowed with natural eloquence. This is a great gift, and when used in the service of Him who gives it, cannot but be productive of good to mankind. I trust that a long life may be granted to Mr. Harris, and that after the maturity of his studies he will be noted as one for whom your Church has reason to be thankful. Mr. Robinson intends erecting church buildings with bells to give out their pleasant tones over his plantations on the Sabbath. The lower stories of these churches are to be used for nurseries.

I trust that every planter may go and do likewise. It would not be much additional expense, any it will be profitable; for when the master looks to the spiritual interest of his servants, his Heavenly Master will not fail to reward him by giving him in return more faithful servants, and form in them an attachment to their plantations far beyond that which those have who have no spiritual overseer nor churches granted them. God grant that the time may soon come when believing masters will say to faithful Christian servants as one good master of old said to his: "And behold Boaz came from Bethlehem and said unto the reapers, The Lord be with you, and they answered him, The Lord bless thee."—Ruth 2: 4. HIGH WATER, LEVEES, CREVASSES, &c.

The Baton Rouge Advocate, in noticing the announcement from Vicksburg by telegraph, on the 4th inst., that the river was within four inches of running over Diamond Island levee, says:

Our dispatches from Vicksburg are alarming, if true. They are, however, evidently exaggerated as to the danger of Diamond Island levee giving away. Mr. Towns, the Swamp Land Commissioner for that District, assures us that the water cannot be within eighteen inches of the top of the levee, unless that work has melted down from the effects of the water against it. Harper's Bayou, which has been sinking for the last three or four weeks, may break, but the Diamond Island levee proper he considers perfectly safe unless it melts away.

The Vicksburg True Southron of yesterday (7th) remarks:

The all-absorbing topic at this time is the river; and, judging from the tenor of our reports from above, it would seem that "the end is not yet." Great damage has already been done; greater, we much fear, will yet be done. Meantime we are glad to learn that our friends upon the river bank, on both sides, are putting forth extraordinary exertions to combat the threatening flood. May they be successful!

The Memphis Eagle and Enquirer of the 4th inst., says:

Since our report of Sunday, the river has risen two inches, and was last evening at about a stand. The water broke through the levee at Mound City, opposite this city, and, is doing some damage. The river has now reached a point within a very few inches of the greatest height ever attained here. The Arkansas side of the river is under water for a considerable distance, just opposite our landing.

The same paper has a report that a break in the levee, some twenty miles above Memphis, on the Arkansas side, had occurred. If this prove true, it remarks, a large body of water will be poured across Crittenden county to Blackfish and St. Francis rivers.

We have the following further intelligence of the state of the rivers and levees, and of the crevasses that have occurred at points above us.

The Harrisonburg (Catahoula) Independent, of the 5th inst., says:

The Ouachita is reported falling from Camden to Monroe. At this place the rise is decreasing, being at this time about an inch in twenty-four hours. The water has already proven disastrous in many places, and but little more is required for it to amount to a partial overflow throughout the greater portions of the river lands.

The Monroe (Ouachita) Register, of the 6th inst., says:

The Ouachita river at this point is falling slowly, having receded some two feet within the last ten days. Private advices received yesterday from Bœuff river and Lake Lafourche state that those streams are also falling.

The Natchez Free Trader, of the 8th, says:

We learn that the levee broke night before last at Mr. Alexander Henderson's plantation, about sixteen miles below this place, in Concordia parish, La.

The river at Trinity, La., has not risen within the last three days more than one inch per day.

The Memphis Appeal, of the 5th inst., says:

The river falls very slowly—during the twenty-four hours ending last evening it had not gone down quite two inches. The crevasse at Barton's Landing, four miles up the river on the other side, was pouring out a heavy volume of water yesterday, and will do much injury. The position of affairs down the river is melancholy in the extreme, and we may expect to hear of cases of severe distress. Mr. Thomasson, the clerk of the Evansville, in yesterday from White river, has given us several particulars of the state of things as they existed on the trip of the boat to this city.

From Helena to White river the traveler on the river could distinguish only one sheet of water, on both sides of the river, as far as could be seen. Up the shore of White river, for sixty miles, a similar stretch of water met the eye. The houses are all surrounded by water which flows beneath them. Where the water runs in a current, the support of the houses are hourly undermined; some of the houses were seen leaning over, ready to fall. The condition of the inmates in many instances, especially when far from neighbors, must be most deplorable. The loss of stock will be great. The cattle have no opportunity of lying down, and must suffer from deprivation of sleep, as well as from scarcity of food.

Men were seen in dug-outs, in some places followed by the wading cattle. The men were engaged in cutting down the young cottonwood trees for the cattle to browse upon. In one place a drove of hogs swam for some distance after the boat, evidently anxious to get on the dry deck. A man was seen at Helena endeavoring to purchase a flatboat, upon which to place a portion of his stock to save them from perishing. He lived back from Napoleon; but not a boat was to be got in that city. The fences, of course, are carried off for miles. Cordwood is also carried away in such abundance that the boats already find it scarce, and have to pay an advanced price.

BY TELEGRAPH.

NEW YORK, May 10.—The steamship Vanderbilt, which left Havre on the 28th for this port, via Southampton on the 28th ult., has arrived here, bringing four days later intelligence from Europe than was received by the Europa.

THE PARIS ELECTIONS.

The general news brought by the Vanderbilt comprises scarcely anything of importance, although not without interest in details.

The Paris election for members of the Chamber of Deputies, to represent that city, had resulted in the return of two government candidates and one opposition candidate.

BRITISH PARLIAMENT.

Parliament was discussing the India bill.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer's proposition to impose a stamp on banker's checks passed the House of Commons without debate.

GREAT BRITAIN AND PERSIA.

A fresh dispute has arisen between Great Britain and Persia regarding Affghanistan.

SARDINIA.

The Sardinian Chamber of Deputies has passed the conspiracy bill.

FRANCE.

The acquittal of Bernard produced great sensation. The Paris Moniteur did not publish the result when first received.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times says that the Emperor and his advisers do not regard with indifference the encouragement that the result will give the conspirators, but that no exciting language will be employed by the French press to create indignation.

There is a slight improvement in the trade of Paris and the departments. The French Bourse was extremely dull; the three closed at 68 90.

RUSSIA.

All import and export duties are to be increased by five kopees a ruble from July 1st, the additional revenue to be employed on the frontier railways.

INDIA.

The details of the news, via Bombay, to March 24th have reached England. There is nothing of much importance to be added to the telegraphic advices received. Maun Singh and many of the other rebel zemindars have submitted to the British. The rebels mostly fled northward, but a large body had passed into Rohilcund, which was still unsettled. Troops were in hot pursuit. The trial of the ex-King of Delhi was concluded on the 9th of March, but the result was not known. Nana Sahib was at Calpee preparing to penetrate the Deccan in hopes of being joined by the Mahrattas. The British would soon attack Calpee. The executions at Delhi and other cities continue.

Local Intelligence.

MORTUARY.—The interments reported by the Board of Health for the week ending on the 9th inst., were 147.

ANOTHER CREVASSE.—We learn from the officers of the steamer Belfast that a breach occurred in the levee at the plantation next above Bringier's, directly opposite Donaldsonville, last night. When the Belfast passed the water was rushing in with tremendous fury. The neighboring plantations had all their forces at work to stop the break, but apparently with little hopes of early success.

STEAMBOAT BURNED.—At an early hour this morning the steamboat Delta, lying at Algiers, was destroyed by fire. We could not ascertain how the fire originated, or whether the boat was insured or not.

Special Notices.

NOTICE.—There will be preaching on board the ship Arizona, at the foot of Felicity street, Fourth District, on to-morrow (Sunday) the 16th inst., at 4 o'clock P. M.

NOTICE.—There will be a Camp Meeting, commencing the third day of September, 1858, on Natchitoches circuit, Louisiana Conference, near Ksaichie P. O., in Owing's settlement. Preachers and people generally are invited to attend. R. PARVIN.

NOTICE.—All orders for Books, to an amount less than ten dollars, must be accompanied with the cash; unless the person ordering has an open account with us.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT.

Its wonderful effects and consequent popularity—perhaps no article in the history of the Materia Medica ever acquired the same patronage, was subjected to the same number of severe and different tests, and met with so few failures as the Mustang Liniment. It has justly been styled a Panacea for all external Wounds, Cuts, Swellings, Eruptions, Sprains, or Bruises on man or beast. It is so far a medicine of surprising virtue, that physicians are compelled to prescribe it; and from some remarkable cures of chronic and distorted Rheumatic cases it has naturally attracted much attention from the first scientific minds of the age. No family can afford to be without a bottle of the Mustang Liniment in the house. Beware of imitations.

The genuine is sold by respectable dealers in all parts of the world.

☞ The Wonderful Success of Dr. Hostetter's Celebrated and unrivalled STOMACH BITTERS, from the time of its introduction to the public proves conclusively its manifest superiority over any other preparation of the kind now manufactured. Its action on the digestive organs is of the most pleasing character, removing all diseases of morbid y, and giving the system a sound and healthy tone in cures of dyspepsia, loss of appetite, general mental or physical weakness, its operation is most beneficient in test; some of the most direful cases that have ever been under medical treatment have been entirely cured by this great agent. As a tonic, Hostetter's Bitters are most delightful, especially unless in ills.

COMMERCIAL.

The New Orleans Price Current, of the 12th, says:

The week opened with but a moderate degree of activity in nearly all departments of the market. Cotton has been in less demand within the past few days, though no marked change has taken place in prices, and Sugar and Molasses are firm, under light receipts, while in nearly all articles of Western Produce there is but a limited movement at about previous rates.

At an early hour on Monday the steamer Vanderbilt's advices, four days later, were received, reporting a moderate business in the Liverpool Cotton market, the sales for three days having been 21,000 bales, prices being steady at previous quotations—say 7¼d for Fair Orleans, and 7 1-16d for Middling do. Breadstuffs were firm and Consols had advanced ¼ @ ½ ₰ cent according to the quotations given, which is 97¼ against 96¾ @ 96¾ by previous steamer. Yesterday the Persia's advices, still three days later, were received, reporting the week's sales of Cotton at Liverpool to have been 55,000 bales, at prices unchanged, though advices from Manchester were favorable, holders of goods generally demanding an advance. Breadstuffs were quiet, Provisions steady and Consols were still quoted at 97¼.

In our own market Monday passed with but a limited business, the sales barely reaching 3500 bales. Yesterday there was almost a cessation of demand, only a few buyers coming forward, mostly for small lots, and the sales barely reached 1800 bales, prices being without material change; though rather less full, of course, than in an active market. Thus the sales of the three days sum up only 13,300 bales.

COTTON—Arrived since 7th instant, of Louisiana and Mississippi 5440 bales, Tennessee and North Alabama 3741, Arkansas 288, Mobile 873, Florida —, Texas 1228; together 11,573 bales. Cleared since the same date, 19,240 bales. Stock in presses and on shipboard not cleared on the 11th inst. 291,183 bales.

The receipts at this port since 1st September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida, and Texas) are 1,480,187 bales, against 1,412,011 bales to same date last year; and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year is 22,919 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries as compared with the same dates last year, there is a increase to Great Britain of 157,175 bales, and a decrease to France of 13,462 bales, and to other foreign ports of 63,411 bales.

SUGAR—LOUISIANA—The receipts have been too limited to admit of any operations to much extent, and the sales of the past three days have been confined to about 1200 hhds, mostly in small lots, for which full prices have been obtained. We repeat previous quotations:

MONETARY AND FINANCIAL.

Wednesday Evening, May 12.

The market does not appear to have undergone any notable change to-day. Negotiations of strictly prime paper continue to be made quite freely at 10 per cent., and other grades at 10½ @ 11, and sometimes 12 for names not generally known. The tendency towards further easiness is very decided. Business shows unmistakable symptoms of a falling off, but still there is rather more doing than usual at this season of the year. The approach of warm weather begins to tell on transient visitors and residents, many of whom are making preparations for their summer exit.

THE HAIR! THE HAIR!

What Lady or Gentleman would be deprived of a beautiful head of Hair, when by the use of LYON'S KATHAIRON such an one can so easily be had! Too much value cannot be placed on a fine head of Hair—not only as an adornment to the person—and no person is well dressed without well arranged Hair—but also, as intimately connected with the general health of the body—for this connection is much closer than is generally supposed.

The KATHAIRON preserves and beautifies the Hair—making it soft, curly, and glossy—and by its cleansing and invigorating properties, give tone and elasticity to the whole system.

POETRY.

FROM MOUNTAIN STREAM.

Listen, the song of the mountain stream,
From its old rocky chamber springing!
Hailing the earliest morning gleam,
With its frolicking—sparkling—singing!
O, 'tis a glorious thing to bound
Through a world of such wondrous beauty;
The flowers are breathing sweet odors around,
And hail the old woods with gay music resound;
Pleasure is glancing,
Sunbeams are dancing,
Life is a boon, and enjoyment a duty!"

Listen to the song of the mountain stream,
As its murmurs are gently swelling,
Floating along with its adorable theme,
Of the glory of labor telling.
Where the land, and cool the breeze,
And let the young grain blades growing;
Fill deep round the roots of the old oak trees,
And call to the cattle their thirst to appease.
"Lambs shall come skipping,
Birds shall stoop sipping,
All shall be glad for my pure limpid flowing."

Hear the song of the mountain stream,
As it sings with its heaving motion,
Gladly relishing the sun's last beam,
As it leads itself in the ocean;
Who runs through the beautiful vale I'll wend;
I have finish'd life's changeful story;
Joyfully—thankfully seeking the end,
Where with the saints, my small tribute shall blend,
Singing—not dying,
Smiling—not sighing,
Singing forever His greatness and glory."

OBITUARIES.

WILLIAM H. MITCHELL, son of N. H. and Ann H. Mitchell, was born in Walton county, Fla., July 21, 1833, and died of consumption at the residence of his father, in Mobile, Ala., April 2, 1858, in the full triumphs of faith. He had been a member of the M. E. Church, and a professor of religion for several years previous to his death.

The writer was not permitted to witness his last moments, but was with him some during his sickness, talked and prayed with him, and found him perfectly resigned to the will of God, patiently awaiting the final hour when death should release him from his sufferings. Those who were with him to the last, say they never saw such patience and resignation manifested by any one while passing through the portals of death. He was never heard to utter the least murmur or complaint. He had no doubts or fears: his sky was clear and his soul happy. When interrogated, a few hours before his departure, concerning his situation, he calmly replied, in a clear voice, "All is well—all is well," while his face brightened and his eyes sparkled with joy as though he saw the angelic hosts ready to convey him to glory.

We mourn, but we will not deplore him. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

The writer had been acquainted with the deceased for several years, and ever found him a gentle, kind, affectionate friend, and generally trying to carry out Christian principles.

He leaves behind an affectionate wife and one child, also many step-children, to mourn their loss. When we look at things in the light of this world only, it seems hard to have our best, earthly friend torn from our fond embrace by the relentless hand of death; but we know that God is doing to the child good; He will not afflict His creatures, unless His wisdom sees it best and His goodness prompts Him to it for our good. May He who has promised to "be a father to the fatherless and a judge of the widows," be kind to them who have been bereaved by this affliction. O that they may be able to look, with implicit confidence, to that God whose name and nature are "love!" O that they may ever cling to His promises and lean upon His omnipotent arm for support! May they follow in the footsteps of the Savior, until, one by one, they are called away to meet their beloved husband and father, and to unite with him and all the blood-washed throng in singing the song of redeeming love, saying, "Unto Him that hath loved us and washed us from our sins in His own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and His Father; to Him be glory and dominion forever and forever."

W. A. MONTGOMERY.

May 6, 1858.

DIED—At home, near Livingston, Madison county, Mi., on the 9th of April, Mrs SUSAN HOGUE.

The deceased was born in N. Carolina in 1805, married John Hodge, Esq., in Franklin county, Tenn., in 1818, and removed to Mississippi in 1826. Lost her husband 1833 and subsequently religion in 1843 and was a member of M. E. Church, South. Her death was most pleasingly calm and peaceful. During a protracted and very trying illness, her patience and meekness in suffering and her resignation and firm trust in death were truly Christian. Finding that her fond hope of restoration to her family must be given up, she quietly waited "until her change came;" and the lamb like submission of the victim was most touching.—Now this gentle victim is conqueror through Christ.

Mrs. Hodge was not an ordinary person. Her judgment and forethought during her widowhood proved this. The grace and pleasing accomplishments of five daughters, whom she raised, show her fine taste and maternal discretion. The happy deaths of two of these, Mrs Girard Stokes and Mrs Elijah Graves, evince how truly Christian was her parental guidance. I have known few so unexceptionable and pure and lovely in all the relations of life; so kind, courteous and hospitable as a neighbor; so wise, liberal, enlightening, and yet so firm as a mother; so kind and just as a mistress; so consistent and blameless as a Christian. The community feels the loss of "one of the excellent of the earth," and often in her sick room did the sufferer prove that,

"The chamber where the good man meets his fate
Is privileged above the common walks of life
Quite in the verge of heaven." D. S. GOODLOE.

DIED—In New Orleans, on the 25th of April, 1858, JAMES ANDREW, son of Reddick A. and Amantha Joyner. Long the little one lingered in pain, but its freed spirit has, ere this, winged its way to the Savior's bosom.

"Sweet little babe, this earth was too cold
For a spirit as gentle as thine;
And Jesus has taken the lamb to his fold,
For did he not say they are mine?
O that the bereaved parents may strive to go where it is gone, and then the Heaven-translated flower shall be cherished there.

L. S. SADLER.

DIED—On the 6th March last, in the city of New Orleans, after a painful and very protracted illness, Rev. Reuben Dismuke, of the Mississippi Conference.

Brother Dismuke was born in Southridge county, Va., Nov. 24th, 1795; and was, therefore, 59 years, and a few months old. Early in boyhood being impressed with the necessity of a change of heart, he struggled against those convictions until his fifteenth year, when, having joined the Methodist Rev. Thomas Owen, he soon found Christ in the forgiveness of sin. From a fragment of autobiography we learn that he was early wrought upon in respect to the subject of preaching. Resistance, however, to that voice was vain. Want of education and family claims were too feeble to stand the other obligation God had imposed. Brother Dismuke, then became exhorter; then local preacher, and, in 1822, a member of the Mississippi Conference.

Disease prevented that constant and arduous labor which he desired; yet his labors were abundant, and, we trust, his fruits few. Years ago Methodism was just taking root in this southern country. Brother Dismuke was among the pioneers. A great deal of labor, long and near the ground, was necessary then almost without Bibles and hymn books. Much of the elderly laborers' time was spent in faith and hope: they have gone to a precious harvest to their Church and to their God.

We feel that another father has gone. Society and the Church feel the loss. But He who doeth all things right has called away his steward. He was panoplied in the armor of God when the messenger came; and though he is dead, may his works of good still follow him.

He leaves a large family to mourn his loss, yet following him by the way of the cross to the purer and better place of the pious above.

THE MINUTES.

FROM "POND-LILY STORIES."

We are but Minutes—little things!
Each one furnished with sixty wings,
With which we fly on our unseen track,
And not a Minute ever comes back.

We are but Minutes—yet each one bears
A little burden of joys or cares.
Take patiently the Minutes of pain—
The worst of Minutes cannot remain.

We are but Minutes—when we bring
A few of the drops from pleasure's spring,
Taste their sweetness while yet we stay—
It takes but a Minute to fly away.

We are but Minutes—use us well—
For how we are used, we must one day tell.
Who uses Minutes, has hours to use—
Who loses Minutes, while years must lose.

THE LITTLE SOWER.

The summer sun was setting, and shedding its golden rays over a quiet village churchyard, where many a white stone told its simple yet solemn tale. In a retired corner of the ground a child bent over a grave, resting her young head on the green turf, while tears obscured each other down the sweet face, so touching in its silent grief. This little one had been early called to pass through the deep waters of trouble and sorrow. That grave held all that was dear to her—father, mother, lay sleeping there. The next day she was to travel far away from her loved and familiar home to a strange place, and to new, and as yet stranger friends, and now she had stolen away by herself to take a last fond look at this spot so sacred. But think not, young reader, that this lonely little one was without comfort; she had a Friend whose eye was ever upon her, whose hand guided all her steps, and led her all her way. She had given her young heart to the Savior, who did not—who could not—forsake her in her sorrow.

An old man in passing through the churchyard saw the little girl, and stopped when he came up to her: "Don't cry so, dear child," and he laid his rough hand on the sunny curls, while a tear trickled over his weather-beaten cheek, for he, too, had known what it was to part from loved ones, and in another part of that same church-yard lay the child of his old age, his last darling. When the little girl saw that she was no longer alone, she raised herself and looked up inquiringly at her companion. "Don't cry so; it won't bring back the dead from the grave," said he. "They are not there—only their bodies, you know," quickly replied the child. "And where are they, then?" asked the old man. "O, in heaven—they are quite happy!" the little girl looked up into the clear, blue sky, with a joyful, trusting smile. "How do you know they are there?" said her questioner. "Because they loved Jesus, to be sure. Don't you know that he died to save sinners? It's all in the Bible."—"Well, I can't say I know much about these things. I have a Bible at home, but—I'm no scholar; still I hope to get to heaven too, when I die. I should like to be certain." "O, but you can't go if you don't love Jesus! Don't you love him? don't you? O, do go to him! Do love him, then you'll be certain—yes, you will!" and the child stood by her parents' grave, and her blue eyes lit up with love and earnestness. She told the old man in her simple words that all are sinners, and that "the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin." 1 John i, 7. Long they stayed there talking together, and the little girl repeated what her dear father used to tell her, when seated on his knee, she listened while he spoke to her of Jesus—how he came down from heaven and became a little child, and how, when he grew to be a man, they crucified him, and how he bore it all to save sinful men. And more than this, how he rose from the grave, and went up again into heaven, and how all that love him and believe in him shall go there, too, when they die, and live with him there forever. She told him, too, that her father said to her just before he died, "The God of the fatherless will be your God, my own dear child!" And how her mother grew thinner and thinner after she was a widow, and one day after she had been kneeling in prayer a long time she was taken very ill and died, and they laid her, too, in that grave. And again the tears would come; and the little girl and the old man—they wept together there, and then they parted.

The next day the child was far away, but the old man—what of him? He still lived in his humble cottage, and in the morning when he awoke, and in the evening when he went to bed, and when he was at his work, and at all times, the words of the little girl sounded in his ears—"Do go to Jesus!" It was a little seed dropped by a tiny hand. And did it grow? You shall hear. A few weeks after that evening in the grave-yard, the old man became seriously ill, and unable to go to his daily labor. And now the child's words came with twofold force into his mind. He thought, "Perhaps I am going to die now, but I am not fit to enter heaven; I am a sinner—what shall I do?"—"Do go to Jesus!" seemed to ring in his ear. He started! He almost fancied he heard the silvery voice, and he looked round the room as if he expected to see the little childish form. But no; she was not there, but the Bible—that precious book that she loved so well—was there. It lay where it long had lain, on the window-sill, and the sick man asked the person who attended him to read it. From that time he constantly had the Bible read to him—it was his only comfort. How sweet those precious words were—"Come unto me, all ye that labor, and I will give you rest." Matt. xi, 28. "God so loved the world that he gave his only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." John iii, 16. The old man never rose from that bed again, but we believe he did go to Jesus, and that loving Savior made him so happy that he did not mind the pain, and was not afraid to die. When his spirit passed away from the earth, it passed into the presence of the King of kings and Lord of lords, to rejoice with him forever.—Monthly Penny Magazine.

A POLITE BOY.

The other day we were riding in a crowded car. At one of the stations an old gentleman entered, and was looking around him for a seat, when a lad ten or twelve years of age rose up and said, 'Take my seat, sir." The offer was accepted, and the infirm old man sat down.—"Why did you give me your seat?" he inquired of the boy, "Because you are old, sir, and I am a boy," was the quick reply. The passengers were very much pleased and gratified. For my part, I wanted to seize hold of the little fellow and press him to my bosom. It was a respect for age, which is always praiseworthy.

THE GREATEST
Medical Discovery
OF THE AGE.

MR. KENNEDY, of Roxbury, has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures

EVERY KIND OF HUMOR,
From the worst Scrofula down to a Common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases, both thunder humor. He has now in his possession over one hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.

Two bottles are warranted to cure a nursing sore mouth.
One to three bottles will cure the worst kind of pimples on the face.
Two or three bottles will clear the system of biles.
Two bottles are warranted to cure the worst canker in the mouth and stomach.
Three to five bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Erysipelas.
One or two bottles are warranted to cure all humor in the eyes.
Two bottles are warranted to cure running of the ears and blotches among the hair.
Four to six bottles are warranted to cure corns and running ulcers.
One bottle will cure scaly eruptions of the skin.
Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of ringworm.
Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the most desperate case of rheumatism.
Three to four bottles are warranted to cure the rheum.
Five to eight bottles will cure the worst case of scrofula.
A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the above quantity is taken.
Nothing looks so improbable to those who have in vain tried all the wonderful medicines of the day, as that a common weed growing on the pastures, and along old stone walls, should cure every humor in the system; yet it is a fixed fact. If you have a humor, it has to start. There are no IFS nor ANDS, humbugs nor lo's about it suiting some cases, but not yours. I peddled over a thousand bottles of it in the vicinity of Boston. I know the effects of it in every case. It has already done some of the greatest cures ever done in Massachusetts. I give it to children a year old, to old people of sixty. I have seen poor, puny, wormy-looking children, whose flesh was soft and flabby, restored to a perfect state of health by one bottle.
To those who are subject to a sick head ache, one bottle will always cure it. It gives great relief in catarrh and dizziness. Some who have taken it had been costive for years, and have been regulated by it. Where the body is sound it works quite easy, but where there is any derangement of the functions of nature, it will cause very singular feelings, but you must not be alarmed; they always disappear in from four days to a week. There is never a bad result from it; on the contrary, when that feeling is gone you will feel yourself like a new person. I heard some of the most extravagant encomiums of it that ever man listened to.
Manufactured by DONALD KENNEDY, No. 120 Warren street, Roxbury, Mass. Price $1 per bottle.

DOCTOR HOOFLAND'S
CELEBRATED
GERMAN BITTERS.
PREPARED BY
Dr. C. M. JACKSON, Philad'a, Pa.
WILL EFFECTUALLY CURE
LIVER COMPLAINT, DYSPEPSIA, JAUNDICE,
Chronic or Nervous Debility, Diseases of the Kidneys, and all diseases arising from a disordered Liver or Stomach.

Such as Constipation, Inward Piles, to Fullness or Blood the Head, Acidity on the Stomach, Nausea, Heartburn, Disgust for Food, Fullness or Weight in the Stomach, Sour Eructations, Sinking or Fluttering at the Pit of the Stomach, Swimming of the Head, Hurried and difficult Breathing, Fluttering at the Heart, Choking or Suffocating Sensations when in a lying posture, Dimness of Vision, Dots of webs before the Sight, Fever and Dull pain in the Head, Deficiency of Perspiration, Yellowness of the Skin, and Eyes, Pain in the Side, Back, Chest, Limbs, etc., Sudden Flushes of Heat, Burning in the Flesh, Constant Imaginings of Evil and great Depression of Spirits.
The proprietor, in calling the attention of the public to this preparation, does so with a feeling of the utmost confidence in its virtues and adaptation to the diseases for which it is recommended.
It is no new and untried article, but one that has stood the test of a ten years' trial before the American people, and its reputation and sale is unrivalled by any similar preparations extant. The testimony in its favor given by the most prominent and well-known Physicians and individuals in all parts of the country is immense, and a careful perusal of the Almanac, published annually by the proprietor, and to be had gratis of any of his Agents, cannot but satisfy the most skeptical that this remedy is really deserving the great celebrity it has obtained.

THE BEAM OF DEVOTION.

BY GEORGE P. MORRIS.

I never could find a good reason
Why sorrow unbidden should stay,
And all the bright joys of life's season
Be driven unheeded away.
Our cares would wake no more emotion,
Were we to our lot but resigned,
Than pebbles thrown into the ocean,
That leave scarce a ripple behind.

The world has a spirit of beauty,
Which looks upon all for the best—
And, while it discharges its duty,
To Providence leaves all the rest;
That spirit's the beam of devotion,
Which lights us through life to its close,
And acts, like the sun in the ocean,
More beautiful far than it rose.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

ASHLEY COUNTY, Ark., April 23, 1858.

MR. EDITOR: Enclosed you will please find a spring-offering of wild flowers. I imagine their gentle fragrance will fill your "sanctum" with pleasant fancies of happy country life, now that bright, gladsome spring has come, with her wealth of birds, leaves and flowers. What sweet thoughts of blue skies, singing birds, and waving trees hover around these simple forest flowers.

By their presence we are made purer, better. Their humble modesty reproves our proud spirits—we see in them beauty without vanity, and fragrance or amiability for all who may approach.

Many a useful lesson do I learn from the little flowrets I daily meet in my woodland walks. 'Tis only in the broad, wooded country that the sweet spring-time can be truly appreciated. One becomes interested in the opening buds and tiny green leaves, while the appearance of the earliest flowrets excites a pure, heart-felt pleasure.

I think you are a lover of Nature's beauties, Mr. Editor; if so, I wish you could have seen my yard about a month ago. The dog-woods (about two hundred) looked like banks of snow with green linings; the haw and wild plum were rivals in whiteness and fragrance; the green earth was beautified by the bright eyes of the blue violets and the sweet star-flowers; while the merry, gay, twittering little birds sang all the day long. Now, the dog-woods have showered down their white blossoms, and the haw and plum, in a fit of jealousy at each other's superior charms, have scattered on the winds their fragrant flowers; the pretty violets and star-flowers have lived their short life "Their fitful dream of life is o'er." Many of my tiny musicians are patiently sitting in their leafy homes, awaiting the coming of the little ones to be so tenderly cared for; the trees are clothed with their green robes of scalloped leaves; the sun shines over all more warmly and the story of all is, change, change! "Life is a vapor; even a shadow that fleeth away." The "sweet-williams," "pretty-marys," and the yellow "lady-slippers" have taken the place of my flowers that have "passed away." I have not the same affection for them as for the earlier visitants of my woodland yard; but still I cherish them with a quiet love, and will grieve when they too are gone.

My home is beautified also by three human flowers that daily open fresh petals of love, obedience, and intellect. I cultivate them assiduously, and they have doubly repaid me for my patient care. Mattie, my latest, most fragrant blossom, is as a sunbeam in the house. Ella is as a modest violet hid among its leafy bed: one has to examine closely to see the hidden beauty. Johnny is my vari-colored tulip, that attracts attention as soon as one enters the home garden. He is brilliant, affectionate, gentle.

I feel how responsible I am for the right culture of these my best beloved flowers and daily seek Divine guidance in the pleasant duty.

'Tis for the benefit of these dear ones that I invite the weekly visits of your most excellent paper; for I wish to place in their reach all that is pure, lovely and of good report, and to keep, as far as possible, from their young hearts any thing that will sully or vitiate. Therefore, Mr. Editor, send on the "Advocate," for they and I are waiting impatiently for it.

M. A. C.

The letter of "M. A. C." must have been written among the flowers, by one whose soul is in sympathy with all that is pure and beautiful in nature. The offering is on our table; not so fresh as when the fair contributor called the flowers which make it, but sweet nevertheless. We love communion with nature, and this delegation from the garden and the wood shall be treasured in the sanctum. The Advocate shall have an herbarium, and this offering shall be the nucleus. Thanks to M. A. C.—ED. ADVOCATE.

BARBAROUS SUPERSTITION.

An evidence of superstitious barbarism that would scarcely be deemed possible, were it not well accredited, has just been developed at Glens Falls. A man named Adams died and was buried seventeen months ago. His brother has since been suffering from consumption. Last week Adams' wife returned from the West, and made the proposition that the body of her husband should be taken up, the heart dissected, and if any blood was found in the heart it should be burned and the sick man would recover! The monstrous proposition was immediately acted upon—the dead body disinterred, a physician (?) called, who took out the heart and lungs, but not enough blood being found to answer the purpose—the body having lain too long—the further prosecution of the infamous project was abandoned.

Our repentance is right and genuine, when the sinfulness of sin, as disobedience to God, is that in it which we chiefly lament.

ADDRESS OF THE BISHOPS
TO THE GENERAL CONFERENCE AT NASHVILLE

Beloved Brethren and Fellow Laborers in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ:

With feelings of devout gratitude to the all-wise and merciful God, we greet you in His name. Assembled as you are from all portions of our widely-extended work, and met for the purpose of transacting important business, which must affect for weal or woe the interests of the Church of God, which He hath bought with his own blood, it is proper that we should earnestly invoke Divine illumination and aid in the performance of the high and holy duties which have called us together. Let us be deeply impressed with an abiding conviction of the constant presence of God, in all our actions and in all our intercourse. Let us remember that we are here to devise means for the enlargement and establishment of our glorious Redeemer's kingdom; hence, let us in all our conduct, public and private, act with reference to God's good pleasure and the advancement of his glory.

The retrospect of the last four years is full of instruction and encouragement. The work of God has greatly prospered and enlarged within our bounds. God has done great things for us and by us; yet how much more might have been accomplished had we been faithful to the grace of God received, and zealous in diffusing this grace abroad. We fear that the Church has not been sufficiently aggressive in her character. Encouraged, however, by the remembrance of the Divine favor in the past, let us address ourselves, with all diligence and humility, to the task of planning more wisely and acting more boldly and zealously for time to come.

Since our last quadrennial meeting it has pleased the all-wise God to remove our beloved and honored friend and brother, Bishop Capers, from the toils of earth to his eternal rest above. A faithful laborer in his Master's vineyard, devoted, useful and popular, his life was one of consecration and his death peaceful. He requires no eulogy from us, nor will he ever need a monument to perpetuate his name while the missions to the slaves of Carolina shall continue to exist, or while they shall be remembered by succeeding generations.

We shall now briefly direct attention to several of the prominent departments of our work. We feel that we have cause of gratitude to God for the general peace which pervades the Connection. In doctrine we believe there is general unity; and in reference to our government and usages, although, as might be reasonably expected, there are diversities of opinion on some points, yet these differences of opinion, cherished as doubt honestly by the different parties, do not interfere with the feelings of mutual brotherly love nor with feelings of profound respect for the Church and love for her institutions. This feeling of attachment to the Church and respect for her institutions is an essential element of success in all our plans. Take away the great connectional principle, and our progress to ruin will be certain and rapid. Nor is this devotion to the great principles and institutions of Methodism at all inconsistent with honest differences of opinion on many of the minor economical regulations of our fathers. We may never hope that among so many hundreds of thousands all will see exactly alike in all minor details; but we may hope to see all love alike, all equally loyal to the great principles and aims of Methodism, which are to spread scriptural holiness throughout the earth, by raising up and perpetuating a holy ministry and a holy people. This is the grand object and aim of our organization, and the best method of promoting and securing these glorious results should specially occupy our minds and hearts while we are assembled in our present capacity. Our past history as a people is full of important instruction; and we shall do well to consider carefully the lessons which it teaches us. Our whole system as a Church seems to have sprung up, from time to time, under providential indications; and one of the grand characteristics of our founder was an aptness to perceive and appropriate the good he met with from any quarter; hence the character of many of our usages. Wesley engrafted them into his rules because he perceived their admirable adaptation to promote scriptural piety among the members of his societies; and the experience of more than a century has confirmed the practical soundness of his judgment. For, just in proportion as our people have conformed in spirit and practice to the prudential regulations of Methodism, have they been a holy, spiritual, and aggressive portion of the Church militant; and in proportion as these have been ignored have we become worldly-minded, and vain, and powerless. This fact, it seems to us, should be sufficient to establish the wisdom of their adoption and their admirable adaptation to the ends contemplated; and should at least make us pause before we remove from their place in our economy any of those well-tried and time-honored usages. It is true that the altered condition of society may allow and even require some modification, in order to increased efficiency; but such changes should be made with great care, and only after prayerful deliberation. In most instances it would be better for us, and better for the Church, honestly to keep the rules than to break them or attempt to mend them.

One of the grand distinguishing features of our system is the itinerant ministry. It is deemed important that this feature be preserved in its efficiency; but in order to render this plan as great a blessing as it should be, it must be maintained in its original independence. Local influences must not control it. If the traveling preachers are to receive their appointments from the Bishops, it is essential that they have confidence in the wisdom and impartiality of the appointing power; and the same thing is true in reference to the people who are to receive their pastors by the appointment of the Bishops. Hence it is important not only that the Bishops be strong in the confidence of both preachers and people, but it is also important that the Presiding Elders, who are necessarily to a great extent the Bishops' advisers, should very largely share in this confidence.

The cause of Missions is so intimately connected with the vitality, enlargement and prosperity of the Church, that it is proper for us in this address to call the attention of the General Conference to a critical scrutiny of our plans and operations in that direction. There needs no argument to convince this body of Christian ministers of the vast importance of a well-digested plan for establishing missions, both foreign and domestic; and for furnishing both means and men for their prosecution and support. In glancing at this subject, we call attention first to the important field of domestic missions, which is already extensive, and is annually demanding vastly increased expansion. It is found upon a close examination, that in all the Conferences there are numerous tracts of country, sparsely settled, which are without the regular ministrations of the gospel: there are few, if any, houses of worship, and the people are either too poor to pay for the gospel of Christ, or have never learned to value the institutions of Christianity. It is a lamentable fact that many of these communities are to be found in our oldest States and within the geographical limits of long-established and numerically strong Conferences. In much of this territory missions might be established which would, in a few years, (with proper culture,) become self-sustaining and flourishing circuits. Our large cities also present important fields for missionary effort, which it is feared have not as yet received their proper share of attention from us. Our newly settled territory opens a wide field for the labors of devoted, self-sacrificing evangelists, whose whole life and ministry constantly proclaim that "the love of Christ constraineth us." These fields not only demand to be occupied, but every motive of love to God and men conspires to urge that the work be done at once. Our large and rapidly-increasing foreign population presents an irresistible appeal to our patriotism as well as our Christian sympathy for furnishing them with those means of Christian instruction best adapted to their character and circumstances, to lead them from error to truth, and from sin to holiness and to God. Among the Germans who are annually crowding to our shores, we have already several promising missions; and our brethren of the North, many years ago, entered upon this work with true Christian zeal and enterprise, and in no portion of the field has God given more signal evidences of his approval and blessing. Many thousands have been numbered as the fruits of their faithful labors; and so mightily has the spirit of missions diffused itself among them, that we see them sending back to their fatherland messengers who have carried the gospel in its simplicity and spiritual power, and are now busily and successfully engaged in reviving the doctrines of primitive Christianity upon the well-tried and scriptural plans of our beloved Methodism. In Texas and Missouri, particularly, and also in many other portions of our work, this class of the population is numerous, and demands our special attention. Our Church should give to these people prompt and efficient aid. The Germans are to a large extent a reading people, and we should take care to provide them with a suitable literature. The German paper published by our Church in Galveston would, if well sustained, be a very powerful auxiliary in spreading scriptural truth among them. We recommend to the General Conference to take some measures more effectually to sustain it and extend its influence. After 1844, we consented that the Church North should continue to control the German missions in Missouri. This was well intended, but several years' observation has led us to the conclusion that it would have been best for the prosperity of these missions to have continued them in connection with the Southern Church. They would then have been more directly in sympathy with their American brethren around them; and the two classes thus intimately associated would have exerted a more decided and happy influence on each other; we therefore suggest whether it will not be best for the Southern Church to take more decided measures for occupying that ground.

Our work in California has struggled against a strong tide of opposition, but still maintains its existence. The last year has been one of unusual prosperity, and our Church on the Pacific coast is, we believe, firmly planted, and to-day gives stronger evidence of vitality than it has ever done since its establishment. To those who do not know the state of things there, or who have never properly considered the difficulties attendant on the propagation of genuine Christianity in such a population as gold has attracted to California, it may seem that our progress has been slow; but we are thoroughly satisfied that to sober, reflecting men, who take the proper view of the subject, it will appear that we have achieved quite as much as we ought reasonably to have expected; and we are bound by every consideration of duty to God, and honor and faithfulness to the brethren who at our bidding have gone thither, and to the souls whom God has given them in that distant land, not only to maintain our position there, but to increase the number and the efficiency of the instrumentalities which we have now in operation there. They need, and ought to have from the Atlantic States, a few more able men who will be qualified to fill their more important stations. We should, if practicable, give them aid in the building of a church in San Francisco, as every one who considers the important relation which that great seaport bears to the whole State must perceive the great importance of our possessing a good church-building there; but property is high, and our friends are comparatively few and not abounding in wealth. They need help, and ought to have it. Can we and will we furnish it? The brethren in that country, under a deep and painful conviction of its necessity, have established and are now publishing a religious paper there; they deem this publication indispensable to their prosperity as a Church; and we think that those who have been on the spot will fully and cheerfully endorse this judgment. We recommend this journal to the favorable notice of the General Conference, and of our people generally.

The brethren in that distant part of the work have suffered great inconvenience and damage from the great difficulty, if not impracticability, of obtaining the publications of our own Publishing House. This is the more to be regretted, as our Northern brethren obtain, without difficulty, the publications of the New York Concern. This is known to everybody there, and the contrast is not at all to our advantage. We recommend that such steps be taken as will remove this difficulty. The presence and labors of a Bishop in that distant portion of our work are deemed of great consequence by the brethren there, and they are earnestly solicitous that such arrangements be made as shall secure to them a large increase of episcopal supervision. The great distance, and consequent exposure and expense of annual visitations from the Atlantic coast, present strong arguments in favor of the adoption of some arrangement of that kind to secure the proper efficiency of the Church in that distant but important field of our operations. We commend the subject to the favorable consideration of the General Conference.

The missions to the Indians demand our special and earnest attention. Much has been done for the salvation and improvement of these wandering tribes, for which we are grateful to God. But the work is not half accomplished, nor will it be till we can find a more abundant supply of efficient and cheerful preachers and teachers, ready to labor among Indians if they may but be the means of converting and saving them.

The missions to the slaves of the Southern plantations constitute the most interesting and important field for the missionary operations of the Church, South. The relations which this class of our population sustain to our members and ministers throw them more entirely upon our Church for sympathy and Christian instruction. The reasons which commend them to our Christian effort are sufficiently obvious without being distinctly stated. We regard these missions as the crowning glory of our Church.—The good they have already accomplished is incalculable; but we have as yet very imperfectly entered into the work which God has assigned us. New fields are constantly inviting our occupancy, and if we could only properly occupy them, we believe that expansion to an almost illimitable extent is before us. If these missions could receive more of episcopal attention and supervision, it would be an important advantage to them, in more than one respect.

In addition to the missions already indicated, the wants of a darkened and perishing world invite us to aggressive movements on a large scale. In foreign lands, vast fields unoccupied already claim our sympathy. While the love of foreign travel, and the zeal and liberality of scientific bodies are constantly adding to this already widely extended and unoccupied domain, the wails of these perishing millions have fallen upon our ears and our hearts, and we long to send them help. But where are the men to go, and the means to send them? We have but one foreign mission—that in China. In that far-off field of labor our faithful brethren are laboring zealously; and although their success is apparently small, yet, when we consider properly the difficulties in the way of success, and look at the results of missionary effort in other heathen lands, and even in China, under other missionary organizations, we feel that we have abundant cause to thank God and take courage. We earnestly recommend the China mission to the Church, as demanding and deserving increased liberality and an additional number of laborers. We ought to furnish them with the means of building the needed chapels and schools, and also a competent support for themselves and families; it is enough that at our bidding they are exiles from friends and country, without adding neglect and penury.

It is believed that a careful revision of our whole missionary plan of operations is imperiously demanded; and we submit to the General Conference the propriety of extensive alterations in our missionary constitution.

Our publishing interests demand and will doubtless receive your early, deliberate, and careful attention. Of the importance of the Publishing House as an institution of the Church, there is not, we presume, any diversity of opinion. It was a grand Southern experiment, inaugurated by the last General Conference. Of the manner in which it has been conducted, and the extent to which it has been successful, the official reports to be made to the Conference will enable you to judge. This important establishment ought to be a great bond of connectional union, and a mighty agency for diffusing truth and godliness through out the land; but in order to this grand result, it must have the united energies of the whole Church brought into action for its success.—Without this union of effort, no agents, however skillful, can make it succeed.

We submit to the General Conference whether it will not be best to discontinue all those periodicals which do not sustain themselves; and to decline receiving any papers, as belonging to the General Conference, that cannot furnish unmistakable evidence of their ability to sustain themselves, it being fairly presumable that if the people of any particular section of the Church need and desire the publication of a paper in their midst, they will support it. It will perhaps be proper, for obvious reasons, to exempt from the bearing of this rule the German paper published at Galveston, and the Pacific Methodist, published at San Francisco. The Church has been heretofore sufficiently taxed in paying large sums of money to papers established without competent authority, and conducted with too little prudence. It is time for us to learn wisdom from the things which we have suffered. A few further suggestions may be offered, that our Church papers may become efficient auxiliaries in promoting the cause of God, when properly conducted. We have no doubt that in order to be thus useful, several things deserve attention:

1. There should not be more weekly papers published than the Church can support respectably.

2. The editors of these periodicals should be instructed that they are placed in these positions to defend the institutions of Methodism, and not to discuss and promote innovations upon our established doctrines or usages.—Furthermore, it should be understood that the journals of Methodism should not be made the vehicles of personal or local quarrels. They are designed to conserve the great interests of the Church, and to promote universal concord between the different sections of our great brotherhood. A contrary course will result in incalculable mischief and confusion.

The last General Conference took measures to establish a Tract Society, looking to it as an important auxiliary in the diffusion of religious knowledge, by circulating suitable books and tracts. Subsequently to the adjournment of that body, plans were adopted, and vigorous efforts made to carry out the objects contemplated. No doubt great good has been accomplished; but it is the judgment of many of our brethren that our machinery is complicated, and that our Tract Agency, as at present constituted, is quite too expensive to be profitable. It is probable that important changes should be made. We submit the whole subject to the prayerful and deliberate judgment of the General Conference.

The subject of education presents claims to your consideration, as an agency for good, second only to the preaching of the gospel; and, indeed, it is intimately interwoven with the successful performance of that great work. The children of the Church must and will be educated, at least to a very large extent. As the material prosperity of the country advances, the desire to educate the youth of the country will increase; and this desire is pervading all classes of the community. Not only the rich, but thousands of those in the humbler walks of life feel its influence. It should be the business of the Church to foster this spirit, and give it a proper Christian direction. Knowledge is power, either for good or evil, and is a blessing or a curse, just as it is consecrated to God, and brought under the control of the Spirit and grace of God, or otherwise; and it is certainly the policy of the Church to wrest this power from the hands of Satan, and so direct it as to make it a glorious agency for promoting truth and working out the world's salvation. We believe there is an increasing conviction in favor of denominational schools, as best calculated to promote the cause of sacred, sanctified learning in connection with scriptural and earnest Christianity. This cause has, we believe, been steadily increasing in its influence throughout the Church since our last meeting. Not only are our old institutions still living and accomplishing great good, but a large number of new institutions have sprung into being both for male and female education. This argues favorably for the ultimate and permanent prosperity of the Church, and we hail it as a strong indication for good; yet it is well for us closely to scrutinize the plans on which we operate. It is possible to receive too many colleges into the family, especially when they are not judiciously located with reference to the influence they exert on each other's patronage. We suggest whether it might not be well for the Annual Conferences to be a little more careful in receiving institutions offered for their patronage. We think they should not give agents from their own body to collect funds for any institution which is not the property of the Conference. In some instances this rule has been departed from and agents have been sent out, considerable sums of money collected from our people, and the institution has subsequently passed into other hands. Let past experience teach us wisdom.

We believe that very few, if any, of our institutions are respectably endowed. This is a subject of deep regret, but we do not suppose this body has the ability to remedy it. To the Annual Conferences and the people we must look for the correction of that evil. Let the Annual Conferences act with proper caution in receiving institutions and appointing agents, and it will go very far toward maintaining the confidence of the people, and opening their purses.

It is deemed important that the administration of the Discipline should, as far as possible, be uniform; and in order to promote this desirable end, we recommend that the General Conference either adopt some suitable manual already published, or take measures to have one prepared and published.

The administration of the Bishops will, of course, undergo the proper scrutiny. It does not become us to speak of the manner in which we have performed the duties assigned us.—The delegates from the Annual Conferences will be able to represent us fully in this respect, which we hope they will do faithfully. We have endeavored to discharge our duties according to our ability; but as we claim no infallibility, there may have been errors in the administration, which it is desirable to correct. We have been able to visit most of the Conferences; but indisposition on the part of some of the Bishops has, in a few instances, caused a failure of episcopal visitations. This has been to us a source of deep regret, but it was unavoidable.

It has been frequently asked, how many new Bishops will be needed? To this, of course, we can make no direct reply. The death of our honored brother and colleague, Bishop Capers, has left us more feeble in that department than we were four years ago; and we are not very confident that the surviving members of the Episcopal Board can all be relied on for the coming four years. Yet, if there is to be no change in the plan of operations; if the Bishops are still to be regarded as simply the pastors of the preachers; and if the Church only expects us to visit the Annual Conferences, and the General Conference will provide for the work on the Pacific coast, it is probable that the present Bishops can attend the annual sessions of the different Conferences.

We call attention to one more topic. We have noticed, with some concern, the efforts which have been recently made in certain quarters to introduce important changes into our economy. The attempt to agitate the subject of lay delegation we deem unfortunate. Years ago that subject was extensively agitated, and that with no little bitterness; and because we did not yield to the wishes and clamors of our disaffected brethren, but resolved to maintain the institutions of the Church as we received them from our fathers, thousands of our brethren left us and essayed the establishment of a Church which they believed to be in accordance with the genius of our civil institutions. They had every advantage for making their grand experiment, and what has been the result? Has it not proved a failure, and do not hundreds of our Protestant brethren acknowledge it? And yet, with this failure before our eyes, some of us seem willing to risk a similar experiment. So far as we have heard the sentiments of our lay brethren, they desire no change. What they ask of us is to let the Discipline remain settled, so that they can feel assured that our great landmarks are established permanently, and that the preachers themselves carry out in practice and in speech the requirements of that Discipline, which they have promised to keep. This course, we believe, will tend a great deal more to the peace and prosperity of the Church than the frequent efforts to introduce new plans and principles into our economy.

You will permit us, dear brethren, before we close this address, to call attention to what we regard an evil of threatening aspect, which we fear is increasing among us, and threatens disastrous results to the peace and prosperity of the Church of our choice. The great connectional principle which has been the grand bond of union to our widely extended brotherhood is, we fear, becoming weakened. We are in danger of yielding to personal and local influences, to the destruction of the efficiency of our itinerant system. Local interest tempts us: we yield, and instead of the ample sweep of vision which took in the interests of the great whole, we take narrow views—we look to our own Conference, our own District, our own Circuit or Station—and we are in great danger of losing that broad and expansive Wesleyan spirit which claims the world as its parish, and of settling down on an easy, comfortable, congregational basis, which dispenses with much of the poverty and self-sacrifice of the old plan, and promises to render the ministry a more easy and profitable employment. Does not the General Conference, in some of its movements, encourage this spirit? Take for example the election of men to fill the various offices of the Church.—What should be the question asked in reference to the candidate proposed? Should it not be, "Is he well qualified for the work to which we design to call him?" Of what conceivable importance can it be, where he was born or to what Conference he belongs? It seems to us, the only question should be, Is he the man best fitted for the work? And if so, that should determine our action. But if, departing from this straightforward principle, we choose men to fill important positions in the Church, not because they are well qualified for the work, but because they happen to belong to certain sections of the Church, shall we not introduce incompetency and confusion into the Church of God, and bring our ecclesiastical elections into disgraceful conformity with the contemptible trickery and demagogueism which but too frequently disgrace our political elections? We pray you, brethren, think of this matter seriously, and watch with untiring vigilance against the encroachments of the paralyzing influence of this sectionalizing spirit, which we regard as threatening our peace and efficiency at so many points.

And now, dear brethren, in conclusion, suffer a few words of exhortation. Do not forget that your first business here is to sustain well your characters as faithful ministers of the Lord Jesus. It is to the practical developments of your characters in this relation that the eyes of all will be directed while you are here; and let us constantly bear in mind that our private as well as our public example here will and must exert a tremendous influence for good or evil upon the eternal interests of the thousands who may, during our sojourn here, witness our discussions and decisions. May the spirit of wisdom and grace from God rest upon us, and guide us to such decisions as shall most tend to the glory of God and the peace and unity of the Church purchased by the blood of the Son of God.

THE COMPANY OF HEAVEN.

It is pleasant amid the jars and discords of the lower worlds, to meet and mingle with the great and good and noble spirits that are to be found among us, and to refresh the weary, world-worn mind by association with the pure and holy-hearted; after the busy cares and petty trials of this work-day world are over, to sit quietly down by the fireside, or among two or three who have met together, and converse of that home to which each closing day is bringing us nearer, and toward which our united hearts and hopes are tending.

And if the communion of saints on earth is so sweet, if the society of the good and lovely is to be desired, what must it be to mingle in the grand assemblage above? Heaven has been gathering to itself through countless ages whatever is congenial to its nature, and enriching itself with the spoils of earth. Whatever we look upon as holy and excellent, elevated and worthy to be loved in the character of man, is found gathered and still gathering in that multitude which no man can number, in the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem.

From every century, every generation, out of every people, and nation, and kindred, and tongue, since the world began, a long procession has ascended, and still passed onward, comprising all that is best, and noblest, and brightest in man, all that is holy, all that is true, all that makes earth safe and pleasant to dwell in, and joining itself to that Church of the first-born, which is written in heaven, and to the spirits of just men made perfect. There are those whom we have known and loved.—The hoary head walking among us for so many years in the ways of wisdom—the soldier of the cross, who had learnt to live not unto himself, but unto Him who died—the gentle, pure-hearted, living ones—the tender infant—all taking their place in the ranks of those who are "without fault," before the throne. Once safe within those portals, how glorious their communion, how pure their intercourse! Nothing but holiness, and happiness, and love bind together the family of heaven. Is this the companionship in which we trust to spend our eternal years? What manner of person ought we, then, to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for, and hastening unto the day when we too shall join in that innumerable multitude, and unite with them in the ever new song of praise to Him who hath covered us with a righteousness, and made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light.—Christian Witness.

THE WORLD GROWS BETTER.

It is constantly being said and published that "the world is degenerating," that "men are less honest than formerly," etc., etc.; but it is not so. The world is growing better. There is more probity, charity, truth, and goodness in the world now than ever before. But owing to the omnipresence of newspapers, the crimes of society are now more talked of, and a knowledge of them more widely diffused, than heretofore, and on this account there seems to be more crime now than in the olden times. Suppose there was not a paper or periodical published in America! Crime might then increase a hundred fold, and we should not hear so much about it as we do now. And in past ages crime could be committed without exposure, or comment, or permanent record, except in comparatively a few cases, whereas now it is speedily brought to the broad light of universal publicity.

What I wanted to say about books is this: that there are times in which every book should feels itself above any and all human books. I always believed in life rather than in books. I suppose every day of earth, with its hundred thousand deaths and something more of births—with its loves and hates, its triumphs and defeats, its pangs and blisses—has more of humanity in it than all the books that were ever written, put together. I believe the flowers growing at this moment send up more fragrance to heaven than was ever exhaled from all the essences ever distilled.—The Antiquary.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

BY THE WAY.

My last was from Memphis. The management of the M. and C. railroad have considerably changed their schedule, and the traveler goes through the level country at night. About daylight I left at Tuscumbia, and thence to Nashville had a daylight view of the tunnels and precipices, the mountain scenery, all; arriving here by 8 P. M. the same day.

Florence, the seat of the Wesleyan University, is six miles from Tuscumbia. Stages run between daily. But the Florentines will do better than this: they are building a railroad to their town, branching off from the Memphis and Charleston. Over the Tennessee river they are constructing the bridge for it. Florence is a lovely place—just the place for a seat of learning—and one is surprised that they tried so hard and long to keep old Lagrange alive, on the bleak mountain overlooking it, when this village of the plain invited them to more congenial quarters. President Rivers and his faculty are diligent and successful in their high calling, and have a well ordered and increasing charge of pupils. The college building is outwardly complete, but in need of furniture and libraries, which they are taking steps to supply. The endowment fund is growing—that sure foundation and only one, for such institutions. Students, instead of lodging in dormitories, where all manner of mischief may be concocted, enjoy the social cultivation and refinement of dwelling in private families. I spent a day here with great satisfaction, visiting the college where they make A. B's., A. M's. and D. D's.; and the factories where, at 25 per cent. profit on invested capital, they make cotton cloths.

NASHVILLE, May 11.

Keeping up with the current business of the General Conference, in the forenoon, and spending afternoons in committees, leaves me less time than I expected for correspondence. But this is the less necessary, because the proceedings are so fully reported and reach you in the Daily Advocate.

The legislative department of the State House is well filled by our Conference, and all the arrangements of this magnificent house of stone are highly convenient for our purposes.

As a general rule, the Conferences seem to have sent up their maturest and ablest men as delegates. An old member remarked to me that this Conference was fully equal to that which represented undivided Methodism (before 1844) in all the elements of talent and deliberative fitness and power. They work well together. Yesterday the committees, which had been well gorged, began to pour back reports, and work is done.

The Bishops' address was well received, and is considered by many the best yet put forth. Unlike similar documents, it takes positive ground and has points—any number of them. They give the editorial corps some knocks over the head, and there was some wincing among us. Of course I took none of it to myself.

Last Sabbath I accepted the invitation of Rev. Malone, chaplain, and accompanied him to the Lunatic Asylum, six miles from the city.—Dr. Cheatham has 170 patients under his skillful care, divided into six classes. The buildings are admirably arranged, lighted and ventilated, and the subjects of the worst form of affliction here find a comfortable and even hopeful asylum.

In the chapel the preached word had a quiet hearing. They have not lost their voices, as the singing testified. It was a painfully blank congregation.

An embarrassing circumstance to a visitor in such a place is, he does not know who is crazy and who is not. A stranger is liable to some grotesque blunders. For the inmates many periodicals are taken: I found the Nashville Christian Advocate a favorite paper, and twenty copies of it are taken. Passing a lunatic, in one of the spacious halls, deeply absorbed in the Advocate, I looked over his shoulder and discovered he was reading through one of the communications signed "R. Abbey." I did not disturb him.

Commending you to the columns of the Daily for all the important news,

H. N. M.

To Correspondents.—We are receiving communications, from time to time, without the name of the writers. Please bear in mind that the editor must be entrusted with the name of the writer. Neglect of this is sufficient to bar publication. Some communications now on hand will have to wait the editor's return: others are, for the present, kept back by General Conference proceedings.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY.—This body adjourned sine die on Tuesday, the 18th inst., after a session of eleven days. Nothing of general interest occurred in the proceedings of the last day.—The next Assembly meets in Indianapolis, Ia.

TO "WORN OUT."—The following letter is from some unknown but liberal soul. We pray that heaven may bless the donor.—We will forward the amount to "Worn Out" as soon as possible.

"MR. MCTYEIRE: In the April number of the Home Circle I read an article, "Worn Out." I send you ten dollars, the proceeds of butter and eggs, and wish it was more. Will you please to convey it to our suffering brother?

The Methodist General Conference.

THIRD DAY.

TUESDAY, May 4.

Conference met at half-past eight o'clock.—Bishop Kavanaugh opened the session by reading the first chapter of the First Epistle General of John, and giving out the 258th Hymn—

"Let Zion's watchmen all awake,
And take th' alarm they give;"

followed by an appropriate and fervent prayer.

Bishop Paine took the chair. The minutes of yesterday were read and approved.

Bishop Pierce then took the chair, and called for petitions, memorials, and appeals.

J. H. Linn and W. C. Dandy presented a memorial from Kentucky Conference, calling for the constitution of a new Conference in the mountain regions of Kentucky, bounded as follows: "Commencing at the Lewis line, and running, with the Rowan and Fleming line, to the Olympian Springs; thence to the Red River Iron-works; thence to the mouth of Red River; thence to Crab Orchard, leaving Madison in the lower Conference; thence to Somerset; thence to the Tennessee line, and including so much of the Holston and Western Virginia Conferences as may be necessary to secure said Conference."

It was referred to the Committee on Boundaries.

E. M. Marvin, of the St. Louis Conference, offered a memorial from the Rev. H. L. Dodds, a local preacher residing at Independence, in Missouri, praying the General Conference to take into consideration his claim upon the Treasury of the Missouri Annual Conference for nine years, as a superannuated member;

And another from W. B. McFarland and others, of the St. Louis Conference, seconding the petition of the memorialist.

Both were referred to the Committee on Books and Periodicals.

The same delegate presented another paper, of similar character, from John Monroe, a superannuated member of the St. Louis Conference; which was, without reading, referred to the same committee.

B. M. Drake, of the Mississippi Conference, presented a memorial from that Conference, praying the General Conference so to enlarge the course of study, improve the method of examination, and perfect the whole plan of ministerial education, as to render unnecessary the establishment of Theological schools.

Referred to the Committee on Education.

H. H. Montgomery presented the appeal of James McClennan from the act of the Mississippi Conference, in locating him without his consent, in a manner deemed illegal and unjust; and a communication from the same party, praying that an early day may be set for the hearing of the case, and suggesting next Saturday as the time.

On motion, it was resolved to entertain the appeal, and call it up for action at 10 o'clock on Thursday next.

James Stacy, of the South Carolina Conference, presented a memorial from M. A. McKibben, T. M. Pegues, and R. R. Johnson, asking an alteration of the Discipline on the subject of Class-meetings, placing this institution on the same ground as other prudential means of grace, and not as a condition of membership in the Church.

J. Stacy moved its reference to the Committee on Revisals.

C. K. Marshall added, And that it be printed.

W. A. Smith preferred its reference to a special committee. He said it was a matter of very great importance. Class-meetings had, in a measure, gone down in his part of the country. It was a great calamity. What was the cause? Was there any remedy? Doubted if the remedy was presented in the memorial.—There is a remedy and we ought to find it. It is demanded by the best interests of the Church. The Committee on Revisals will have a great deal to do. Therefore, he moved that the memorial be referred to a special committee.

J. Stacy said that in presenting the memorial he did not feel himself pledged to sustain it. If referred to a special committee, he thought that committee ought to consist of a member from each Conference.

A. L. P. Green thought the Committee on Revisals likely to be overloaded and overworked; and if the memorial received the attention which its importance merited, it must be referred to a special committee.

Lovick Pierce preferred a special committee. His heart had been full of the subject for many years. He had prepared a preamble and resolutions to present to this Conference, looking in a different direction from the memorial under consideration. But he was glad to have the matter come up at this time, and was willing that it should come up in this way, as it would afford him an opportunity to present his views to the Conference on one of the most important subjects that would be brought before the body. He hoped it would be most gravely and prayerfully considered. He differed very widely from the memorialists; but something must be done in relation to class-meetings. The Conference ought to act as if this were to be its last act till eternity should dawn upon us.

J. Stacy now withdrew his motion, and Dr. Smith's motion for a special committee prevailed.

Three, five, nine, and twelve were suggested by different members as the number for such committee.

C. F. Deems proposed that the committee be constituted of one member from each Conference. It was desirable that all the different parts of the Church should be represented in that committee.

J. B. McFerrin thought this would be multiplying committees of this sort, without necessity and without advantage. If we must have a committee consisting of one member from each Conference, why not refer it to the Committee on Revisals? What need of a new committee?

It was agreed to, refer the memorial to a special committee of five.

A communication from the Alabama Conference, on missions, being an extract from the journals of that Conference, was presented by T. W. Dorman, and referred to the Committee on Missions.

Another from the St. Francis Street Church, Mobile, on the subject of endowing the Book Concern, was received, and referred to the Committee on Books and Periodicals.

R. Alexander presented a paper from James W. Shipman, of Texas, recommending the publication of the Discipline in the German language, which was referred to the Committee on Books and Periodicals.

The same delegate presented a resolution advising the establishment of a Book Depository at Galveston, Texas, which was referred to the same committee.

And another recommending the insertion in the General Rules among things forbidden, "Trafficking in Spirituous Liquors," which was referred to the Committee on Temperance.

W. P. Ratcliff, of the Wachita Conference, presented the following:

Resolved, That the Book Agents be instructed to pay the drafts in favor of those claimants on the dividends made out according to the law of the last General Conference.

After some remarks, the resolution was referred to the committee on Books and Periodicals.

J. B. McFerrin presented a paper from Jacob Whiteside, of Washita Conference, the design of which was to secure the object contemplated by that resolution. Referred to Committee on Books and Periodicals.

Bishop Kavanaugh presented an interesting communication from O. Fisher, of the Pacific Conference, respecting our work on the Pacific coast. The writer represents that the Southern Methodist Church has a large moral and religious interest in that country—that the lines between the anti-slavery and conservative parties are as distinctly drawn there as among us, that thousands of Northern people there refuse to attend the preaching of Northern men—that many Northern people are joining the Southern Church, which is increasing constantly—that our cause in California is rapidly gaining ground, and ought to be encouraged—that if the brethern laboring there are abandoned, they will not abandon their work—that such an act would be construed by their adversaries as an abandonment of their principles—that two Methodist Churches do actually exist there, and if a union ever take place it must be on the Southern platform—that Oregon is calling on California for help, and scores there are waiting for an opportunity to join the M. E. Church, South—that they demand the gospel without politics, and several men are wanted at once for Oregon—that a wide door will soon be open in the South, and their lines will soon stretch from San Francisco to Mexico.

The communication was referred to the Committee on Missions.

E. M. Marvin said he had received intelligence from Oregon in a personal communication to the same effect.

R. J. Harp presented a paper from the Louisiana Conference, praying for some uniform method for the reception of members into the Church; and another recommending the striking out of the clause, on page 48 of the Discipline, which makes New Orleans an exception to the common rule in relation to the removal of preachers. The former was referred to the Committee on Revisals; the latter, to the Committee on Itinerancy.

The Bishops now presented the usual Quadrennial Address, which was read by Bishop Andrew; it was ordered to be published.

On motion of H. A. C. Walker, the several matters contained in the Address were referred to their appropriate committees.

The following resolution, signed E. C. Slater, L. Pearce, and M. J. Blackwell, was adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Books and Periodicals be instructed to investigate the securities of the buildings and other properties of the Publishing House; and if it should appear that they are inadequate, then said Committee are hereby instructed to report to this General Conference some feasible plan for promoting the protection of the interests involved.

J. W. Langhorne and W. B. Rowzie presented a preamble and resolution touching the use and application of the chartered fund; which were referred to the Committee on Books and Periodicals.

M. J. Blackwell and E. C. Slater offered a resolution proposing a certain alteration in the Discipline concerning the trial of an accused member; which was referred to the Committee on Revivals.

James W. Allen presented a communication relating to his action as Commissioner in regard to the bequest of Rev. John More, deceased, of a thousand dollars to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. On motion of W. C. Dandy, the report was received and the action approved.

E. Stevenson presented the Report of the Book Agents, which was received and referred to the Committee on Books and Periodicals.

The Book Agents gave notice that to-morrow they would submit an additional paper.

H. N. McTyeire presented the following:

Resolved, That it is expedient to establish a Rio Grande Mission Conference, extending from the mouth of the Rio Grande river to El Paso, and with the Nences river as its Southern boundary; referred to the Committee on Missions.

The following, signed by D. S. Doggett and W. B. Rowzie, was adopted, and referred to the same Committee:

Resolved, That steps should be immediately taken to establish a Mission on the Western Coast of Africa.

The following, signed by A. Monroe and Wm. G. Caples, was referred to the Committee on Boundaries:

Resolved, That the Committee on Revisals be and are hereby instructed to consider the propriety of preparing, for insertion in the Discipline, a form of questions to be asked by the President of each Annual Conference, at the expiration, of each preacher's character; embracing his ministerial character and conduct, the administration of Discipline, etc.

2. Resolved, That they be instructed to prepare a form of questions for the examination of candidates for membership in the Church, embracing, 1. A knowledge of our doctrines and discipline. 2. A hearty approval of the same. 3. A covenant to keep the rules and sustain our economy. 4. A pledge to meet habitually in class.

Resolved, That the Discipline also enjoin it as a special duty on preachers in charge to remind and instruct candidates for membership, in accordance with the preceding resolution.

P. P. Smith offered the following, which was passed, and referred to the Committee on Boundaries:

Resolved, That the Committee on Boundaries be instructed to inquire into the expediency of changing the boundary line between the Florida and Alabama Conferences, so as to embrace Apalachicola in the former.

C. D. Oliver and G. W. Carter presented the following, which was referred to the Committee on Sabath-Schools:

Resolved, That for the thorough instruction and indoctriuation of those uniting with our Church, a committee of ——— be appointed to prepare a catechism embracing the history, doctrines, usages and economy of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

J. B. Payne presented a resolution, proposing certain alterations in the Discipline, which was referred to the Committee on Revisals.

R. W. Keenon presented a resolution requesting the General Conference to direct the Missionary Board to refund the Texas Christian Advocate what it has paid out for the German paper published in Galveston; which was received and referred to the Committee on Missions.

On motion of W. H. Andersen, it was resolved that the exhibit of the Book Agents be published in the Daily as early as practicable.

A resolution concerning the course of study and examination of candidates for the ministry, was received and referred to the Committee on Revisals.

N. W. Burks and C. K. Marshall presented a resolution proposing a certain alteration in the Sacramental service, which was referred to the Committee on Revisals.

The Bishop announced the following committees:

On the Memorial from Washington: W. W. Bennett, C. D. Oliver, R. J. Boyd.

On the Memorial concerning Class-Meetings: D. R. McAnally, J. E. Evans, W. A. McSwain, W. Barringer, and G. Shaeffer.

After announcements by chairmen of committees, Conference adjourned with the benediction by the Bishop.

FOURTH DAY.

WEDNESDAY, May 5.

Conference opened at the usual hour, Bishop Pierce in the chair.

After the opening service Bishop Early took the chair.

The call was made for petitions, memorials, and appeals.

J. H. Linn presented several papers relating to unadjusted claims upon the Publishing House; to wit:

One from the Rev. S. Veach.

One from Mrs. S. A. Latta.

One from the Rev. Thomas V. Brown.

One from Mrs. Eliza V. Bascom.

All of which were referred, without reading, to the Committee on Books and Periodicals.

J. H. Linn announced that Lexington, Ky., would be in nomination for the seat of the next General Conference.

A. H. Redford presented a memorial from a joint meeting of several official Boards in Louisville, Ky., asking for a Book Depository in that city, which was referred to the Committee on Books and Periodicals.

R. Fisk presented a preamble and resolution, in substance as follows:

Whereas, W. Mitchell, deceased, of Kentucky, bequeathed an estate, amounting to $1000, to the Methodist Episcopal Church, without designating the particular object of the bequest; and whereas there is good reason to believe that said bequest was intended for the benefit of Scottsville Circuit, Louisville Conference; therefore,

Resolved, That the General Conference be respectfully requested to direct that said bequest be placed in the hands of the Quarterly Conference of said circuit, to be used as intended in the will.

Mr. Fisk stated his reasons for believing that the bequest was intended for the benefit of Scottsville Circuit.

On motion of J. G. Bruce, the request of the memorialists was granted.

N. Scarritt presented a memorial calling for the division of the St. Louis and Kansas Mission Conferences, and for the formation of a new Conference, to be called the Kansas Conference.

Another was presented by D. R. McAnally, H. N. McTyeire, and A. T. Mann, suggesting the boundaries of the proposed new Conference.

Both of which were referred to the Committee on Boundaries.

J. G. Jones presented a complaint made against Bishop Early by James McClennan, of Mississippi. The complaint did not involve the Christian or ministerial character of the Bishop, but set forth certain grievances in his administration, connected with the location of said McClennan by the Mississippi Conference without his consent.

It was proposed to refer the paper to the Committee on Episcopacy.

L. Campbell desired that the charge and complaint be read.

G. W. Brush thought it ought to be referred without reading.

E. Wadsworth desired the reading.

A. L. P. Green opposed it.

G. W. Langhorne advocated the reading.

R. J. Boyle stated that the paper had been presented to the committee, but they declined receiving or even reading it, till it should be passed into their hands by the Conference.

W. G. Carter preferred that the charge be at once investigated by the General Conference.

James E. Evans said this Conference had no power to try a Bishop, and urged that the document should go unread to the committee.

S. P. Richardson thought that, in justice to the Bishop, the paper should be read.

G. Jones did not desire to hear the document read till it had been before the committee, and they had reported it worthy the attention of the Conference.

C. K. Marshall wished to correct an impression—that the matter involved only the administration of the Bishop, not his moral character.

Bishop Paine said there was no question of morality in the case: it was a question only of law and administration, and ought to go at once to the committee.

Bishop Early said that he challenged publicity; that he did not expect the matter to come up while he was in the chair.

Hereupon Bishop Paine took the chair.

G. W. Langhorne said that there was something sacred about the character of a Bishop. Up to this time no blur had appeared upon the moral integrity of our Bishops. There was no more effectual way of bespattering a man's character than by innendo. The paper ought certainly to be read, that the Conference might know precisely what it was.

A. H. Mitchell had heard enough, and wanted the paper read.

The vote being now put, the motion prevailed, and the complaint was read.

Bishop Early presented a paper from the complainant to himself, to show that he had been duly notified of the complaint against him.

On motion of D. B. Nicholson, the complaint was referred to the Committee on the Episcopacy.

J. G. Jones made an explanation. The complaint had been placed in his hands yesterday morning; with the consent of the complainant, he presented it to the committee; but they refused to entertain it till it should have been before the Conference.

H. H. Montgomery presented a memorial from Rev. Thomas Ford, of the Mississippi Conference, concerning our publishing interests, and proposing some alterations in the modus operandi of the establishment; which was referred to the Committee on Books and Periodicals, but did not come into the hands of the editor.

J. A. Ivey, of Louisiana, offered the following, which was referred to the Committee on Boundaries:

Resolved, That our delegate be instructed to request General Conference to attach the remaining part of the State of Louisiana to the Louisiana Conference.

H. A. C. Walker presented a memorial from the South Carolina Conference, concerning the form of receiving members into the Church; which was referred to the Committee on Revisals.

R. Alexander presented a resolution of the Texas Conference, signed by the Secretary, expressing a strong opposition to the dismemberment of said Conference, by attaching any part of its territory to the East Texas Conference; which was referred to the Committee on Boundaries.

J. F. Hughes presented a resolution, proposing a change in the Discipline in regard to the reception of members on trial, which was referred to the Committee on Revisals.

F. G. Ferguson offered two resolutions proposing several other changes in the Discipline, which was referred to the Committee on Itinerancy.

W. P. Ratcliffe offered a resolution proposing a change in the Discipline in regard to the constitution of trustees of churches, which was referred to the Committee on Revisals.

T. T. Ashby presented the following:

Resolved, That the Committee on Revisals be and hereby are instructed to prepare a form for the dedication of churches, to be printed in the forthcoming edition of the Discipline.

L. Campbell was opposed to all such forms. We had forms enough already. Instead of constructing a form for the consecration of churches, he would rather pass a law never to have another church consecrated.

Bishop Soule hoped all our churches everywhere would be consecrated.

A. H. Mitchell offered a substitute—namely: That this matter be referred to the Board of Bishops.

C. F. Deems thought the matter should go to the Committee on Revisals.

C. K. Marshall opposed the adoption of a form. He thought a Methodist preacher might perform such a service without a prescribed form. No use in sending this matter to the Lethean Committee. If it should go there, it would never be heard of again. He held a resolution then in his hand, which he expected would go to that committee, after which he never expected an echo from it. He saw a peculiar expression in the left eye of Dr. McFerrin, which said: "I'll build a tombstone over it in a twinkling."

G. Jones moved that the whole matter be laid on the table, which was lost.

R. T. Heflin thought it was time to pause and see where we were going. We had already proposed too many changes in the Discipline. If the Bishops would prepare a sermon for some of our preachers to deliver on such occasions, it might be very useful, but any other form for a dedication was unnecessary.

J. Hamilton was of opinion that there should be some appropriate form in the Discipline for so important a service. He moved to amend the motion by substituting a special committee for the Episcopacy.

Bishop Soule said the Wesleyans in England had no form for dedicating their chapels. They have a suitable service at the opening of a new chapel; and when in London, he had officiated on two of these occasions, but they had no special form, and never had any.

T. M. Gardner moved the indefinite postponement of the subject, which was carried.

C. C. Gillespie offered a preamble and resolution touching literary institutions, which was referred to the Committee on Education, but did not come into our hands.

P. E. Pitts offered the following, which was referred to the Committee on Itinerancy:

Resolved, That the Committee on Itinerancy be instructed to inquire into the general practice of our people in regard to the Christian duty of fasting or abstinence, and report thereon.

FIFTH DAY.

THURSDAY, May 6.

Conference opened at half-past 8 A. M., Bishop Kavanaugh in the chair.

Reports from committees were called for.

W. M. Wightman presented Report No. 1 from the Committee on the Episcopacy, relating to BISHOP CAPERS.

The Committee on Episcopacy beg leave respectfully to submit the following preamble and resolutions as suitable to be entered on the Journal of the General Conference:

Whereas, It has pleased God to remove by death, on the 26th of January, 1855, WILLIAM CAPERS, one of the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, a man who for nearly half a century was identified with the itinerant ministry, served his generation faithfully, and will be honored by posterity as the founder of missions to the blacks in his native State; therefore,

Be it Resolved, That in recording on the Journal this mournful event, we desire to magnify the riches of the Divine grace manifested in him, and which led to a full consecration of his abilities, from early manhood, to the work of the Methodist ministry. Eloquent, courteous, and influential, he filled with dignity and usefulness the varied spheres of service intrusted to him; and in the office of Episcopal oversight maintained such a position in the respect and affection of his brethren as warranted the universal confidence of the Church. Although declining health in the latter part of his life diminished the vigor and extent of his activities, yet his motto to the last was, "As much as in me lies." He died in the faith of that Jesus whom he had known and preached for forty-six years as an Almighty Savior, and in the sure and certain hope of eternal life through the merits of His atoning sacrifice.

Resolved furthermore, That the Secretary of the General Conference be and he is hereby instructed to convey to the family of the deceased the foregoing resolution, accompanied with an expression of the sympathy of this body on the occasion of their late and severe bereavement.

Respectfully submitted,

W. M. WIGHTMAN, Chairman.

May 6, 1858.

J. B. McFerrin presented Report No. 1 of the Committee on Books and Periodicals, recommending the publication of the Hymn Book, Discipline, and Catechisms in the German language.

After some remarks from J. B. McFerrin and J. Hamilton, it was, on motion of E. Wadsworth, laid on the table for the present.

The Chair now called for petitions, memorials, and appeals.

W. C. Johnson presented a resolution, being a copy from the records of the Tennessee Conference, instructing the delegates of said Conference to use their influence to have the action of the last General Conference, on page 300 of their Journal, appended to the General Rule on Slavery, as explanatory of its nature.

It was, on motion, referred to the Committee on Revisals.

C. K. Marshall presented a printed memorial on the subject of a great central paper.

The memorial contemplates the publication of a Church paper, on the principle of a weekly tract, for general distribution, without subscription or fixed price; every church to establish an agency for its circulation, and every member and family to be supplied at their own price. The memorialist thinks that the Church will come up manfully to the support of such a publication; that one page devoted to high-priced advertisements will pay well; and that the Church ought to raise two or three hundred thousand dollars, the interest of which should be devoted to this enterprise. Thousands of dollars have been already pledged to the object by worthy and liberal Christian gentlemen, and any necessary amount may be procured by proper effort.

The memorialist sustained the paper by a characteristic and eloquent speech, and desired its reference to a special committee.

He said: "Many look upon the plan as visionary. To us it is plain, clear, and practical. If not appreved, I can wait a century to see it done, and look down from heaven with satisfaction to see it in operation. My scheme may fail, but I would rather be the author of a valuable enterprise that failed because it was in advance of the times, than to raise a crop of Jonah's gourds that would shade the torrid zone for a century."

It was, on motion, referred to a special committee of nine.

B. M. Drake presented a resolution from the Quarterly Conference of Clinton Circuit, Mississippi, recommending the plan for publishing papers given some time since in the New Orleans Christian Advocate; which was, on motion, referred to the same committee.

N. F. Reid presented a memorial calling for a Book Depository in Raleigh, N. C.; which was referred to the Committee on Books and Periodicals.

A. H. Mitchell presented a memorial from R. Abbey, suggesting a plan for conducting our publishing operations, which was referred to the Committee on Books and Periodicals.

EAST TEXAS CONFERENCE—BOUNDARY-NAME.

J. W. Fields, from the East Texas Conference, submitted, in behalf of said Conference, a resolution instructing the Committee on Boundaries to inquire into the expediency of changing the boundary-line between the East Texas and the Texas Conferences. Before the resolution was read, he remarked that it was sent up here after unavailing efforts to settle amongst themselves the question of boundary between the two Conferences of this State.

On his further motion, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Boundaries.

J. W. Fields also submitted a resolution with reference to a change of name of these two Conferences, which was read by the Secretary.

W. H. Seat, of Texas, remarked, that if the brother desired any change of name for the East Texas Conference, he hoped the General Conference would hear him; but he would say for the west of Texas, that they were entirely satisfied with their Conference name.

On motion by J. W. Fields, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Revisals.

INDIAN MISSION CONFERENCE.

L. P. Lively, from the Indian Mission Conference, submitted a resolution, with two endorsing seconds, directing the Committee on Boundaries to inquire into the expediency of dividing said Conference, so as to attach the Choctaw District to the East Texas Conference, and add the remainder of said Conference to the Arkansas Conference. He moved that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Boundaries.

It was so referred.

THE PACIFIC FIELD.

Bishop Kavanaugh (the President) now laid before the Conference a memorial from the Pacific Conference, presenting the necessities of that field of labor, and urging the necessity of the supply of laborers, signed by W. R. Gober and others; which was read. He suggested (though it was not his province to make a motion) that so much of the memorial as refers to the Episcopal Visitations should be referred to the Committee on the Episcopacy.

J. Boring—I do not desire, Mr. President, to contravene your judgment, or your instructions as to the particular direction to be given to the memorial.

Bishop Kavanaugh—I have no instructions.

J. Boring—I have heard the memorial, etc., with a great deal of interest which, in the very nature of things, no other member of this body can feel. The memorial sets forth what I know to be most true. It occurs to me, that if the paper were to be divided and referred—part of it to the Committee on the Episcopacy, and a part to the Committee on Books and Periodicals, and if we should be called to act upon separate interests in that important field of labor—I fear that by such an arrangement this General Conference will again adjourn without any thing like an adequate idea of the vast work, its importance and its necessities. Four years ago I, desired an opportunity of presenting these same facts, from my place in the General Conference; but it was denied me by the force of circumstances. Bishop Soule also sought an opportunity to do the same thing, but, as things came up, it could not be done. And now, sir, whilst I would not bring my judgment against yours, I would say to the body that, from personal knowledge derived from my connection with that work for four years from its beginning, my decided opinion is, that the whole interest ought to come before this General Conference, with its connections as a whole, and at the same time. It occurs to me that this object cannot be reached so well and so fully by any other method as by the appointment of a special committee to take charge of this memorial. Brother Kelly is here, formerly our missionary in that field; I am here; Bishop Soule and Bishop Andrew are here, and Bishop Kavanaugh, who is now in charge of that work, is also here present; and it occurs to me that this is the time for the elicitation of full information upon this subject, and that, at last, the great work on the Pacific coast should, for once, be brought before the General Conference. I will add, that there are a number of very peculiar and important facts connected with the history and prosperity of that work, which are not and which could not be contained in the memorial, and which ought to be brought before the Conference. I will move that the whole subject be referred to a special committee, with a request that they report at as early a day as practicable. I do so in the belief that this course will elicit all the desired information in the case. Upon this subject, sir, I stand to-day just where I stood in 1849, when I was assigned to that work; where I stood in 1854, when I left it, and where I stood when the last vestige of my property went for it. I am for this work, and I will stand for it, under all proper circumstances.

A. L. P. Green suggested that there be excepted from the reference that part of the paper having relation to the Episcopal visitations. According to the uniform practice of this body, that part must go to the Committee on the Episcopacy.

J. Boring—I was apprised of that, and I am a stickler for law. I know that subject must go before the Episcopal Committee, but still I apprehend that need not prevent the reference of the whole of that California paper to a select committee.

W. McMahon—The paper ought to be referred to two committees. It was too long for one.

J. Boring—I accept Dr. Green's amendment.

Bishop Kavanaugh—I am glad of the interest Dr. Boring has manifested in this matter.

The motion for a select committee was adopted.

On motion by A. L. P. Green, it was ordered that so much of said paper as refers to the Episcopal visitations be referred to the Episcopal Committee.

J. Boring suggested that said Select Committee consist of nine members, to be appointed by the Chair; and it was so ordered.

BOOK AGENTS' ADDRESS.

J. B. McFerrin—Before the Conference proceed to the special order of the day, I desire to say that there is an important matter waiting to be presented and read here, and which must be submitted, before one of the standing committees can proceed with their labors. The brethren have been two days waiting to get that paper before them.

J. E. Edwards moved that the special order be dispensed with for that purpose; which was agreed to.

E. Stevenson remarked, that the paper had been prepared amidst the multiplicity of other cares and labors; and whilst it might be found defective in many particulars, he still felt that it contained facts and reflections that might prove to be of some advantage to the Conference in their deliberations. It contains not only matter which we are bound to notice, but suggestions which we have deemed it our duty to submit; and upon the whole we trust that its suggestions will not be regarded as altogether out of place.

The Book Agents then submitted their Address, as an Appendix to their Report presented on Tuesday, setting forth the condition and prospects of the Publishing House.

L. M. Lee moved its reference to the Committee on Books and Periodicals.

E. Wadsworth moved, as an amendment, that so much of the document as relates to the Tract cause be referred to the Committee on Tracts; so much as relates to Sunday Schools to the Committee on Sunday Schools; and the remainder to the Committee on Books and Periodicals.

L. M. Lee wished permission to submit to the Committee on Books and Periodicals, in connection with the address of the Agents, an Exhibit of the Richmond Depository for each year since he has had charge of it, with a detailed account of all the facts in connection with it; which was, on motion, granted.

E. H. Myers presented his report as Agent of the Charleston Depository, with a request that it might be added to the address of the Agents; which was, on motion, permitted.

F. E. Pitts thought the whole address ought to go to the Committee on Books and Periodicals.

The vote was taken, and the address, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the committees, as named in E. Wadsworth's amendment.

T. O. Summers read a note from the Librarian of the Tennessee Library, presenting to the General Conference copies of Professor Safford's Geological Reconnoisance of Tennessee, with map, his Second Report, and other documents.

On motion of T. O. Summers, it was Resolved, That the thanks of the Conference be tendered to the Librarian for this courtesy.

The order of the day was now called up, to wit: The appeal of James Maclennan from the action of the Mississippi Conference, in locating him without his consent.

The appellant desired the assistance of H. H. Montgomery in managing his case; which was, on motion, granted.

The appellant occupied the time till near the hour of adjournment; when, on motion of C. F. Deems, it was Resolved, That the appellant be allowed to prosecute his appeal to-morrow, at 10 o'clock A. M.

G. Jones submitted a resolution directory to the Committee on Revisals, instructing them to inquire into the expediency of inserting a new rule in the book, prohibiting dancing and attendance on the theater by our members—signed also by J. Lusk and B. M. Drake; which was read and referred to the Committee on Revisals.

J. Stacy submitted a resolution, (signed also by R. P. Smith,) directing the Committee on Revisals to consider the propriety of amending the Discipline on page 112, etc., with reference to the trial of ministers; which was read and referred to the Committee on Revisals.

C. K. Marshall submitted a resolution (signed also by H. E. Thweatt) with reference to amendments of the Discipline on pages 56, 58; which was read and referred to the Committee on Revisals.

R. Alexander submitted a resolution, (signed also by R. W. Kennon,) directory to the Committee on Itinerancy, and instructing them to inquire into the expediency of the Bishops' appointing certain traveling agents to promote the circulation of books in certain Conferences; which was read and referred to the Committee on the Itinerancy.

J. B. Payne submitted a resolution, signed also by G. J. Pearce, directing the proper committee to inquire into the propriety of shortening the time of qualifying for deacon's and local preachers' orders, from two years to one year, and from four years to two years; and to consider the subject with special reference to the existing necessity in many quarters for the due administration of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper; which was read and referred to the Committee on Revisals.

E. F. Sevier submitted a resolution, signed also by E. E. Wiley, to this effect:

Resolved, By the delegates of the several Annual Conferences, That the present name of the churches we represent be changed, and that they be called and known hereafter by the name and style of the Methodist Church.

CENTRAL RELIGIOUS PAPER.

The Bishop presiding, under the order of this day, now announced the special committee to consider the memorial concerning a central religious paper, as follows: C. K. Marshall, Chairman; D. S. Doggett, J. Hamilton, W. J. Sasnett, Lovick Pierce, J. Boyle, F. E. Pitts, E. Stevenson and R. Alexander.

SIXTH DAY.

FRIDAY, MAY 7.

Conference met at the usual hour, Bishop Kavanaugh in the chair.

Thomas Maddin, of the Tennessee Conference, conducted the morning devotions.

The minutes of yesterday were read, corrected and approved; when Bishop Paine, having been requested, took the chair, and called for reports from standing committees.

RIO GRANDE MISSION CONFERENCE.

J. Boring, from the Committee on Missions, to whom the subject of the establishment of a new Conference, to be called the Rio Grande Conference, was referred, reported a recommendation of the establishment of such a Conference, and proposing boundaries, by a line beginning at the mouth of the Guadaloupe river, and thence running up said river to San Antonio; thence along the Military Road to Fort Mesan; thence north to the Colorado river, etc.; thence round to the Rio Grande, down said Rio Grande to its mouth, and thence along the coast to the beginning.

The report lies on the table one day under the rules of Conference.

WILL OF PEYTON M. WYATT.

J. Boring, from the same Committee, to whom had been referred the memorial signed by W. J. Hays and others, asking the Conference to consider a certain bequest in the will of Peyton M. Wyatt, reported Committee's concurrence in the opinion that the bequest should be turned over to the Boston Circuit, East Texas Conference; it appearing to them that such was the design of the testator.

The PRESIDENT—It is not the province of the Chair to give direction to the report.

E. H. Myers moved its adoption.

J. Boring stated, for the satisfaction of the Conference, that the Committee on Missions, after every investigation which could be had, came to the conclusion that such was the design of the testator.

The report was adopted.

CLAIM OF THE TEXAS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

J. Boring, from the same Committee, to whom had been referred the subject of expenditures for the German paper by the Texas Christian Advocate, reported that they were satisfied that the sum of $550 should be refunded to said Advocate from the Treasury of the Missionary Society.

J. BORING—We had before us the delegation from Texas, two members of the Publishing Committee of the Texas Christian Advocate, and also conferred with Dr. Sehon and Dr. Stevenson: so that there can be no question about the correctness of the matter reported. It is perhaps unnecessary to lay it on the table.

On motion of J. G. Bruce, the motion was adopted.

MISSION ON WESTERN COAST OF AFRICA.

J. Boring, from the same Committee, to whom had been referred the subject of establishing a mission on the Western Coast of Africa, reported that, having considered the subject, it was inexpedient, in their judgment, to establish such a mission at the present time.

G. W. LANGHORNE—As a member of the committee, I would offer a substitute for that report, which I drew up after leaving the Committee last night. It is seconded by F. E. Pitts.

The substitute, which was read, proposes, in form of a resolution, that if, at any time during the interim between this and the meeting of the next General Conference, the providence of God should open a door for the establishment of such a mission, our Missionary Board be requested to avail themselves of it.

E. H. Myers moved that the report be referred back to the committee.

The motion was adopted, and so the report and resolution were referred back to the Committee.

BOUNDARY LINE BETWEEN ALABAMA AND MEMPHIS CONFERENCES.

L. Pierce, from the Committee on Boundaries, to whom was referred the proposition of brothers Kogar and Sullivan, submitted a report, (No. 1,) recommending certain changes in the boundary line between the Alabama and Memphis Conferences.

Also Report (No. 2) on the resolution of brothers Smith and Andrews, asking that the Apalachicola Mission be transferred from the Alabama to the Florida Conference, and recommended its adoption.

Also Report (No. 3) on the paper of J. H. Linn and others, as to the formation of a new Conference, to be composed of portions of the Kentucky and Virginia Conferences; recommending that such Conference be not formed at this time.

The Chair.—This report, of course, lies on the table, as it contemplates a change in the Discipline.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

J. B. McFerrin, from the Committee on Books and Periodicals, submitted a report, (No. 2,)

I. With reference to the claim of Mrs. Eliza V. Bascom, recommending that the whole matter be referred to the Book Agents.

II. The claim of Mrs. S. A. Latta, recommending that her claim be not allowed.

III. The claim of Thos. V. Brown, recommending that the same be not allowed.

IV. On the security of the Publishing House properly, in accordance with the resolution of E. C. Slater and others, the Committee report—

1. That the deeds of the lands and buildings have all been duly made and recorded.

2. That the buildings are constructed in part with inflammable materials, and filled with inflammable matter; and owing to the contiguity of other buildings, they regard the establishment as liable to injury by fire.

3. That there is no insurance except on that part connected with the Bindery.

4. That the Book Agents have found it difficult to procure a policy.

The Committee recommend that the General Conference take steps for the better security of the property, either by making the buildings fire-proof, or by securing a reasonable policy of insurance.

J. H. Linn moved to take up the report.

A. L. P. Green—There are a good many papers in the hands of committees, and I move that it be laid on the table for the present.

The motion prevailed, and the report was laid on the table.

REPORT FROM THE COMMITTEE ON REVISALS.

A. L. P. Green, from the Committee on Revisals, submitted a report (No. 1) on the prayer of the Quarterly Conference of King and Queen Circuit, Virginia Conference, recommending an alteration in the Discipline—striking out, and inserting to this effect: At each Quarterly Conference the preacher in charge shall read the names of those who are received into the Church, and also the names of those who are excluded therefrom; and shall give a general statement of the condition of his circuit, station, or mission.

2. The Committee do not recommend the striking out of the word, "expressly."

3. The Committee recommend that the first resolution from Prattville, Ala., be transferred to the Committee on Itinerancy.

4. That the second resolution from Prattville be transferred to the Committee on Temperance.

5. That the resolution of C. D. Oliver be transferred to the Committee on Sabbath Schools.

J. B. McFerrin moved to lay the report on the table, but did not press the motion.

A. L. P. Green—The first paper from Prattville, marked No. 4 in the report, refers to the subject of Lay Delegation; which, of course, belongs to the Committee on Itinerancy. The next paper from Prattville is on the subject of temperance; which, of course, belongs to the committee on that subject. The next is brother Oliver's on the creation of a Catechism for Sabbath Schools. None of these properly belong to our committee.

A. R. Erwin moved that the report be adopted.

C. K. Marshall disliked to see this last subject transferred to the Committee on Sabbath-schools. He understood Bro. Oliver to agree with him, that this resolution aims at something beyond a mere Sunday-school book; something that shall cover the entire doctrine of the Methodist Church; something that Chief Justice Taney might take into his hand if he wished to study the polity of our Church—a book for the information of the people at large. Such a book is much needed. If I were asked for a book that might give a knowledge of the doctrines, history, and economy of our Church, I confess I should not know exactly what book to indicate. I take that back, sir. In regard to the doctrines and constitution of the Church I should say, certainly, the New Testament. But, outside of that, I should not know what book to recommend. I could think of a dozen books, but not one of them would meet my view. I want to see this plan adopted, this book produced and sanctioned by the Bishops; and for this reason I oppose the laying of the report on the table, and ask its reference to the Committee on Books and Periodicals.

J. E. Evans—The motion is now to adopt the report of the Committee on Revisals, recommending the transfer of these papers; and the reason assigned by the Chairman is, that the Committee on Revisals have nothing to do with them, inasmuch as they propose no change in the Discipline. But it strikes me that one of these papers does propose to strike out a very important part of the Discipline. Turn to pages 35 and 39, prescribing who shall compose the General and Annual Conferences, and examine them in connection with that paper, and you will find that it materially affects the Discipline. I prefer that it should remain with the Committee on Revisals, because I have confidence in that committee. I want them to meet the question that has been referred to them, and not transfer it to another committee. Let them meet the responsibility. It involves a grave question, and certainly does come legitimately before them.

E. H. Myers read the paper referred to, and alleged that nothing was contemplated to be done by it. It took no action that need disturb anybody's mind.

A. L. P. Green—I said it proposed no change in the Discipline.

The said paper was then ordered to be transferred to the Committee on the Itinerancy.

The second paper from Prattville, asking for a rule of prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors, except for medicinal purposes, was referred to the Committee on Temperance.

A. L. P. Green—As to the other paper, I am perfectly willing that it should take the direction suggested by Bro. Marshall, and go to the Committee on Books and Periodicals.

C. D. Oliver—It was not designed to take the proposed book out of the Sabbath-schools, but it was designed to be incorporated into our Sabbath-school Libraries. It was intended to embrace the history, ordinances, and discipline of the Church, touching probationers, class meetings, etc.

This paper was referred to the Committee on Books and Periodicals.

The Chair—The balance of the report having respect to a change of the Discipline, of course it lies on the table one day.

WASHINGTON CITY STATION.

C. D. Oliver, from the special committee appointed to consider the memorial from the Quarterly Meeting of the Washington City Station, Virginia Conference, submitted a favorable report in writing, which was read by the Secretary.

The committee to whom was referred the memorial of the Quarterly Conference of Washington City Station, Virginia Conference, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to present the following:

The interest in behalf of which your memorialists plead is one of the greatest importance to the Southern Church, and to the cause of true religion in the metropolis of the nation. This point needs no elaboration. Every member of this body must feel that so great and influential a denomination as the M. E. Church, South, should be represented by a large and flourishing society at the seat of the General Government.

The little band of Southern Methodists in Washington City have been, for the last eight years, unfurling and stemming the tide of opposition from the thousands in that city who hold connection with an avowedly abolition Church, and are served by the members of a Conference openly declared to the anti-slavery.

They might have suppressed their convictions of duty and remained in the Northern Church, but they could not sacrifice principle. They believed our Church to be right on the great question that severed us from the North, and nobly took their stand in the ranks of Southern Methodism.

Their ruin was predicted by those who made the wish father to the prophecy. Eight years have passed away; and our Church there not only exists, but grows in numbers and influence.

They represent the M. E. Church, South, in the Federal city: and there, where crowds meet from all parts of the Union, "they have unfurled the banner and proclaimed the principles of Southern Methodism."

While these brethren are fully able to sustain themselves in their present place of worship as a station of the Virginia Conference, they feel persuaded that our cause there would be greatly promoted by having a more spacious edifice in a more eligible situation. We cannot do better than to repeat the language of your memorials on this particular point: "We ought to have a more spacious building, and a more convenient location. We need a large and better situated building; but, we repeat, for ourselves, but for the accommodation of the Southern Methodists who are here in crowds all the year, or the months during the session of Congress. With such an advantage, we are confident that we could enlarge the sphere of our operations to the material advancement of the sacred cause which we all hold so dear."

Your committee would also call the attention of the General Conference to the fact that all the leading denominations of the country are taking measures for the establishment of large and influential churches in the National Metropolis. The Protestant Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Baptists, and Northern Methodists have been making most strenuous efforts to increase their numbers and influence in the Federal city. All these Churches, with the exception, perhaps, of the Episcopal, have sent their agents far and wide through the North and South, soliciting funds for the purpose of building large and commodious houses of worship. Why should we be behind all other denominations in this respect? Our people are more numerous, quite as wealthy and as liberal as those of any other Church in Christendom, and we would fain believe that all that is needed to bring them to the support of this great enterprise is, to place it before them in its true bearings upon the religious interests of the hundreds of Southerners who annually congregate in the metropolis of the Union, and to show them the importance of being represented there by a Church worthy of the noble body of Christians whose great purpose it is to spread scriptural holiness over these lands without turning aside to make war up the rights which we enjoy under the Constitution of a great and free people.

Your committee therefore recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, That we cordially recommend to the confidence and liberal patronage of the members and friends of our Church, the Agent that may be appointed to raise funds for the purpose of erecting a more spacious house of worship for the use of the M. E. Church, South, in Washington City.

2. Resolved, That we will give our hearty co-operation to the Agent whenever he may visit our fields of labor, and that we respectfully request all the preachers of our Church to do likewise.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

W. W. BENNETT.
C. D. OLIVER.
R. J. BOYD.

D. S. Doggett moved the adoption of the report as a whole. He hoped there would be no contrariety of opinion. He had been closely connected with that church for the last two years, and was fully prepared to endorse the statement of facts as well as the reasoning in the report. The request made in this case had peculiar merit. Similar requests had come up from individual churches. This rested on very different ground. The church was located in the great center, the metropolis of the nation. The Southern Methodist Church ought to be represented in Washington in a respectable and efficient manner. It was not only the center of influences going out of the country, but also the focus of influences coming in from every direction. It was the center and focus not only of civil, but also of ecclesiastical and religious influences. The Conference was not asked to commit itself to any pecuniary responsibility; but only to encourage the enterprise, and sanction the appointment of an agent. There could certainly be no contrariety of opinion on this point. There was an interesting fact alluded to in the report: Other denominations have fine and spacious churches in Washington. This is notorious to all acquainted with the city. Our house of worship is small, and inconveniently and obscurely located. It is on no thoroughfare, but in a secluded place in the rear of the Patent Office. We desire a better location. It is our policy and duty to have a church near Pennsylvania Avenue, where it may be seen and accessible. This appeal is grounded further on the fact that our society there is comparatively a feeble one. Never was there a truer set of Southern Methodists; but the number is small. In the division of the Church, only a few adhered to the South. The vastly overwhelming influence of Methodism is against us. It is necessary that the Church, South, take a general interest in the work; and, indeed, she has a general interest, from the fact that it is the national metropolis. Throughout the greater part of the year, there is a continual stream of travel through the city. Multitudes would attend our church, had we suitable conveniences, who now go elsewhere for worship. We want not a splendid church, but a spacious and commodious one, properly located. I know not what the views of brethren may be. If I could anticipate objections, I would proceed at greater length. The Conference may feel assured nothing is contemplated in this movement but the interests of the Church.

A. Hunter moved an amendment, by the addition of the words, "and that it be printed in the Daily Christian Advocate."

F. G. Ferguson wished to know if it was either necessary or politic to publish to the world that the brethren of the Baltimore Conference were avowed Abolitionists? He knew that many of those brethren were not Abolitionists; and why should we brand them as such? By the opposite party in the North they were denounced as pro-slavery men: why should we publish them as Abolitionists?

Bishop Paine—The report does not call them Abolitionists, but only speaks of them as belonging to an Abolition Church.

The portion of the report referred to was read.

Mr. Ferguson—I take back my remarks.

Bishop Soule—I have but few words to say. I perfectly approve the report of that committee. I feel deeply the importance of the subject. I deem it vastly important that we should have such a house of worship in the metropolis of the United States. It is unnecessary to enlarge. I should have been glad if there had been a suggestion in the report, that we set an example to our people that should give additional weight and influence to this resolution. I should be glad to see a respectable subscription from this body to that object, because it would give great weight to your action in the case. What is it for us to raise upon the spot—shall I say one thousand dollars? We may raise two thousand. This would give great weight to the resolution with our people.

The report was adopted and ordered for publication.

On motion of J. B. McFerrin, F. S. Petway, reserve from Tennessee Conference, was recognized in place of S. D. Baldwin, who was absent, being engaged in a revival in Memphis.

Bishop Kavanaugh now took the Chair, and called up the order of the day for ten o'clock, the appeal of James Maclennan from the action of the Mississippi Conference. The appellant concluded his defence; H. M. Drake responded in behalf of the Mississippi Conference; the vote was taken, and the decision of the Mississippi Conference in the case was reversed.

L. Campbell asked leave of absence for H. M. Drake till Monday next, which was granted.

E. H. Myers read the report of the Publishing Committee of the Southern Christian Advocate, which was referred to the Committee on Books and Periodicals.

A. L. P. Green presented a paper from Thos. O. Summers, on the revision of the Discipline, which he wished referred to the Committee on Revisals. It was referred unread.

The Bishop announced the committee on the memorial from Mississippi Conference, as follows: J. Hamilton, J. E. Evans, L. D. Huston, J. W. Kelly, S. Field, R. Alexander, F. A. Morris, W. R. Branham, W. G. Caples.

Appointments were now given out, and Conference adjourned with the benediction from the Chair.

The Wonderful Success of Dr. Hostetter's Celebrated and unrivaled STOMACH BITTERS, from the time of its introduction to the public, proves conclusively its manifest superiority over any other preparation of the kind now manufactured. Its action on the digestive organs is of the most pleasing character, removing all diseases or morbidity, and giving the system a sound and healthy tone in cases of Dyspepsia, loss of appetite, general debility or physical weakness; its operation is most beneficial indeed: some of the most direful cases that have ever been under medical treatment have been entirely cured by this great agent. As a tonic, Hostetter's Bitters are most delightful, especially before meals.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

Our reports are necessarily brief, owing to the pressure upon our columns of General Conference proceedings, and other matter. We condense from the city papers:

SEVENTH DAY—May 13.

Dr. Hewitt, of the Committee on Foreign Correspondence, made a report relative to a communication from the General Synod of the Free Church of France, and submitted the following resolutions:

Resolved, That when the statistics of the last year are complete, and more particularly those relating to the present revivals of religion, our Moderator be requested to reply to the President of Synod, at the Free Church in France, expressive of the sympathy, veneration, and affection of this Assembly for that sister church.

Resolved, That if one or more of our brethren shall visit Europe the ensuing summer, our Moderator be empowered to commission him, or them, to represent the Assembly in that Synod.

The report and resolutions were adopted.

The subject of a conference with representatives of the Associate Reformed Church of the South, upon their proposed union with the Church represented by the General Assembly, was called up. After some debate, a resolution of Dr. Van Rensselaer's for appointing a committee of three to ascertain the terms of the union proposed by the Associate Reformed Church, was adopted; and the Rev. Drs. Van Rensselaer, Cunningham and Palmer, were constituted the said committee.

The order of the day, to-wit, the Report of the Board of Publication, was called up. Rev. Mr. Schenck, the Secretary, submitted the report, which showed that the Board had published more new works than in any previous year; that nearly as many volumes had been sold, and that more had been gratuitously circulated. The report protested against the prevalent idea that the publications of the Board were such only as to foster denominationalism. It claimed that the works found upon the Board's catalogue were, to say the least, as well adapted to promote a spirit of intelligent, of truly catholic, and warm-hearted piety, as those found upon any catalogue in any country.

The following statistics were included in the report:

New books published, 45, and an aggregate of 85,750 copies printed; nine new tracts, 24,000 copies; the Presbyterian Almanac, 30,000 copies. Total number of new publications, 139,750 copies. Reprints of former publications, 326,750 copies. Total number published last year, 466,500 copies. The issue of new publications last year exceeded that of the preceding year by 14,500, and is still farther in advance of any other year in the Board's history. The sales made at the publishing house in Philadelphia during the past year have been 191,993 volumes.

The sales of tracts during the past year have amounted to 796,983. Colporteurs have sold 123,924 volumes, and gratuitously distributed 17,039. The receipts were $126,960; expenditures $106,801. The amount from sale of books, tracts and Sabbath School Visitor, has been $80,842, and from churches $17,150.

Dr. Breckinridge introduced the subject of getting up a Presbyterian Commentary on the Holy Scriptures. He spoke at some length upon the great necessity existing for such a Commentary, and concluded by submitting the following preamble and resolution, or minute, to the Assembly:

Inasmuch as the want of a sound Godly and thorough Commentary upon the whole Word of God, composed in the sense of the constant faith of the Church of God as that is briefly set forth in the standard of the Westminster Assembly, held by the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, has long been felt to be a grievous want, whereby a great lack of due service to God and his truth occurs, and whereby constant danger arises to men of needless ignorance on one side, and of dangerous misguidance on the other—therefore, be it

Resolved, By the General Assembly, that the Board of Publication shall, and it is hereby directed to proceed with all convenient dispatch to have such a Commentary composed, prepared for the press, and published. And in the execution of this great work, the following rules and orders, together with such further orders as may be adopted from time to time by the General Assembly, shall be carefully observed by the Board of Publication, and by all others in any way engaged in the execution of any part thereof:

1. The Commentary shall be prepared exclusively by the members of this Church. And in the preparing of it, they shall have all such indulgence as to time as they shall respectively demand. And for their compensation, they and their heirs, shall receive, for the legal term of twenty-eight years, a fair per centum on the price of the work sold, which shall be settled in advance by the Board of Publication, and which shall be uniform, and in lieu of all claims and cost of every sort in any way connected with their said work.

2. The said Commentary shall be fitted for common use by all men; and in the preparation of it free use may be made of all material that may exist, the design being to procure, not so much what may be original, as what may be best, in the way of enlightening and saving men. It shall not be prolix, but so arranged that the whole may be embraced in five or six royal octavo volumes of good print, containing, besides the Commentary, the English text in full, together with the usual accessories thereof, and such other suitable helps to its understanding as plain people need. And the text used in it shall be strictly that of the version prepared by the translators appointed by James the First, King of England.

3. In order to secure the fullest men for this great work, the Board of Publication shall make special application to the General Synods of our Church, at their next stated meetings, respectively; and the said Synods shall, upon careful consideration, nominate to the said Board of Publication any number of their own members, not to exceed five from any one Synod, of such as they shall consider qualified to undertake the work. And the Board of Publication may add not more than four in addition to the whole number thus nominated to it. And it shall communicate the list of names thus obtained by sifting the Church to the General Assembly at its next stated meeting in May of next year; making at the same, and from year to year thereafter, report of its doings under and by virtue of this minute.

The General Assembly of 1859 will take such further order in the premises, especially with regard to the selection of persons out of the list communicated to it, to the distribution of the work amongst them, and to all things needful for its effectual prosecution, as shall seem most expedient.

A lively and learned debate followed, in regard to the above. Different members offered amendments, which were not accepted. Revs. Drs. Rankin, Floyd, and James Hogg, of Ohio, all took strong grounds against it, for different reasons; and Rev. Drs. Junkin, Morris, and Hewitt, joined with Dr. Breckinridge in advocating it. During the debate, which lasted over two hours, all kinds of motions for reference were made by the opposition, and voted upon, but lost. The debate was a very interesting one, but was too long for us to undertake to give even an abstract of it. It was evident that the measure would be carried; but pending the debate, the hour of adjournment arrived, and the proceedings were closed without action being taken.

EIGHTH DAY—May 14.

The order of the day, viz: the reception and consideration of the reports on church extension, was taken up.

Rev. Mr. Coe, secretary of the committee, presented a report of the action of the committee during the past year, of which the following is a brief summary: The receipts from all sources during the past year exceed those of the previous year nearly $1500. 518 churches have sent in their contributions. The amount appropriated to churches this year is nearly $10,000 above that distributed the past year. The applications for relief required a fund $12,000 larger than what would have sufficed last year. The balance in the treasury at the close of last year was $8634 58. The receipts from April 1, 1857, to April 1, 1858, amount to $24,741 15; the expenditures to $24,381 03—leaving an appropriated balance in the treasury of $8991 70. 76 churches have been aided in the construction of church edifices. 47 of this number cost from $500 to $2500; 22 from $2500 to $5000; 7 over $5000. During the two and a half years the committee have been at work they have aided in the construction of 205 church edifices. The work of the committee, it is evident, has been among the poor. The committee have knowledge of 450 organized churches which have no houses of worship. The average contribution to a needy church has been $100. The operations of the committee have been conducted without collecting agents or a corps of salaried officers.

The amendment of Dr. Breckinridge to the report of the Publication Committee, providing for the writing and publishing of a commentary on the Bible, then came before the house.

Dr. Van Rensselaer was opposed to the adoption of the amendment, first, because it was inexpedient that the Presbyterian Church should establish a scripture version against the common usage of all English Christians; second, there were five hundred passages on which there were conflicting views; and third, that the whole machinery proposed was too complicated, and moved to refer the paper containing the amendment to the next General Assembly.—First, because the subject is new, and not yet sufficiently considered; and second, the character of the church is concerned. If it fail, there will be a reaction in the public mind. The paper was referred by a heavy vote.

Rev. Mr. Emerson thought more works should be published in the German language; and Rev. Mr. McNair moved that the Board of Publication be directed, as speedily as possible, to print the hymn book and the Presbyterian record in the German tongue.

The resolution was laid on the table, and the resolutions of the Committee on Publication, as originally presented, were adopted.

The house then permitted the special committee, appointed to meet the Committee of United Presbyterian Synod of Knoxville, to report.—Dr. Van Rensselaer, on the part of the committee, reported that an interview had taken place between the two committees, and the terms proposed by the United Synod, as the basis of union with the assembly, were as follows: [we give a condensation of the paper.] The United Synod proposes to unite the two bodies on the following terms:

1. We agree to unite as ecclesiastical bodies by declaring, as the Synod now does, our approval of the Westminster Confession of Faith and Larger and Shorter Catechisms, as an orthodox and excellent system of Christian doctrine; and also our adherence to the plan of worship, government and discipline contained in the Westminster Directory.

2. Both bodies agree in declaring it to be a fundamental principle in the Presbyterian Church, that no judicatory of the church can, for any cause whatever, by any act of legislation, constitutionally condemn or exclude from the church other judicatories, or ministers, or private members, without a process of trial, such as is prescribed in the constitution of the Presbyterian Church.

3. Both bodies agree that it is consistent with the requirements of the Westminster Confession of Faith to receive said confession according to the Adopting Act of 1729, to wit: as containing all the essential truths of christianity, and also the doctrines that distinguish the Calvinistic from the Pelagian, Socinian and Arminian systems of theology. We agree, likewise, in believing that this system of doctrine includes the following truths, viz: the Trinity, the Incarnation and Deity of Christ, the Fall and Original Sin, Atonement, Justification by Faith, Personal Election, Effectual Calling, Perseverance of the Saints, the Eternal Happiness of the Righteous and Eternal Punishment of the Wicked.

4. Both bodies agree in declaring that slaveholding, or the relation of master and servant, cannot, in any case, be a bar to membership in the church of Christ. And, whilst they admit the right of the judicatories of the church to take cognizance, in the way prescribed in the constitution, of cruelties practiced in the relation, they hereby declare the opinion that as the continuance or abolition of the system of slavery in this country belongs exclusively to the State, the discussion or agitation of slavery, further than pertains to the moral and religious duties arising from the relation, is inappropriate to the functions of church judicatories.

5. It is further agreed, that in effecting the union, the presbyteries connected with this synod shall be united as presbyteries; and without an examination of their ministers, with the synods belonging to the General Assembly, to which, because of their geographical limits, they shall be attached; excepting that the Synod of Tennessee and the North Alabama Presbytery shall retain the name and occupy their present territory.

The sixth article directs the publication of the union, if effected.

The seventh is directory to the Committee of the United Synod to attend this assembly and their mode of conference with the assembly.

An additional article proposes to be received among the corresponding bodies of the assembly if a union be not effected.

Dr. Breckinridge slightly amending (by the leave of the house) the minute he had previously presented on this subject, moved its adoption, which was unanimously approved.

NINTH DAY.—May 15.

The morning session was occupied with an Appeal of the Rev. Mr. Findley who appeals to the Assembly from the action of the Synod of New Jersey. A session was held in the evening.

Mr. Eagleson, of the Special Committee appointed to consider the matter of continuing in office the Committee of Conference with the Synod of the Associate Reformed Church of the South, submitted the following, report and resolutions.

The Committee to whom was referred the report of the Committee of Conference, in reference to a closer union between the Associate Reformed Synod of the South and the Presbyterian Church, represent that they have carefully examined said report and recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, That the fidelity of the Committee be approved.

2. Resolved, That the Committee be continued with addition of the following persons, viz: Chancellor John Johnson, Rev. Messrs. Thomas Hoyt, Thomas L. McBride, D. D., and J. H. Thornwell, D. D. Said committees to report to the next General Assembly.

Resolved, That it be recommended to all and especially to our ministers and churches in the South to circulate for examination and use the psalms and hymn books of our church, with selections from the book of psalms in metre according to the versions used in the Church of Scotland.

The report and resolutions were adopted; and Rev. Mr. Brown, the delegate from the Associate Synod, made an appropriate response.

The report of the Committee on the State of Religion, being the special order of the evening, was next taken up.

Dr. J. L. Hulsey, chairman of the committee, read the report. It set forth that one hundred and seventeen presbyteries had sent in narratives of the state of religion in their churches, and that the committee were able to send back the most cheering accounts to the churches.—The report continued:

It has been a year of great awakening among the people, of unusual concord and peace among the churches, and of unusual liberality to all the great benevolent operations of the day. From the North, the South, the East and the West the voice of rejoicing comes up for what the Lord has done for the church.

A few churches speak of a great degree of barrenness, but even their reports are full of a spirit of prayer and faith in the coming of a great revival of religious life.

Another class of churches report a steady increase of attention to religious observances, a new zeal in pastoral administrations, and the increase of religious services; of the unusual attention in the candidism of the colored population, and to Sabbath schools, and an enlarged liberality in the churches. Here, though the church has not received large accessions, there are evidences that the beginning of a great work of religious revival is commencing.

From the remainder of the churches, including much the larger portion within our bounds, extending to over seventy presbyteries, come to us the most gratifying accounts of revivals, such as the history of the church scarcely ever recorded.

The work of divine grace, commencing under different agencies, has extended over whole sections of the land.—Hundreds of churches report additions to their communion of members, varying from fifty to six hundred persons.—This work is still in progress, and the results for the remainder of the year promise to give a record that will be without a precedent in our history. These revivals commenced without any excesses or unusual agencies, and have reached men of all classes and ages—the skeptic, the abandoned, the fevered, the aged, as well as the pure in character, the ignorant, and the young.

Another fact is worthy of notice. This revival has been most wonderfully marked in the academies, colleges and seminaries of our country.

But time would fail to recount the wonders that have been wrought. Eternity alone can unfold the glorious results of the work which should fill all the churches with praise and all hearts with love.

The means have been such as are of the appointment of God. Earnest prayer, the faithful preaching of the word, visitations from house to house, have been the instrumentalities which have been followed by such a glorious work. Let what hath God wrought! This year, which is the close of the centennial period since the union of the two branches of the Presbyterian Church, has been most signally marked by the outpouring of blessings upon the people which signalized it as the beginning of a new era in our progress.

COMMERCIAL.

The New Orleans Price Current, of the 19th, says:

The week opened with very little movement in any department of the market. Only a very moderate demand prevails for Cotton, while the Tobacco market remains quiet, with a rapidly accumulating stock. In Sugar, Molasses, and the various articles of Western Produce the transactions are generally limited and prices feebly sustained.

On Monday European advices four days later were received, brought to Quebec by the North American from Liverpool, reporting an advance of 1-16 @ ⅛d in the Liverpool Cotton market, with sales for the three days of 34,000 bales, and the market is stated to have closed buoyant. Manchester advices were favorable and Consols had improved as ¼ @ ⅜ cent, being quoted at 97¼.

Our last report (Saturday) closed upon a heavy market, and we noticed a decline of a ¼ cent in the rates for the Middling and lower grades, but this reduction did not appear to be sufficient to meet the views or limits of buyers generally and the business of Saturday was confined to about 4500 bales. On Monday the market opened with very little inquiry, the North American's advices appearing to have little or no effect. The sales barely reached some 4000 bales, prices being at about the previous range. On Tuesday, again the market wore a heavy appearance, but some few buyers came forward and took about 5000 bales; making a total for the three days of 13,500 bales. With respect to prices, we have to remark that great irregularity still prevails, especially in the grades below Middling, which constitute the bulk of the supply now offering, and the rates generally are rather in favor of buyers, though for the present we retain previous quotations.

NEW ORLEANS CLASSIFICATION.

Inferior	5 @ 7¼	Middling	11¼ @ 11
Ordinary	8 @ 9⅜	Good Middling	12¼ @ 12¾
Good Ordinary	9¾ @ 10¾	Middling Fair	12¾ @ 13
Low Middling	10¾ @ 11	Fair	nominal

COTTON—Arrived since 14th instant, of Louisiana and Mississippi 5230 bales, Tennessee and North Alabama 4372, Arkansas 935, Mobile 593, Florida —, Texas 338; together 11,458 bales. Cleared since the same date, 20,145 bales. Stock in presses and on shipboard not cleared on the 11th inst. 288,795 bales.

The receipts at this port since 1st September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida, and Texas) are 1,480,187 bales, against 1,497,319 bales to same date last year; and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year is 61,755 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries as compared with the same dates last year, there is a increase to Great Britain of 159,344 bales, and a decrease to France of 16,596 bales, and to other foreign ports of 61,260 bales.

SUGAR—Louisiana—The receipts continue moderate but have somewhat exceeded the demand within the past few days, and prices for most qualities have yielded fully a ¼ cent ₱ lb. The three days' sales barely reach 1000 hhds, and we now quote as follows:

Inferior and Refining	3½ @ 4
Common to Good Common	4½ @ 5¼
Fair to Fully Fair	5⅝ @ 6¾
Prime	7 @ 7¼
Choice	7½ @ 8
Centrifugal and Clarified	8 @ 9½

We notice a sale of 350 hhds on plantation at 8½ ₱ lb.

Arrived since the 14th 1757 hhds 95 tierces and bbls—cleared 28 hhds 87 bbls.

THE CHILD'S WISHES.

BY CLARA AUGUSTA.

Oh, I wish I was a robin,
With breast of glossy red,
And black and shining feathers
On my bonnie little head!
Dear Mother, see the robin,
The pretty robin, fly!
Oh, if I had his nimble wings,
I'd visit yonder sky!

Oh, I wish I was the South wind,
That sings so low and deep,
And flutters down the hillside,
Amid the snowy sheep;
I'd fan the little lambkins
Through every sunny day,
And make the crimson clover
Blossom for them all the way.

Oh, I wish I was the streamlet,
Down in the merry dell;
I'd sing the whole time sweetly,
To the listening cowslip bell;
I'd water dusty meadows,
And verdant make the grass,
And all the little sleepy flowers
Would laugh to see me pass.

I wish I was a daisy,
In some shady wayside nook,
Where the pretty village maidens
Would pause on me to look;
I'd charm them with my fragrance
Of half their gentle love,
With my eyes so bright and starry,
Lifted up to Heaven above.

But if I was a robin,
Or the South wind, soft and low,
Or the little gliding streamlet,
Or a modest daisy flow—
Mother, I could not slumber
Upon your snowy breast;
Your kisses would not soothe me,
In the night-time, into rest.

So I'd rather be your darling
Than anything on earth;
I'm happier than the happiest thing
That ever had a birth!
I'd not be bird, or streamlet,
South wind, or daisy-pearl,
But let me stay here, Mother dear,
And be your little girl.

GOD CALLING CHILDREN.

Ellen Wilson had been reading the story of Samuel aloud to her mother, when the coming twilight forced her to close her book. So she sat awhile with her little hand clasped in her mother's loving clasp, looking into the blazing fire. At last she said:

"Mamma, I don't want to go and leave you, and live alone with a priest like Eli; but I do wish it was the fashion of God to call children, now-a-days, just as he did little Samuel."

"Why, my dear, do you desire such a fashion?"

"Because then I would know just how to be good, and what he wants me to do."

"It is true God does not speak with a voice which sounds in the ear, as his midnight voice did to Samuel; but I well remember that I received many solemn calls from God in my childhood, and I think, if my Ellen would listen with all her heart, she would find that it is still the fashion for God to call children."

"When did God ever call you, mamma?"

"The first time I remember, I was about five years old, and was reading the narrative of William Baker's death in the 'Child's Book on the Soul.' Then something seemed to whisper, 'Though you are young, you may die too. Why do you not give your heart to Christ, and be prepared?' I felt very sober for a while, but it was a still small voice, and I soon drowned it into play. Then, again, two or three years later, when I first saw a dead body, from which the soul had gone. Then something seemed to say, 'Remember thy Creator in the days of thy youth. They that seek me early shall find me.' Then I listened and felt sober for a few days, as before, but did not obey the voice, and it soon ceased."

"Did you have more calls mamma?"

"As I grew older the calls became fainter and less frequent, and, but for God's goodness, might have ceased altogether; but, thanks to his mercy, the blessed voice came again, and as the words 'Quench not the Spirit' sounded from the minister's lips, and were again repeated in my ears as I tossed upon my bed at midnight, I saw my sins and danger, and Christ ready to forgive and save me.

Then I said, 'Here am I,' and from that time resolved to love and obey Christ all my life.—Then peace came into my soul, and I could sleep sweetly, for I had heard and answered the heavenly voice. From that hour I have never been troubled to 'know what to do,' for I find God ever ready to tell me as plainly as he did Samuel. Ellen, have you never heard such a voice? And don't you think, if you listen attentively, you could tell what to do?

Ellen hung her head, for she read the Bible and knew her duty, and had heard God's voice more than once calling her to love and serve him.

"Yes, mamma, I think I have heard God call, though that is not the voice I meant. I always thought it would be easier to know what to do, if God would speak in my ear, just as he did to Samuel.

No, my dear, if you will not listen now, you would not under any circumstances. Childhood soon passes, and the noise and din of earthly care drowns the calls of God, and they are often unheeded until it is too late. Christ loves children, he died for them, and when he was on earth he blessed them, and said, 'Of such is the kingdom of heaven.' Now, the next time you hear his voice say, 'Here I am, for thou didst call me,' and trusting in Christ for help, try to obey his Word. Sometimes he calls with a text of Scripture; sometimes by putting a serious thought into your mind, even amidst your play; to-night, he calls my Ellen by the story of little Samuel."

Tears ran down Ellen's face at these few solemn words from her mother; and that evening, as she knelt in prayer, she asked that help from God's spirit, without which no child can truly obey God's voice.

One Sunday a lady called to her little boy, who was tossing marbles on the sidewalk, to come into the house. "Don't you know you should not be out there, my son?" said she."—"Go into the back yard, if you want to play marbles; it is Sunday." "I will," answered the little fellow; "but ain't it Sunday in the back yard, mother?"

Infants count by minutes; children by days; men by years; comets by revolutions of ages; nature by revolutions of systems; the Eternal meditates in a perpetual present.

"Why did you give me your seat?" he inquired of the boy, "Because you are old, sir, and I am a boy," was the quick reply. The passengers were very much pleased and gratified. For my part, I wanted to seize hold of the little fellow and press him to my bosom. It was a respect for age, which is always praiseworthy.

THE GREATEST
Medical Discovery
OF THE AGE.

MR. KENNEDY, of Roxbury, has discovered in one of our common pasture woods a remedy that cures

EVERY KIND OF HUMOR,

From the worst Scrofula down to a Common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases, both thunder humor. He has now in his possession over one hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.

Two bottles are warranted to cure a nursing sore mouth.
One to three bottles will cure the worst kind of pimples on the face.
Two or three bottles will clear the system of biles.
Two bottles are warranted to cure the worst canker in the mouth and stomach.
Three to five bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Erysipelas.
One or two bottles are warranted to cure all humor in the eyes.
Two bottles are warranted to cure running of the ears and blotches among the hair.
Four to six bottles are warranted to cure corns and running ulcers.
One bottle will cure scaly eruptions of the skin.
Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of ringworm.
Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the most desperate case of rheumatism.
Three to four bottles are warranted to cure the rheum.
Five to eight bottles will cure the worst case of scrofula.
A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the above quantity is taken.
Nothing looks so improbable to those who have in vain tried all the wonderful medicines of the day, as that a common weed growing on the pastures, and along old stone walls, should cure every humor in the system; yet it is a fixed fact. If you have a humor, it has to start. There are no IFS nor ANDS, humor nor he's about it suiting some cases, but not yours. I peddled over a thousand bottles of it in the vicinity of Boston. I know the effects of it in every case. It has already done some of the greatest cures ever done in Massachusetts. I gave it to children a year old, to old people of sixty. I have seen poor, puny, wormy-looking children, whose flesh was soft and flabby, restored to a perfect state of health by one bottle.
To those who are subject to a sick head ache, one bottle will always cure it. It gives great relief in catarrh and dizziness. Some who have taken it had been costive for years, and have been regulated by it. Where the body is sound it works quite easy, but where there is any derangement of the functions of nature, it will cause very singular feelings, but you must not be alarmed; they always disappear in from four days to a week. There is never a bad result from it; on the contrary, when that feeling is gone you will feel yourself like a new person. I heard some of the most extravagant encomiums of it that ever man listened to.
Manufactured by DONALD KENNEDY, No. 120 Warren street, Roxbury, Mass. Price $1 per bottle.

DOCTOR HOOFLAND'S
CELEBRATED
GERMAN BITTERS,
PREPARED BY
Dr. C. M. JACKSON, Philad'a, Pa.
WILL EFFECTUALLY CURE
LIVER COMPLAINT, DYSPEPSIA, JAUNDICE,
Chronic or Nervous Debility, Diseases of the Kidneys, and all diseases arising from a Disordered Liver or Stomach.

Such as Constipation, Inward Piles, to Fulness or Blood the Head, Acidity on the Stomach, Nausea Heartburn, Disgust for Food, Fullness or Weight in the Stomach, Sour Eructations. Sinking or Fluttering at the Pit of the Stomach, Swimming of the Head. Hurried and difficult Breathing, Fluttering at the Heart. Choking or Suffocating Sensations when in a lying posture. Dimness of Vision, Dots of webs before the Sight. Fever and Dull pain in the Head. Deficiency of Perspiration, Yellowness of the Skin, and Eyes, Pain in the Side, Back, Chest, Limbs, etc., Sudden Flushes of Heat, Burning in the Flesh, Constant Imaginings of Evil and great Depression of Spirits.
The proprietor, in calling the attention of the public to this preparation, does so with a feeling of the utmost confidence in its virtues and adaptation to the diseases for which it is recommended.
It is no new and untried article, but one that has stood the test of a ten years' trial before the American people, and its reputation and sale is unrivalled by any similar preparations extent. The testimony in its favor given by the most prominent and well-known Physicians and individuals in all parts of the country is immense, and a careful perusal of the Almanac, published annually by the proprietor, and to be had gratis of any of his Agents, cannot but satisfy the most skeptical that this remedy is really deserving the great celebrity it has obtained.

HUNTSVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE,
HUNTSVILLE, ALA.
THE latter half of the scholastic year of this Institution will begin January 25, 1858. The splendid buildings, elegant organization, the superior Faculty, and the extraordinary facilities of an accomplished education, recommend this Institution to the consideration of every parent. The French Language is taught by Parisians, and taught possibly more thoroughly than any where else outside of a native French family. This is a regular Boarding School of the highest order. Besides, Huntsville, as a location for a Female School, in point of beauty and healthfulness, has no equal in the South. I would refer to my patrons of Louisiana: Gen R. M. Lowe, of the firm of Lowe, McReynolds & Co., New Orleans; W. W. Walker, Esq., Mound Bayou, Tensas, parish; E. Miller, Esq. and Rev. Mr. White, Waterproof; also, to the Editor of this paper. G. M. FELICIANA FEMALE INSTITUTE,
JACKSON, LA.
PRINCIPAL.....REV. WILLIAM McCALLEN, M. D.
THE First Term will commence on Monday, the 15th of March next. The course of instruction will be extensive and thorough. None but well qualified Assistants will be employed in the various Departments. The Religious training of the youth will be an object of primary importance. The Bible will be a text book, but all sectarianism will be scrupulously avoided. The discipline will be strict, but mild and parental. Spelling, Reading, and Composition, so much neglected in many schools, will receive particular attention. The Principal having graduated in a European University and having been engaged in teaching nearly eighteen years, fifteen of these in Kentucky and Mississippi, hopes by zealous attention to his duties to prove himself worthy of public confidence. The charges and comforts will be the same as formerly made here by Rev. R. Jones, whose property, so admirably adapted to educational purposes, the Principal has purchased. The first term will necessarily consist of only four and a half months, but the expenses—payable in advance—will be accordingly.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY A COMMITTEE OF MINISTERS FOR THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH---H. N. McTYEIRE, EDITOR.

VOLUME VIII—NUMBER 17. WHOLE NUMBER 380. | NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY MAY 29, 1858. | $3 00 A YEAR, IN ADVANCE OFFICE—113 CAMP ST.

Methodist General Conference.

SEVENTH DAY.

SATURDAY, May 8.

Conference opened at the usual hour, with Bishop Andrew in the chair.

The devotional exercises were conducted by J. H. Linn.

The minutes of yesterday were read and approved.

PRESIDING ELDERSHIP.

The Chair announced the order for the presentation of petitions and memorials, and directed the Secretary to call the Conferences for that purpose.

G. W. Carter, from the Virginia Conference, presented a petition from Portsmouth, praying for some modification in the Presiding Eldership, and moved that, without reading, it be referred to the Committee on Revisals.

It was so referred.

A. L. P. GREEN—I do not know what the contents of that paper may be, but it seems to me, from its title, that it ought to go to the Committee on Itineracy; and therefore he moved a reconsideration of this vote, which was agreed to, and then the paper was referred to the Committee on the Itinerancy.

NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE BOUNDARY.

G. W. Carter, from the Virginia Conference, presented a paper, signed by Beaufort, Bell, and Sutton, asking for a transfer of certain territory from the jurisdiction of the North Carolina to the Virginia Conference, and moved that, without reading, the memorial be referred to the Committee on Boundaries.

It was so referred.

He also presented a memorial from certain members of the Clarksville and Henderson Circuit, of the North Carolina Conference, praying for the transfer of that Circuit to the Virginia Conference; which, without reading, was referred to the same committee.

D. B. Nicholson presented a similar paper from Clarksville and Henderson Circuit, of the same Conference; which was referred unread to the same committee.

R. T. Heflin presented five counter memorials from Clarksville and Henderson Circuit, Danville District, North Carolina Conference, protesting against said transfer; all which were referred unread to the same committee.

James Stacy offered a memorial from the Publishing Committee of the Southern Christian Advocate, at Charleston, highly commending its editorial management for the last four years, and respectfully soliciting the re-appointment of E. H. Myers as editor.

In accordance with the wishes of the offerer, it was laid on the table for the present.

W. A. Gamewell presented a memorial from the Methodist Church in Columbia, South Carolina, asking for the next General Conference to be held in that city; which was laid on the table for the present.

A memorial from the citizens of Gernard, praying that they be taken into the Georgia Conference, was presented and referred unread to the Committee on Boundaries.

J. E. Evans presented a resolution adopted by the last Georgia Conference, advising that the Quarterly Review and the Home Circle be merged into one periodical of high order, or the Quarterly discontinued; which was referred to the committee on Books and Periodicals.

T. J. Koger presented a memorial from Columbus, Mississippi, in the Alabama Conference, praying that the next General Conference be held in that place; which was laid on the table for the present.

H. C. Thweatt presented a paper from Asbury Davidson, of Texas, praying for some modification in the plan of Episcopal visitation; which was referred unread to the committee on Episcopacy.

H. N. McTyeire presented the following; which was referred to the committee on Books and Periodicals:

Resolved, That the Louisiana Conference do highly approve of the able manner in which Dr. Doggett has edited the Southern Methodist Quarterly Review; but that, in view of the financial exhibit of the Agents, we recommend the General Conference to unite the office of Editor of the Quarterly Review and Book Editor.

D. B. Nicholson presented a resolution, recommending a change in the Discipline concerning Episcopal decisions of law, and their publication; which was referred to the committee on Revisals.

L. M. Lee presented petitions from Patrick Circuit, Danville District, North Carolina Conference, praying for a transfer to the Virginia Conference; which were referred unread to the committee on Boundaries.

J. B. Payne presented the following:

Resolved, That after Wednesday next the General Conference receive no more memorials, petitions, or applications for change of the Discipline.

An amendment was moved, substituting Monday for Wednesday.

J. Hamilton hoped that the door would be left open. If the resolution were adopted, it would have to be suspended again and again.

On motion, the resolution was laid on the table.

L. Pierce offered a resolution contemplating the improvement of the rule on the reception of members into the Church, so as to obviate a popular difficulty.

R. Abboy and Levi Pearce, the agents appointed by the last General Conference to manage the interest of the Church in the Van Houten bequest, made their report; which was, on motion of E. Stevenson, referred to the committee on Books and Periodicals.

N. H. D. Wilson and N. F. Reid offered a resolution calling for the publication, in convenient form, of such Episcopal decisions, delivered during the last four years, as have been approved by the whole college of Bishops.

After a lengthy and interesting debate, the resolution was referred to the committee on Episcopacy.

TRIAL OF MINISTERS.

J. E. Evans submitted a preamble and resolution (signed also by W. J. Parks) to the following effect:

Whereas, it is believed that all the ends of justice and of good moral discipline may be as well, if not better, subserved by providing that the trial and appeal of accused ministers shall be conducted before a committee of ministers, in the presence of a Presiding Elder, or a Bishop presiding; within the Conference where the offence was committed, than as now before the Annual and General Conferences; therefore,

Resolved, That a committee of ——— be appointed to inquire into this subject and report to this General Conference.

W. A. Smith, of Virginia—I will suggest an amendment; it is to add these words: "And resolved further, that said committee be instructed to inquire into the propriety of transferring the jurisdiction to another Conference in such cases as the court may be satisfied that the ends of justice cannot be otherwise secured."

J. E. Evans—I accept it. I want them to take the whole subject into consideration. I only wish to remark, that this is a very grave subject, and I therefore propose to have it referred to a special committee. The standing committees are all crowded with work, and I want the mature and deliberate judgment of a committee appointed especially to consider this question in all its bearings. I hope, sir, to have the result of the mature consideration of a wise committee. If the law cannot be improved, let us, at least, have a report upon it. But I believe some arrangement can be made better than the present.

C. K. Marshall—Does the amendment contemplate that the accused shall have the right of appeal to another Annual Conference?

W. A. Smith—I mean that the committee inquire into the expediency of transferring the case, if the presiding officer is satisfied that the ends of justice cannot be secured by a trial before that court.

W. A. Smith's amendment was now modified so as to read, "That said committee inquire into the whole subject, and report to this Conference." And, as thus amended, the preamble and resolution was adopted.

J. E. Evans moved that the blank in said resolution be filled with "seven;" which number was taken by consent.

The Chair subsequently announced the following members of this Committee: Messrs. W. J. Parks, G. W. Carter, P. Doub, John C. Harrison, A. L. P. Green, H. N. McTyeire, and E. M. Marvin.

TRACT SECRETARY'S REPORT.

J. Hamilton—I have a paper which I would like to get before the Conference. It is a communication in behalf of the Tract Society, by the Secretary, which I will ask leave to read myself.

Leave being granted, the paper was read by copious extracts, embracing statements of money, the results of labor, etc.

D. S. Doggett moved that the paper be referred to the Committee on Tracts. It was so referred.

CLASS MEETINGS.

R. T. Heflin presented the following:

Resolved, That the Special Committee on Class meetings be requested to report on the expediency of restoring classes to their original size of "about twelve persons," according to their respective places of abode."

The mover urged that the classes are too large; that it is impossible for the leader to visit his members; that this is the reason why class meetings are so much neglected. Class meetings are the common school system of the Methodist itinerancy. From the class room our ministers are raised up; from the class room our revival influences go abroad. I present this resolution under the impression that the Committee will report adversely to the other matter referred to their consideration.

J. E. Edwards was opposed to the resolution. If classes were reduced to the number of twelve, it would be difficult to obtain leaders. I have charge of a church, said he, consisting of seven hundred members, and this arrangement would require in that church fifty-six class leaders—It would be difficult, also, to find suitable places for the classes to meet. In our present condition, our classes are better off as they are.

Bishop Andrew suggested that there was another difficulty. Let the preachers get converted, said he. Let them attend the classes. Let their wives attend. Let our great men attend. Their influence would restore the institution.

The Secretary read a resolution, signed P. P. Neely and T. W. Dorman, directing the Committee on Revisals to inquire into the expediency of so altering the Discipline as to allow a preacher to remain in the same charge three years, instead of two.

The resolution was lost.

MISSION IN CENTRAL AMERICA.

The Secretary read another resolution, signed O. R. Blue and T. W. Dorman, directing the Committee on Missions to inquire into the expediency of establishing, at an early day, a mission in Central America.

C. K. Marshall—The Greeks are at our door. We have Africa in our own country. We have enough missionary work—more than we can do—already.

J. Hamilton—I suppose that is a comment on the apostolic commission—"Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."

T. W. Dorman—We only want the resolution referred. We will discuss it at the proper time.

G. W. Langhorne—The great design of the gospel is to conquer the world. I am not prepared to restrict our efforts. We are to extend Christianity to every land. If God opens a door in Central America, let us enter, and occupy the ground.

N. H. Lee—I think this discussion is premature.

H. N. McTyeire—If we were to confine our missions to the Africans at home—to the slaves—we should soon see a Church gone clear out. We should stop all extension and expansion; and, while others would be reaching beyond, we would be at home, and stay at home, and never get away from home. I am not of that class of preachers who, like my brother, are for giving ourselves a character as to the Slave Mission work. I believe in doing that work. It is a work of mercy; and I think the Church deserves credit for what she has done already. But what is the peculiarity of this field?—Take the oldest Slave Mission, and this day it is not more than self-supporting. The Africans, at home and abroad, are yet a dependent class of beings. Pretty much all they can do is to receive the gospel. Whereas, if you plant a mission in Central America, the people there have a political existence; they have intelligence; they belong to a race of progress; and by-and-by they will begin, not only to support the gospel themselves, but extend it and preach it to others. They will form themselves into Conferences: and so we shall extend our domain; we shall enlarge our territories, and add not only souls but lands, and countries, and societies, and dominions to the Redeemer's kingdom. The Missions to the Africans are well worthy of our care; but if you confine yourselves to them mainly, you will see that, whilst other Churches will be growing stronger, building up new churches, and forming themselves into new Conferences, your work, sir, will be like an inverted cone: you must be all the time over it, holding it up, and as soon as you go away it will fall to pieces. It cannot propagate, it cannot sustain itself; and by-and-by, taking care of the negroes at home exclusively, you will find the dominion of the land and the territories of the earth have been passed into other hands, and that you have neglected to sow and to plant where you might have gathered a plentiful harvest. I make these remarks, sir, in the full belief that if any Church confine themselves to the negroes, they will find in them but an element of weakness. I am glad to hear this resolution. I believe the progress of our Church is southward. I believe that Mexico, Central America, South America, and the West Indians are our peculiar fields of labor; and I hope the resolution will be adopted.

A. L. P. Green—I would say that I am in sympathy, to some extent, with Bro. Marshall. I think our Domestic Missions first demand notice and care. Yet I want this resolution referred; I believe it would be referred, any way; but I want it referred with a vim—with an emphasis. I want Bro. Marshall to vote for it, and the whole house to vote for it. I believe that the establishment of a mission in Central America would be an establishment of an element of power, such as would enable us more efficiently to carry on our Home Missions.

C. K. Marshall—Whilst I confess myself in favor of the view taken by Bro. McTyeire, I differ with him about the occupancy of this field at this time. Whilst we have so much ground at home unoccupied, I deem it unwise to divide our means.

W. A. Smith—I think it due to every brother who asks the reference of a subject, that it should be granted to him; unless he proposes to subvert some established principle. I doubt whether discussions of this sort are not out of order, and calculated to exhaust the time of the body. As this practice grows upon us, we shall find ourselves losing a vast amount of time. I would make the reference, whether in favor of the object contemplated or not. Nine-tenths of these propositions will never be heard of any more.

L. Campbell—I do not consume much time on any subject. There are certain questions which may be well enough discussed on the question of reference, for this reason: We all know that, on a simple reference, it may be considered or not. If we wish a resolution to go to a committee with an emphasis, it may be discussed for the guidance of the committee; and when the committee has reported upon it, such discussion might supersede the necessity of discussion upon its merits. I am half inclined, with my friend from Mississippi, to say that the Greeks are here amongst us; but I am not disposed to say that we should allow them forever to remain. I think we may safely enter the open door into Central America, and cordially vote for this resolution with the vim spoken of. Let us do this, brethren, and when the Bishops shall call us to go, let us be ready to take up the line of march.

G. W. Brush—Mr. President, we decided an important question a few moments ago, on a question of reference, by declining to refer the proposition—some of the older members voting to decline. In view of that fact, I think this discussion more in order and of more importance than brethren seem to think. Now suppose this resolution be referred, and the committee report that it is inexpedient to establish this Mission; then those who are against it would have no opportunity to make their remarks. I am with Bro. Marshall, substantially; not because we have an African Mission at home; but because, in a more literal sense, in the language of John Randolph, "the Greeks are at our doors." We have the representatives of all foreign countries at our doors, and if we cannot convert them when they come to us, into our own land, what hope have we of going to their country, where we have to learn the language before we can speak to them?—Our field is greater than we can occupy. The accessions of the Church are not equal to the increase of our foreign population. This is true of the Church, South, as well as North.—We had here a report the other day for the formation of a very large new Conference Mission; and that is only a garden-spot compared with the territory we have. Why then should we go down to Nicaragua and Central America? I doubt whether, in the city of Nashville itself, the people attend church. I believe there is not a State in the Union where Missions might not be more wisely established than in Central America. The Bishops' address are full of indications of this home-work of the Church.—God is eminently pouring out his Spirit on this land. We should preach where we can organize churches, and not so much by the way. Population is advancing over all this Southern country. Let us go with our population, and not in advance of them. In all cases where we have gone ahead of our population we have failed—invariably failed; and, judging the future by the past, will continue to fail.—Twenty or thirty years ago we sent Bro. Pitts to South America; we sent also a Mission to China; and what are the fruits? They were both failures. About the same time, we sent a Mission to Texas; and there we have a glorious harvest, because operating under the wing of an Anglo Saxon people. These are indications of Providence which we should watch carefully. In our own State of Kentucky, we have not half money enough to carry on our work there. Preachers are not half clothed and fed. We have missionaries there hardly able to take a letter out of the post-office. I speak to those who know. Instead, then, of Missions to China and Central and South America, to have something to talk about and make a show abroad, let us take care of our own home-fields. And more particularly does it become the Church, South, to receive this admonition. The Churches abroad do not fraternize with us. We are the Slavery Church, they say. Then let us take care of ourselves at home. Let us have the most efficient missionaries and members; let us have the best tract societies, the most flourishing Sunday-schools, and the holiest people. Let us take care of ourselves. Let piety and benevolence pervade our institutions at home; and so we shall go abroad in spite of all opposition.

J. Boring—Brother Brush seems to assume that the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, should only occupy the ground which she now covers, and so much more as may be covered by our population. Now I assume that this opinion of my brother is based upon a fundamental error, and in positive contravention of the principle and spirit of the gospel. If I understand the spirit of the original gospel at all, it was not that the membership of the Church should cover no more ground than that whereon the Church was first planted. But it was to become diffusive—diffusing the light and the knowledge of the true God over the face of the whole earth. If this be true, then we should adopt the policy proposed by brother McTyeire.

F. E. Pitts—Reference has been made to myself, and therefore I feel called out. The failure of the mission to South America has been alluded to, which was placed originally in my hands. It has been mentioned as a failure, and the statement of brother Brush should be set right. That is one of the most successful missions upon the face of the earth; perhaps the most successful ever sent out from the United States. It is one of the most paying missions we ever had, and it ought to belong to the South. I hope the pending resolution will be referred.

The resolution was referred to the committee on missions.

RATIO OF REPRESENTATION.

P. P. Smith, of Virginia, submitted a resolution to the following effect:

Resolved, That the committee on Revisals consider the propriety of so changing the Discipline, on page 35, as to allow one delegate to the General Conference for twenty-one members of the Annual Conference; and so changing the Discipline on the 37th page as to provide that each Annual Conference shall be entitled to at least three delegates.

The resolution was adopted.

TRIAL OF BISHOPS.

D. W. D. Harris submitted a resolution directing the committee on Revisals to inquire into the expediency of changing the Discipline, on page 109, chapter 4, by striking out the words, "in the interval of the General Conference."

The resolution was adopted.

EDITORIAL MANAGEMENT.

The resolution on this subject, heretofore presented by S. Kelly, and signed also by A. H. Redford, and G. W. Langhorne, was now taken up, considered, and adopted.

EDUCATION.

J. F. Hughes submitted a resolution (signed also by T. W. Randle) requesting the committee on Education to report a plan by which the Church may take a more active and efficient part in extending education to the people generally.

The resolution was adopted.

DISTRICT APPOINTMENTS.

A. H. Redford submitted a resolution (signed also by J. W. Hanner) to inquire into the expediency of certain changes of the Discipline with reference to the Bishops' duty in the formation of districts, providing that no district shall contain more than twelve appointments.

The resolution was amended so as to make it directory to the Committee on Itineracy, and so adopted and referred.

CONFERENCE BOUNDARIES.

A. R. Erwin submitted a resolution (signed also by J. W. Hanner) directing the Committee on Boundaries to inquire into the propriety of conforming Conference boundaries as near as may be to the boundary lines of the States in which they are situated.

SUPPORT OF THE BISHOPS.

J. E. Evans submitted a preamble and resolution (signed also by B. M. Drake) to the following effect:

Whereas, It is believed that the support of the Bishops can be made more sure by requiring a given per cent. of the amount paid for the support of the itinerant ministers to be set apart for that purpose by local treasurers, etc.; therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Episcopacy be instructed to inquire into the practicability of this plan of supporting the Bishops, and if they should deem it expedient, report the necessary changes to effect that object.

W. A. Gamewell—I move to change the direction of the resolution, and refer it to a select committee. This is an important matter, and ought to have the consideration of a special committee.

H. N. McTyeire submitted a proposition in lieu, embracing these points:

1. The sum necessary for the support and traveling expenses of the Bishops shall be estimated.

2. Which sum shall be divided and raised proportionately among the several Annual Conferences.

3. To meet this levy, the Annual Conference Steward, at each session thereof, shall collect of each member of the Conference one per cent. of his entire receipts for the year, and pay it over to the presiding Bishop.

4. Stewards of circuits, stations, and districts, shall add one per cent. of the preachers' salaries to this fund, and provide for it accordingly; and whenever in the judgment of the preacher it may be deemed advisable, a collection may be taken up for this object.

5. Deficiences shall be made up by the Book Agents, who shall also make all necessary advances of money on the Bishops' salaries.

H. N. McTyeire—This plan originated with Dr. Keener, one of the best financial minds in the Church. We have experimented upon it in our Conference. We never could raise the widows' and orphans' and superannuated preachers' pay until we adopted the plan of assessing five per cent. on the preachers' receipts.—If a preacher received $1000, we simply said to the brethren: five per cent. of this must go to the widows, the orphans, and superannuated.—They knew exactly how much they had to pay, and they paid it. The first year we tried this plan, we paid these claimants 96 per cent.; the next year we paid them dollar for dollar; and last year, as Bishop Paine knows, we paid them dollar for dollar, and had $800 that we did not know what to do with, which we passed over to the next year and reduced the per cent. Five hundred and fifty-five dollars is the average of receipts of preachers last year in the Louisiana Conference. One per cent. on the receipts of 2267 traveling preachers will support eight Bishops, and give them a better salary than they now get. One per cent. will do it, but lest something should go amiss, it is well to have the Book Concern to back the Bench. I want to make the Bishops' support certain, and I should like to keep them in some connection—some special sympathy—with that establishment which they do so much to support. To meet the objection against paying the Bishops but once a year, we provide that the Book Agents shall make advances to them, etc. I have no doubt this plan will provide an ample support for the Bishops, and it will support them amongst the people, where, I doubt not, they prefer to be supported. I submit this plan as a substitute for the preamble and resolution.

J. E. Evans—Would it not be better to have both papers referred?

H. McTyeire—I will not be outdone by Bro. Evans in that. I move the reference of both papers to a Special Committee.

The motion was agreed to.

J. E. Evans suggested that the Committee consist of seven members, which was taken by consent.

PRESIDENT OF ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

R. J. Harp submitted a resolution of inquiry (signed also by S. J. Davies) as to the propriety of changing the answer to question 3d page 40 of the Discipline, with reference to the appointment of President of Annual Conference.

J. B. McFerrin—What change in the Discipline does it propose?

A. Voice—It changes the power of the Bishops to appoint.

The resolution was adopted.

EIGHTH DAY.

MONDAY, May 10.

The Conference was called to order by Bishop Paine—the preliminary exercises being conducted by Rev. N. Talley.

The journal of Saturday was read and approved.

There being no reports from committees, the Chair directed the Secretary to call the Conference for petitions and memorials.

ST. LOUIS BOOK DEPOSITORY.

J. Anderson presented a memorial from the Publishing Committee of the St. Louis, Missouri, and Kansas Mission Annual Conferences.

E. M. Marvin—Mr. President, I would like to hear brother Pinkard in regard to this interest, who, I understand, is present and prepared to make a statement to the Conference.

C. F. Deems—I move that the Conference hear Bro. Pinkard's statement.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. Pinkard then came forward and made a brief statement of the circumstances which led to the establishment of the St. Louis Book Depository, and to vindicate the management thereof in the hands of brother McAnally. The movement for this Publishing House was commenced in 1850, before there was any Publishing House of the Church—before there could be any intention to antagonize any other establishment. We were driven to adopt that course by what we considered the highest interests of the Church in that quarter. There never was a desire to do any thing by way of antagonism to any other interests of the Church. The moneys for this purpose were in hand in 1852, when they were committed to the management of bro. McAnally. These moneys were contributed under such restrictions that they could not be used for any other purpose. Brother McAnally declined, at first, to accept the management, and debated the matter for some time before he could consent to accept.—At that time we were unable to pay the Agent; but seeing the embarrassment of the Church for want of a Depository, at the earnest solicitation of the brethren he consented to take up the work; and he has kept up the Depository ever since. Those having charge of this work have more than once intimated a desire to be connected with the General Conference. This memorial is in keeping with our present and past feeling as to the whole matter. There were circumstances connected with the subscription of the money by which this Depository had been established, which placed them in rather a peculiar position, which he was ready to make known to the proper committee.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Books and Periodicals.

MEMPHIS CONFERENCE BOUNDARY.

J. G. Jones submitted a resolution from the Mississippi Conference requesting their delegates here to use their influence to have the southern tier of counties, now attached to the Memphis Conference, added to this (the Mississippi) Conference.

G. W. D. Harris—I have no objection that the paper should go to the appropriate committee, but if a report in favor of that object should come in, the Conference may expect to hear a desperate fuss over here.

On motion by J. G. Bruce, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Boundaries.

RIO GRANDE CONFERENCE.

J. Boring—Mr. President, I desire to move the Conference to take up the consideration of the Report (No. 1) from the Committee on Missions—that for the establishment of the Rio Grande Mission Conference. It is important that the action of the Conference in this matter should be had at an early day. There is no difficulty in the case that I know of. I move that the report be taken up.

The motion was agreed to, and accordingly the said report was read by the Secretary.

T. N. Gardner—We want to know something about this territory and people, and the necessity for this proposition.

J. Boring—If there be any question with regard to the propriety of this report, I suppose it will be expected of me, as Chairman of the Committee on Missions, to make some representations. I will ask the Secretary to read this paper of notes of this region, its population, churches, stations, preachers, resources, trade, wants, etc.

The paper was read, describing the boundaries as follows:

Beginning the northeastern line at the mouth of the Guadaloupe river, circum. lat. 28½°; thence up the Guadaloupe river to the junction with San Antonio river; up the San Antonio river, (including the town of San Antonio;) thence from the town of San Antonio along the military road to Fort Mason, (leaving the Fredericksburg German Mission in the Texas Conference;) from Fort Mason running due north to the Colorado river; up the Colorado river to Big Spring; thence due north to the State line; thence west on the State line of Texas to El Paso; thence down the Rio Grande to its mouth; thence along the coast to the point of beginning.

J. Boring—I think it unnecessary to consume time on this. The boundaries there defined embrace a vast extent of country—not an uninhabited country, but containing a very considerable population—a number of towns and cities. Among the latter is the city of San Antonio, of about 12,000 inhabitants. This place has a stupendous commerce, and contains a vast amount of intellect and enterprise. Similar statements might be made with regard to divers other points within the proposed Conference. There is a large population along the whole Gulf coast. The San Amonio Mission is quite a property and self-sustaining. From the information in my possession, and my own personal knowledge of this Southwestern country, I cannot see why the Conference should hesitate a moment. This Conference proposes to run its western boundary-line for several hundred miles along the borders of Mexico; and all along that border there are now forming large American settlements within the territory of Mexico. All along that line, of six or eight hundred miles, it is of the utmost importance that we should be fully organized. There must be revolution and progress in this quarter, of which the Church ought to avail herself. I never saw a new Conference organized the propriety of which was more manifest.

J. W. Whipple—It has been erroneously supposed that this proposed Conference lies in the form of a horse-shoe. It lies not in fragments, but in an available solid body. From the coast to the mountains there is a square block of territory where sundry missions have been already established; thence extending up the Rio Grande valley, it embraces a district of more than two hundred miles square—one of the most lovely countries on the face of the earth.

Bishop Early—I have had occasion to reflect more on this particular ground than upon any other portion of our missionary work. I have been gratified with the demonstrations of care, and caution, and far-seeing exhibited by the Texas preachers on this subject. If the preachers who live on the ground were to start difficulties, we might hesitate. But they start none. Look at that location: New Mexico on the north, California on the west, Mexico on the south, and Texas on the east. You have here a vast territory, and still leave enough for the Texas Conference. But vast as the territory is, it is not too much. Think how important is your approach here upon the borders of Mexico. You start at Brownsville, opposite the city of Matamoras, ascend the river to Rio Grande City, and finally to El Paso. The Pacific Railroad will run through this territory, and pass out at El Paso. Here is the outlet from Mexico into the United States. I have been told by one of the preachers stationed at Brownsville, that not long since he had occasion to visit some ladies who had married Mexicans, upon invitation of their husbands, residing at Matamoras, and whilst there a police officer asked him—very politely of course—what he came there for—"I came to visit my friends," was the reply. "Are you a preacher?" continued the policeman. "I am." "A Protestant?" "Yes." "Then," said the officer, "I am instructed by the priest to tell you that you must not come over here for the purpose of officiating." The preacher replied again: "I have not come here for that purpose, but I tell you, frankly, that I am in the habit of reading the Scriptures and praying in the families where I reside, and if they should ask me to preach I shall certainly do so." The police officer then asked him where he was stopping. The preacher mentioned the names of some of the most influential families in the place, and the police officer took his leave with, "I beg you, sir, not to attempt to preach here." This preacher further states the fact, which is corroborated by many other accounts from that quarter, that the Mexicans everywhere in that region are manifesting the greatest interest in the knowledge of the principles of Protestantism. I hope this report will pass without objection; for it is of the utmost importance, in my judgment, that you should send out studious men into that field—men who will stay there and study the Mexican language, and preach the gospel to the people.

J. B. McFerrin—I am very favorably disposed towards the establishment of this mission, provided two or three difficulties can be removed. I am in favor of progressing; but we ought never to progress until we are ready. Four years ago the General Conference authorized a Kansas Mission Conference, and now there is a proposition to dissolve it. In 1844, a proposition came up from the Indian tribes for the organization of an Indian Mission Conference. I opposed it, because I believed that in the end it would not work well. Now we have a petition for dissolving that Conference. Thus, after a few years experience in this way, we have propositions to dissolve two Annual Conference. That looks like progressing backwards. How will it look to the public at large? They will say we have been driven from these territories. I do not like that, sir. Whenever we establish ourselves in any position, I want to be able to maintain that position. Everybody knows that where we have to retreat, it but increases the difficulty, and we become chargeable with overreaching our means. The great difficulty lies in getting preachers. I saw this in 1844, and said then, that as long as this Indian work was connected with our regular Conferences, we have the right to send out any man belonging to the Conference; and, when he wishes to return, we have the power to send another in his place, and so allow the ministers to alternate. Almost any brother would be willing to go for one or two years, whilst very few would be willing to take out their families and raise up their children there. How are you going to get this work supplied? Will the brethren from Texas go? will they leave that beautiful land of flowers, where they have labored so long and so successfully, and go into these Southwestern wilds? [A Voice—"Yes, sir."] I am glad to hear it. But can you find a sufficient number? If you can, then I am for the organization of this Conference. If you will convince me that there are territory, population and preachers enough, then I am for it. But if not, then I prefer that it remain missionary ground.

G. J. Pearce—I think we can accommodate this. These Texas brethren seem to be anxious. Brother Whipple says this is the finest country in the world. Let these brethren occupy that country, then—take it to themselves and cultivate it. Let them turn their attention in that direction, and then they can afford to give the East Texas brethren more ground to operate upon. I fully agree with Brother McFerrin. I believe, to use a common phrase, that we ought to "wait for the wagon;" that we should go out in force, and never go out so far as to be obliged to retreat. Let us continue our border work, until these territories shall be strong enough to keep house.

L. Campbell—I am entirely opposed to this report, from various considerations. I am greatly opposed to progressing backward.—Nothing has been more injudiciously managed than our Missions. I sometimes hear the question started, whether our Missionary enterprise is not a failure. You establish a mission; you send out a missionary; he writes a few letters, becomes discouraged, returns home, and that is the last of it. Your new missions are almost gone. Shall we have another case of failure? Shall the next Conference have occasion to declare again that we have begun too soon? What of the 12,000 inhabitants spoken of in old San Antonio? They are Mexicans, who can be more be impressed with the gospel than the graulte. But brother Pearce has told a secret. There is a controversy about the boundary-line between the two Texas Conferences connected with this report for a new Conference.

J. W. Phillips—Is that the brother Campbell who once made a failure himself in the East Texas Mission?

The Chair does not know.

R. Alexander—Mr. President, they tell us of certain failures, and they anticipate failures in our missionary operations—

J. B. McFerrin (interrupting)—I said nothing as to missionary failures. I spoke of Conferences.

R. Alexander—Individual missionaries have made failures in their enterprises; but that has not been the case with our Missionary Conferences. They know nothing about failure—no such thing as going back. We had a Missionary Conference organized in Texas, which became at once self-sustaining, and at length divided into two Conferences. They now number over 20,000 members, and we are here to-day asking to set off yet another Missionary Conference, and so extend the good work to those who are beyond us. I think brother Campbell's remarks gratuitous. I hope he does not judge the missionary spirit in Texas by his own failure in that direction.

L. Campbell—I said not one word about Texas. Texas was named in connection with myself. I beg leave to state that by the direction of the Bishop, I was called away from Texas and put into other work quite as hard, and perhaps even more arduous and difficult than any work in Texas. These failures have no application to me.

R. Alexander—The very arguments against the erection of this Conference were turned into its favor. What is the great object of the Texas Conference in this proposition to go beyond the Rio Grande? It is to see if we cannot hold out inducements to young men to go there and stay there, and study the Mexican language. But as they go now they are liable at any time to be recalled and sent [illegible] hundred miles in some other direction, which destroys their whole interest and usefulness. Brother McTyeire tells me that he has [illegible] of promising young men in the older Conferences who are willing to go there if they can be kept there. They would go and preach the gospel to the Mexicans. Thus [illegible] the design in moving the or[illegible] this new Conference. East T[illegible] do with it. She has now [illegible] more prosperous than the Texas [illegible] and this proposition proposes to take [illegible] important stations, [illegible] Brownsville and [illegible] Texas Conference. We want those young brethren to go there and live and labor and die there. But this Conference is never made, if this south-western [illegible] perpetually in connection with [illegible] I have no doubt the re- [illegible] ment of the East [illegible] This proposition has been [illegible] by the Texas, but the [illegible] I give it as my opinion, [illegible] in that country for twenty-one [illegible] south-western region will be [illegible] and the cause of religion [illegible] far more rapidly advanced by [illegible] separate Conference pro- [illegible] line in force from the mouth [illegible] Paso. Let us raise up the [illegible] God will provide them; and if the work [illegible] to be done, he will also provide the [illegible] Methodism needs vitalizing in its mis- [illegible] spirit. Brother Campbell, of the Mis- [illegible] Conference, asks me if I will go. Yes, [illegible] I feel it to be my duty to go, I will go? [illegible] say no more than that; and the man who [illegible] shrink from his duty, though it led him [illegible] hardships, is not a properly developed [illegible] minister of Christ. Yes, sir; I would go. But [illegible] such a reflection upon a Methodist preacher? If this is to be taken as an argument, [illegible] we must restrict the Bishops' power of appoint- [illegible] ment to the consent of the man. That would [illegible] revolutionary. In further answer to the re- [illegible] that fell from the lips of my brother, I [illegible] say that, to advocate his position in public [illegible] would be against the principles of the man in [illegible] private. Shrinking from hardship! is that the [illegible] that he would raise before our minds? [illegible] think? No, Mr. President, a thousand [illegible] say, sir, if we can do it, let us by [illegible] occupy this ground.

[illegible]—Mr. President: Some two or [illegible] allusions lead me to the belief that I have [illegible] misunderstood, and two or three brethren [illegible] have been to me privately and desired that [illegible] make an explanation. I did not mean [illegible] to say that our missionary enterprise among the [illegible] was a failure. Far from it. If I have [illegible] that impression, it was certainly very far [illegible] from my intention to do so; for our Indian mis- [illegible] sions have succeeded admirably. What I in- [illegible] tended to say was, that the attempt to establish [illegible] separate Conferences for our mission fields had [illegible] proved to fail; and that I thought the work of [illegible] missions could be better accomplished in another [illegible]

[illegible]—I understood Bro. Alexander [illegible] that the Texas Conference was trying to [illegible] the borders northward, so as to facilitate [illegible] the two Conferences out of what is [illegible] the East Texas Conference. I wish to [illegible] I am a member of the Committee on [illegible] Boundaries, and this is the first time I have [illegible] heard that. No such proposition has been [illegible] committee.

[illegible]—I alluded to Bro. Pearce. He [illegible] came to East Texas. The project of dividing [illegible] East Texas Conference was developed in [illegible] various four years ago.

[illegible]—The next point was an allega- [illegible] that the East Texas Conference was but [illegible] Bro. Tullis is here, represent- [illegible] the newest portion of that [illegible] I have heard no such complaint [illegible] from him.

[illegible]—I intended to say that the northwestern portion of their territory was but superficially cultivated—not that they have no [illegible] there.

[illegible]—I had hoped—and I suggested [illegible] to Dr. Boring privately—that this question [illegible] be sprung thus prematurely upon the [illegible]

[illegible]—I never heard of any ill disposi- [illegible] this mission. I made the motion [illegible] this morning, not as a Chairman [illegible] Committee on Missions, but at the in- [illegible] of the friends of the enterprise; and if [illegible] desire now, I will withdraw the mo- [illegible]

[illegible] was not opposed to the forma- [illegible] Rio Grande Conference. It must be [illegible] the design in urging this matter was [illegible] all the action of the committee in an- [illegible] matter. The action was premature, and [illegible] hoped some disinterested person [illegible] the postponement of the question [illegible] present.

[illegible]—The whole matter resolves itself [illegible] this question: How can that region be best [illegible] with the gospel? Can it be best sup- [illegible] by retaining a portion of the Texas Con- [illegible] ference not set as a distinct Confer- [illegible] the latter. If erected into a [illegible] there are young men there, [illegible] told us, who would enter [illegible] but who would not do so [illegible] the probability of a subsequent transfer [illegible] to a remote part of the work. In the North Carolina Conference we have at least one young man, acquainted with the Spanish language, full of missionary zeal, who would be willing to go to that Conference, if formed.

J. Harrell hoped the matter would be postponed.

H. N. McTyeire was not ready for the postponement. The report was brought at an early day before the body. The matter had been matured by the committee. He hoped the Conference would act promptly. There was no need of delay. It ought not to give way for a mere difference of opinion about a boundary line.—As all things are now ready, it was to be hoped the Conference would vote for the new Conference, and send out the report that on this tenth day of May one thing had been done—one good thing.

A. L. P. Green was opposed to the postponement. Probably the Conference understood the question as well as it ever would. If postponed, we should have all this speaking over again. The report ought to pass. The territory was large, and much of it was as yet unoccupied by our preachers. Unless formed into a separate Conference, it could not be efficiently served with the gospel. Let the new Conference be formed, and the work would have a local habitation and a name. If we intend to occupy that country at all, we ought to begin at once. There was no division of opinion in the committee on the subject. Why delay for other questions? Let us pass this report, and have done with one item of business.

D. S. Doggett was opposed to the resolution before the body. We were ready for the vote on the entire subject. He wanted to know, 1st. What was the probable number of the population embraced within the proposed limits; and 2d, What was the average character of that population.

J. W. Whipple replied that San Antonio had about 12,000, Brownsville about 7000, and several other places from one to three thousand.—Twelve efficient preachers were needed there now.

T. O. Summers—Are there any converted Mexicans who have joined our Church?

J. W. Whipple—There are several, Mexicans and half-bloods, in a number of our appointments. Many others would join if they had an opportunity, where we now have no classes, and no preachers to form any.

C. K. Marshall—The great Pacific Railroad is to pass through the entire northern line of the proposed new Conference. It runs through the richest portion, perhaps, of the globe. Every bar of railroad iron laid down will produce a family as large as John Rogers' when he was carried to the stake. "Westward the star of empire takes its way." We are apprehensive of losing the West altogether.

Some one called the speaker to order. He resumed:

I am opposed to the postponement. We cannot think of waiting to see whose wagon is to take the lead. The Methodist Itinerancy was not gotten up on the principle of waiting for the wagon. He hoped we should immediately set off the Conference. The Mexicans were being converted. We should some day, not far distant, spill over and flood Mexico. I expect by and by, said he, to be down there in Central America. This very day we need the Conference. Let us form it, and some of these Conferences that have got the dropsy and need tapping, will run off and become healthy.

Several amendments were offered and laid on the table. The question was then taken, and the report adopted.

Bishop Soule presented a letter from John C. Adams, of St. Michael's, Md., apprising him of his appointment as trustee of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for a legacy bequeathed the said Church by Mrs. Anne White, of Louisiana, deceased, and asked some action of the Conference in the premises.

The letter was read, and the matter was, on motion of J. E. Evans, referred to a special committee of three.

The chair announced as that committee, J. E. Evans, H. N. McTyeire, and Levi Pearce.

The following was offered by N. H. Lee, and referred to the Committee on Boundaries:

Resolved, That the Committee on Boundaries be instructed so to define the boundary-line between the Louisville and Kentucky Conferences as to bring Mount Washington in the former.

L. M. Lee presented a resolution, that the Committee on Revisals be instructed to inquire into the propriety of transferring the examination now had of candidates for full membership in the Conference, to the reception of ministers on trial. It was referred to the Committee on Itinerancy.

N. Scarritt offered the following, which was referred to the Committee on Education:

Resolved, That the Bishops be and hereby are requested to enlarge and improve the course of study, and report the same to this Conference for their sanction.

L. D. Huston offered the following, which was passed by a rising vote:

Resolved, That Bishop Soule be and hereby is respectfully requested to preach to this body, at some convenient time during its session.

Bishop Soule said he thanked the Conference, but could not pledge himself to preach. If he found himself able to do so, he would give the Conference notice.

C. F. Deems offered the following, which was referred to the Committee on Revisals:

Resolved, That the committees of examination of candidates for ordination be appointed by the Annual Conferences.

F. G. Ferguson presented a resolution providing for the superannuation of a bishop, when he becomes either mentally or physically disqualified for the Episcopal functions; which was referred to the Committee on Episcopacy.

H. N. McTyeire presented the reports of the New Orleans Christian Advocate and Book Depository; which were referred to the Committee on Books and Periodicals.

J. Hamilton presented a paper, proposing certain alterations in the Discipline; which was referred to the Committee on Revisals.

O. R. Blue offered a resolution respecting the claimants on Conference funds; which was referred to the Committee on Revisals.

J. B. McFerrin called up Report No. 2, of the Committee on Books and Periodicals; which was adopted. The report disallows the claims of Mrs. Latta and Thomas V. Brown, and refers that of Mrs. Bascom to the Book Agents for settlement.

Announcements were now made, and Conference adjourned.

NINTH DAY.

TUESDAY, May 14.

Bishop Paine called the Conference to order. The opening exercises by B. M. Drake.

The minutes of yesterday were read and approved.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES—GEORGIA CONFERENCE.

Bishop Pierce being now called to the Chair, announced the order of reports from Committees.

L. Pearce, from the Committee on Boundaries, submitted their Report, (No. 4,) recommending a change in the boundary of the Georgia Conference, proposing that said Conference shall include all the State of Georgia except that part lying south of a line commencing at Gaines and terminating at the Altamaha river.

Laid on the table according to rule.

TEXAS CONFERENCES—BOUNDARY.

L. Pearce, from a majority of the Committee on Boundaries, submitted their Report, (No. 5,) adverse to the memorial asking for a change of the boundary line between the Texas Conferences.

J. W. Fields—I have a minority report from the Committee on Boundaries which I wish to offer as a substitute for that report.

The minority report proposes for the boundary between these Conferences, a line beginning at the east pass of the Galveston Bay; thence through the town of Cincinnati, along the northern boundary of Walker and Gaines counties, etc.; thence due north to Red river: and it is signed by nine out of the nineteen members of the Committee, also by the balance of the delegation from the East Texas Conference on another part of the same paper.

The Bishop—The names of delegates, not members of the Conference, ought not to have been placed on the same paper.

J. W. Fields—I am willing to have them erased.

Those reports lie on the table one day, under a provision in the Rules of Order.

MISSION TO WESTERN COAST OF AFRICA.

J. Boring, from the Committee on Missions, submitted their report, (No. 4,) declining at present to establish a Mission on the Western Coast of Africa, but recommending that the Bishops proceed to organize such a mission whenever, in their judgment, it shall become expedient so to do.

J. Boring said these reports were of such a character that the Conference would be fully prepared to act upon them on the present reading. The resolution referred to the committee directed their attention to the establishment of a Mission on the Western Coast of Africa. The committee had ascertained, to their satisfaction, that the Western Coast was not now an eligible field, but that an eligible field could perhaps be found farther in the interior; and therefore they had submitted this report, referring the matter to the discretion of the Bishops.

On motion by H. N. McTyeire, the report was adopted.

MISSIONS TO THE SLAVES.

J. Boring from the same committee, submitted their report, (No. 5,) to the effect that they cannot recommend the adoption of any resolution for the appointment of a Superintendent of Missions to be slaves.

J. Boring stated that the report of the Alabama Conference, from which this application came, had not reached this General Conference, and, as a matter of course, was not before the Committee; and that, therefore, the report submitted was the best they could do under the circumstances.

The report was adopted.

MISSION TO CENTRAL AMERICA.

J. Boring, from the same committee, also presented their report, (No. 5,) unanimously recommending the establishment of a Mission at some point in Central America or New Granada, at as early a day as practicable.

The report was adopted.

J. Boring presented a paper, as a substitute for our present plan of Missionary operations.

H. N. McTyeire moved its reference to the Committee on Missions. He said it was the great business of that Committee, and perhaps the chief busines of the General Conference.

It was so referred.

H. A. C. Walker presented another plan; which was, in accordance with his request, referred, without reading, to the same committee.

H. N. D. Witson and D. B. Nicholson presented a resolution, proposing a mere verbal change in the Discipline; which was read and referred to the Committee on Revisals.

W. Barringer, R. T. Heflin, and D. B. Nicholson offered the following:

Resolved, That the Committee on Revisals be requested to inquire into the expediency of preparing a new chapter on the Rules of Evidence in Church trials, to be inserted in the Discipline, as a guide in the administration of discipline.

It was moved to refer the resolution to the Committee on Itinerancy.

The substitute prevailed, referring the matter to the College of Bishops.

G. W. Carter and W. W. Bennett presented the following:

Resolved, that the Committee on Revisals be requested to inquire into the expediency of preparing, for insertion in the Discipline, a formula for Church trials, and report the same to this Conference.

J. W. Phillips opposed the resolution. The last resolution covered the ground, and rendered this unnecessary. If every thing were inserted in the Discipline, it would make the book too large.

G. W. Carter offered the following:

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to prepare for publication in permanent form, by the Book Agents, an Ecclesiastical Digest, embracing,

1. The Judicial Reports and Decisions of the several General Conferences from 1812 to 1858 inclusive.

2. The Decisions of the College of Bishops on appeals to them from the Annual Conferences since 1854.

3. The decisions of the College of Bishops on other than appeal cases, when such decisions are approved by the General Conference.

Mr. Carter sustained the resolution in a very lucid and able speech, setting forth the necessity and utility of such a compilation.

A. L. P. Green was opposed to the resolution. It would be a troublesome, difficult piece of work to compile the thing; it would involve a good deal of expense to publish it, and when published there would be no market for it.

J. Hamilton confessed his own misgivings, in view of a disposition here to multiply forms and technicalities. In this way, he feared, it would become next to impossible to get a bad minister or layman out of the Church. It was but the other day that the decision of an Annual Conference was reversed here upon the application of a rule of construction which many had never heard of before. He took exceptions particularly to the last part of the resolution. He did not believe in the propriety of investing this body with the power of supervising and correcting the decisions of the Bishops. This body had claimed and exorcised judicial functions, for want of a tribunal of final resort, but he should regret to see this function of the General Conference recognized and legalized in this form. The idea of giving judicial functions to a legislative body was without a parallel, unless it might be found in the British House of Lords, or, perchance, on one occasion in the Legislature of the State of New York. The legislative and judicial function were distinct, and ought to be kept so, especially in the Church. He thought we might safely place the judicial functions of the Church in the hands of the Episcopacy. Besides, the judicial session of the General Conference would take up a great deal of time, and discussions and debates of intricate and important questions would be introduced into a body which, by reason of its numbers, would be far less competent to decide them than five or eight sober, intelligent, godly men.

G. W. Carter—It is not susceptible of that construction. I consider that all the decisions of the Bishops not reported for the action of the General Conference stand as laws. Certainly I do not mean that the General Conference shall take up and formally pass upon every decision of the Bishops. The resolution does not propose to perpetuate these reviews, but only to have respect to the past.

J. Hamilton—the explanation of Bro. Carter does away with a great deal of my objection.

A. L. P. Green added, that if he could see any necessity for this thing, he would be willing to submit to the expense. He never felt the need of such a book himself, and did not think it necessary. If the book were published, it is likely that nine-tenths of it would be but a compilation of repealed decisions and laws. The very principles and cases necessary in administration were already in the archives of the Church. Those desiring to know more might go into the old manuscripts and hunt them up. He regarded the decisions of the Bishops, in regard to all questions of law, as the end of strife. But still, the General Conference had the power to get clear of the decision and the interpretation both; so that we were in no danger of the encroaching power of the Bishops.

L. Campbell—The Holy Scriptures were the supreme law, and we never claimed authority to legislate for the spiritual government of the Church. Not only were the Holy Scriptures of supreme authority, but they were adapted to administration by holy men. It seemed to him that to take rules of evidence and modes of interpretation which belong to the world, and impose them upon holy men, would be most incongruous. He concurred in the remark of Dr. Hamilton, that the old forms could not be improved without involving difficulties at every step. He believed that all we wanted was to come down to the simple administration of the New Testament in the hands of holy men.—This was a government that could not be patched up by human hands. The tendency of such propositions was to involve ourselves in labyrinthine difficulties. He hoped the resolution would pass into the Lethean pocket.

W. A. Smith felt some anxiety that his friend from Virginia might be gratified, but thought the proposition ought to be amended, so as to authorize the committee which shall prepare the decisions, to publish only such of them as they may deem of practical utility. He inclined to the belief that they would find very few such. It was only a few years since that the reports of the General Conference began to be published; and they would have to go into the manuscript journals of the Conference to find a good deal of the information which the resolution contemplates. Then, no doubt, they would find a number of conflicting decisions. He could himself testify to votes in the General Conference on judicial questions in total conflict with decisions of former years. The publication of these conflicting decisions could do no good. A legislature the interpreter of its own laws was an idea unheard of. A legislative body was more or less a popular body. It was impossible for such a body to make consistent judicial decisions, tied up as they are by personal considerations and party influences. This showed the necessity of having a body separate and apart from the legislature, to expound and interpret the law. He had no objection, if a committee could be found to wade through these masses of matter, that they should publish the result of their labors. Up to the time of the last General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the General Conference had been considered the final judge of all questions at law. That Conference commenced a modification of this. By a rule then established, in the nature of a constitutional feature, the College of Bishops was constituted a co-ordinate branch of the Church government, in fact, as they are incontestably so in theory; and, in accordance therewith, the Episcopal Committee reported a rule, which was adopted, requiring the Bishops to report and publish their decisions. Carry out this principle, and the General Conference was no longer the final judge of the law, but simply the lawmaker. He did not propose to discuss the propriety of this, but simply to show the ground the Conference was taking. He had no objection to this digest, provided the Bishops' decisions should be accompanied with a report of the circumstances on which they are founded.

C. K. Marshall thought the resolution would be lost; but to obviate one of Dr. Green's objections, he said, the decisions could be published in one column of the great central newspaper organ without charge.

L. M. Lee alleged that all this matter had been published. The General Conference of 1850 had authorized him to go to the General Conference at the North and get a copy of the history of Methodism from the old Conference records. That body would not come out in a manly way and allow him to copy; but they authorized the publication of these old records. This had been done; and whatever they contain of any importance was now printed at our hands. He had examined these records as far back as 1844, and there was very little in them that could avail any thing in accomplishing the object aimed at in this resolution. So far, then, as the acts of Conference in the past are concerned, we had them. It was our Methodism as well as those who published the book.—Whatever was Methodistic and legal up to 1844, was Methodistic and legal to us now; and what has occurred since that time, we have published. If this committee were appointed, he did not think it would be a very great labor for them to make a digest of the kind spoken of; for the records were published, and in his judgment every Methodist preacher ought to have a copy of them.

On motion by W. J. Sasnett, the resolution was then laid on the table.

JOHN CARR.

The Bishop now introduced Father John Carr, of Tennessee, standing upon the steps of the forum with him, who, the Bishop said, was the oldest living member of the Methodist Church in the State, and might have something to say to the body.

The members of Conference then rose up, and Father Carr said: "I have been a member of the Methodist Church since 1790, and have been living in Sumner county ever since. I feel very grateful, indeed, in being spared to come into this hall and to see so many of God's preachers. In early times I used to guide the preachers from one fort to another, to hear them preach. I feel grateful to God for the results; and for what I see to day. I thank you, brethren, for your attentions."

Bishop Pierce then repeated these words in a distinct voice, and, on his suggestion, it was ordered that Father Carr be invited to a seat in this Conference, and to take part in its deliberations.

DRESS.

J. Lusk submitted a resolution (signed also by Levi Pearce) to the effect that the 8th section of chapter III., p. 108, of the Discipline be stricken out.

Bishop Soule—What is the section?

J. Lusk—It is the section on Dress. I would not oppose the scriptural restrictions on dress: I do not care how our people dress, if they do not exceed the bonds set by St. Peter and St. Paul. The rule in the Discipline is put down with a good deal of stringency; still, many Methodists are as magnificently dressed as any body else. The rule has become, it seems to me, altogether inoperative. Our preachers and Bishops wear gold-headed canes and gold spectacles; and I should not be surprised if some of our reverend fathers were to look up through their gold spectacles at the brother now proposing this change. After further remarks in this vein, he moved that the resolution lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

SLAVERY.

C. C. Gillespie—If in order, Mr. President, I wish to read an extract from the Journal of the East Texas Conference with reference to the general rule of the Discipline on the subject of slavery.

The Chair—We will hear it.

C. C. Gillespie then read the report of a special committee of the East Texas Conference, memorializing the General Conference and urging the removal of said regulation from the Discipline.

On motion by Levi Pearce, the paper was referred to the Special Committee raised upon the Alabama resolutions.

THE DISCIPLINE IN THE GERMAN LANGUAGE.

On motion by J. B. McFerrin, the Conference now took up the consideration of the Report, (No. 1,) from the committee on Books and Periodicals, recommending the adoption of such measures as shall secure the translation and publication of the Discipline in the German language.

J. W. Phillips moved the adoption of the report.

The motion was agreed to.

J. B. McFerrin—The report does not specify by what method this work shall be accomplished. I hope that will be now indicated by the Conference.

R. T. Heflin—I move that the Book Editor be instructed to carry out this object in such a manner as he may deem advisable.

C. F. Deems—I can hardly see any necessity for the resolution, but I think the matter ought to be in hands of the Book Agents.

E. Stevenson—I am opposed to the motion. Under present circumstances I believe the Book Agents will find themselves in possession of no capital to invest in that way. But I believe the Constitution of the Missionary Society has already provided for such a work. I believe the Missionary Society has power to invest money in the publication of German books. The wants of our German population must be known to them, and I hope therefore the Conference will place the matter in their hands. I move, as a substitute, that the Missionary Board be authorized to appropriate funds for the purpose of stereotyping this work.

T. N. Gardner objected to the substitute, on the same grounds urged against the work being thrown upon the Publishing House. The Missionary Society was less able than the Book Agents to furnish the money for this work.

C. F. Deems concurred. If this Discipline in German was to be given away, there would be propriety in the substitute. But it was presumable the book would have a sale. There must be the presumption of a sufficient market, or a practical business committee would not have recommended the publication.

J. B. McFerrin—From the remarks of Dr. Deems the Conference might be led to infer that the Committee judged that the Publishing House was to do this work; but it will be recollected I stated, when I introduced the report, that the Committee were of opinion the Conference should direct it to be done, in whole or in part, by the Missionary Society.

T. N. Gardner—Did the committee pass such a resolution?

J. B. McFerrin—The committee made no such resolution, but it was spoken of in committee, and some of the members, I know, were of that opinion. But the committee desired the General Conference to take its own course. They knew that, in 1854, the Conference directed the Missionary Society to appropriate funds for the establishment of a German paper in Galveston; they knew that Conference had made up the $500 deficiency in that direction, and therefore calculated it might be their disposition that the Missionary Society should do this work. After what has been said about the solvency of the Publishing House, I will say, that if it is in any danger, it is because the Agents have been required to do too much work not properly belonging to them. Since we have had virtually a Missionary Conference in California, who has met the expenses of its Superintendents engaged in that work? The Southern Methodist Publishing House has done it—a work that legitimately belongs to the Missionary Board. I think the Conference had better give this work into the hands of the Missionary Board, or reconsider their vote on the report.

J. Hamilton submitted an estimate of the cost ($600 to $1000) of translating and stereotyping the Discipline and Hymn Book into German. The Publishing House could not expect to effect sales enough to cover this. He considered that the Missionary Board should sustain the expense of stereotyping. Their stringent appropriations last winter, which had been referred to, were attributable to the money panic of last October.

T. O. Summers—It is expedient that we should have the Hymn Book translated; but do you know what has to be done, when you talk about translating? When this work is done, you will have to put your hand down deep into your pantaloons pocket. And that is not all. There is yet to be found the man that can translate these hymns into the German language. A good English and German scholar might translate the Discipline and the Catechism, but who could translate these hymns? That's the question; and it is absolutely astounding. I understand that some very good hymns have been brought out by our Northern brethren in the German language, and my impression is, that we will have to borrow that book for some time to come, until we can scarce up some good German poet to do this work for us. He would put down his estimate of the cost of all this work at four or five thousand dollars; and he gave his opinion that some share of it should be thrown upon the Missionary Board, which was known to be decidedly friendly to German Missions.

R. T. Heflin concurred, as to the difficulty of translating the hymns, and submitted considerations in favor of his original motion.

E. Stevenson withdrew his substitute.

A. L. P. Green proposed to amend the motion by adding, after "Hymn Book," the words, "or so much as they can get out," and after "Book Agents," the words, "Missionary Board."

R. T. Heflin accepted the modification, except as to the Hymn Book.

The Secretary read the motion as amended, as follows:

Resolved, That the object of report No. 1, of the Committee on Books and Periodicals, be carried into effect at such time and in such manner as may be deemed expedient by the Book Editor, the Book Agents, and the Missionary Board.

W. A. Smith—Four years ago, I was Chairman of the Committee on Books and Periodicals; and the most difficult part of my duty was to prevent a too heavy tax on the Book Concern, and watching against the passage of resolutions requiring its Agents to do too much. I had constantly to be on my guard against the tendency to overburden them. I believe the same tendency is in the house now, and that it is still a most important matter to guard that point right—to vote no requisition of money from the Publishing House without first knowing that the Agents believe the establishment can bear it.

T. O. Summers proposed to amend the report adopted by inserting appropriately the words, "The Hymn Book, or a portion thereof."

R. T. Heflin—"Hymn Book, or a compilation of German Hymns."

T. N. Gardner moved to strike out of the pending resolution the words, "Missionary Board."

The amendment was rejected.

R. Michaels spoke in favor of requiring the Book Agents to do the work, and alleged his belief that the sales of the work would more than repay the cost.

Bishop Soule—I regard this as a very important subject. I have no doubt but that German scholars can be found in the Methodist Episcopal Church sufficiently acquainted with the German and English languages to translate the Discipline of the Methodist Episcopal Church into the German language. I have no doubt of that. I believe I know two or three men myself who would be entirely capable of that translation. But, sir, I must be permitted to doubt whether there is a German scholar in the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States who is capable of translating the hymns from the English into the German language.—That book of hymns contains a body of divinity, and I had almost said the best body of divinity that can be found in any publication of the kind. It is evangelical. A number of these hymns, as the Secretary knows, and we all know, are translations from the German, and they are highly evangelical. But the book, sir, is to form a part of our solemn religious worship, and consequently it ought to remain purely evangelical in whatever language it shall appear. But, sir, it will be found especially difficult, in the translation of these hymns, to preserve that poetical character which imparts the inspiration of devotion. I therefore think that great care should be taken in respect to these translations, so as not to introduce any thing into our forms of worship that is not purely evangelical and spiritual.

D. S. Doggot was interested in this discussion. He objected to the resolution on the ground of the weight of duty it seemed to inculcate on the Committee. It was too indefinite. If we do any thing for the German population, we must do it through their vernacular. The Agents will feel that they are under no special obligation to act in the case, and four years will elapse without the translation. He was opposed on another ground, stated by the venerable Bishop, and alluded to by the book editor—the impracticability of translating our hymns at all into the German language. Therefore he was opposed to the whole. He desired to translate into the German such of our books as could be translated. The Discipline and Catechisms could be and should be forthwith, and should have been before, but the hymn book must be left out. Dr. Smith had asked him who should pay the expenses. He hesitated not to answer, the Missionary Board—it was their appropriate work.

E. Stevenson offered an amendment, that the Book Agents, the Book Editor, and the Missionary Board be instructed to take the matter under advisement as soon as practicable.

The amendment was accepted by the mover of the resolution.

Bishop Early feared this discussion had made a wrong impression upon the public mind as to the pecuniary ability of the Publishing House. The cost of translating and stereotyping could not be more, perhaps, than two hundred dollars. As to the hymn book, our German brethren were now using the Northern hymn book, and could use it till we could get a satisfactory translation of our own for them.

G. W. Langhorne could not understand that it was any part of the work of the Missionary Board to bear the expense of this publication. The creation of the Missionary Society did not contemplate any such work as the publishing of books. He looked with surprise, not to say amusement, upon the change which had come over the spirit of our dream since the last General Conference. Four years ago, these brethren, some of them, seemed to feel like a young man suddenly come into possession of a fortune which he cannot squander, and it was proposed to lend the various Church papers thirty odd thousand dollars: now they talk as if the Publishing House were unable to bear an expense which probably would not amount to five hundred.

C. F. Deems offered to amend by inserting, "so far as it refers to the Discipline and the Catechism." The Northern Hymn Book Concern now publish a German Hymn Book.—Fifteen or twenty of Wesley's hymns are translated. There is nothing in that book improper for Southern circulation. The translation of the Discipline would be a very little labor—could be done in a few hours by any decent German scholar, and the expense would not be large.

Brother Heflin accepted the proposed amendment.

D. S. Doggott thought some provision ought to be made for furnishing our German brethren with hymns. If we could not translate, we should select. He would move an amendment that we prepare a hymn book for our German population.

C. F. Deems was opposed. It would involve great expense. The Germans were already using the Northern Hymn Book. In four years we should scarcely sell one thousand copies of a new one. There was, so far as he knew, no objection to the Northern. If there were no such hymn book, he would cordially second his brother's amendment.

J. B. McFerrin had just had a conversation with our two German brethren. They thought we had no German scholar in the United States who could translate our hymn book. We needed the Discipline and Catechism in German. That would meet the wants of our German brethren.

The question was now put, and the reaction, as amended, was adopted.

J. Hamilton asked leave of absence for O. R. Blue, who had received afflictive intelligence by telegraph, from home. It was granted, and J. Hamilton announced that J. J. Hutchinson would take the place of brother Blue in the Committee on Missions.

J. E. Edwards and A. Hunter presented a resolution advising the abolishment of the system of probation for Church membership, and another, proposing a substitute for the system, if the change should be deemed expedient; both of which were referred to the Committee on Revisals.

J. J. Hutchinson presented a resolution, signed by a number of the Alabama delegation, in regard to Missionary funds, which was referred to the Committee on Missions.

D. R. McAnally called for the exhibit of the St. Louis Christian Advocate, which was here upon presented by W. H. Anderson. It represents the concern as in a very safe and prosperous condition. The document was referred to the Committee on Books and Periodicals.

R. J. Harp and J. A. Ivey presented a preamble and resolution, setting forth our deficiencies in Church music, and calling for the preparation of a new tune-book, which was referred to the same committee.

R. Fisk offered a resolution advising a plan of ministerial labor for the local preachers and exhorters, to be arranged by the first Quarterly Conference of each year, in all our circuits and stations.

Bishop Paine made a communication to the Conference respecting the work which had been assigned him by the last General Conference of preparing the memoirs of Bishop McKendree and Bishop Soule. The biography of Bishop Soule had been turned over to other hands.—One volume of Bishop McKendree's biography he had ready for the press, but the Book Agents were not ready for its publication. It will bring his life down to 1824. The Bishop said he had devoted many hours to this work when others were asleep. It was a severe tax upon his time, but it was a labor of love—it had instructed and edified him. The life of McKendree was connected with the history of the Church from 1788 or 1789. He was identified with all the great movements of the Church—her polity, her struggles in the modification of her government and the attempts to change it. He had examined a great number of papers—some very important ones, some which had long been supposed to be lost, which Dr. Bangs—when he wrote his history of the Church, could not find, and which he says he knew not what had become of—among them the valedictory of Bishop Asbury, a valuable document, most carefully prepared, and containing some very sagacious instructions, a defence of our Church government and of our ministry, as successors of the Apostolic itinerancy. He said he could condense into one volume the remaining part of the history. He was very sorry the Agents could not put the work at once to press, as he had expected. It was not his fault, perhaps not theirs; perhaps it was a misfortune, pe aps not. It would give him more time, and both volumes could be published together when the other should be ready. He had performed the work at the command of the Conference, without any expectation or desire of remuneration. It was theirs at some future day; but, as the Agents were not ready, he should carry it home with him for the present.

T. O. Summers said Bishop Paine had shown him a considerable amount of what he had written, and many valuable documents, of which he did not know what had become, but which would be incorporated into the book. It ought to be styled not "The Life" simply, but "The Life and Times" of Bishop McKendree. It would be a history of the Church, and he was glad the Bishop was going to make two large octavo volumes of it. He intended to have one of them out during this General Conference.—It would have been put in hand by the middle of April if the Bishop had arrived, as was expected; but, said the speaker, you have got some miserable rickety arrangement of a railroad down there.

C. K. Marshall.—We have been laying down English iron.

The speaker continued:—And you ought to be ashamed of it. Why don't you use American iron? You have plenty of it. Why do you not use it? Well, any how, the Bishop's railroad was washed away, and he couldn't get there. When he came, we had made arrangements with Dr. Wightman for the publication of the Life of Bishop Capers. I am sorry the Bishop has determined to carry home that volume. I wish you would fix it down here, and not let it go back.

Bishop Paine.—It goes back certainly, if I go back.

The speaker.—You ought not to go back, then.

Bishop Paine.—I intend to be present when that work goes to press. It is not yours yet, but mine, and in my own hands.

J. G. Bruce offered a resolution, signed by himself and one or two others of the Kentucky delegation, expressing gratification at the intelligence furnished by the Bishop of the forwardness of the work, thanking him for his labors in regard to it, and requesting him to proceed, with all convenient dispatch, to its completion; which was unanimously adopted.

Appointments were now made, and the body adjourned, with benediction from the Chair.

The following is the committee on the plan for supporting the Bishops:

H. N. McTyeire, J. E. Evans, T. J. Koger, J. H. Linn, W. G. Caples.

MISSIONARY ANNIVERSARY.

The first meeting was held in Andrew Chapel on Tuesday evening, the 11th inst. Bishop Kavanaugh presiding.

The opening exercises were by Rev. Mr. Phillips, of the Texas Conference.

The report was read by the Secretary, and able and very interesting addresses delivered by Drs. Boring and Doggett.

The second meeting was held on Wednesday evening in Hobson Chapel, Rev. Mr. Rowzie, of the Virginia Conference, and Bishop Pierce, presiding. Report read by Secretary. The meeting was addressed by Bishop Kavanaugh, and Dr. Linn, of Kentucky. The speeches were able and peculiarly appropriate, and were heard with deep interest. A collection was taken, amounting to about $412.

The third meeting was held in McKendree Church, on Thursday evening. Bishop Soule, the venerable President, was present, but too feeble to preside. Bishop Andrew presided.

Report was read by Secretary. Eloquent and interesting addresses were delivered by Rev. Mr. Edwards, of Virginia, Dr. Cross, of South Carolina, and Bishop Pierce. The collection amounted to something more than $1000.

The following items are taken from the Report as read by the Secretary.

In 1845 we were organized as a Society: for the first year, ending in May, 1846, the amount raised for Missions was $68,529; for the year ending May, 1847, $73,697; for the year ending May 1848, $62,613; for the year ending May, 1849, $65,495; for the year ending May, 1850, $85,973; for the year ending May, 1851, $113,801; for the year ending May, 1852, $123,163; for the year ending May, 1853, $166,901; for the year ending May, 1854, $168,031 33; for the year ending May, 1855, $164,336 71; for the year ending May, 1856, $172,654 53; for the year ending May, 1857, $212,802 25; for the year ending May, 1858, $201,325 19.

These facts present a most gratifying result. We name them in this connection, as we are on the eve of the third session of the General Conference of our Church, and we would wish them remembered.

The mode of disbursing these funds was devised by the General Conference; and has been faithfully pursued by the Board here as well as by that in the place of its former location. A large part of the contributions pass through the hands of the different Conference Mission Committees; and only reach us as funds reported received and expended, and, as we think, justly so.

The appropriations in the Board are made annually at the meeting of the Bishops and the Board. A careful examination of the whole work is had, and after a faithful examination of each field and department of missionary labor, the amount is designated to each for which drafts may be drawn for the ensuing year.

The Board have faithfully endeavored to carry out the great trusts committed to them. For the amount received, there is no benevolent society or institution in our country at less expense. The whole expenses of the Society would not reach two per cent. upon the amount annually contributed. During a time of great financial pressure and difficulty, your Board have succeeded in sustaining fully the credit of the Society, and permitting no draft to be protested; this, too, at a time when the largest and heaviest commercial houses and benevolent associations have been most seriously affected. Indeed, it is doubtful—and it is due to be said here—whether at any other point in the Union the same banking facilities were received by any other society.

From our whole mission field cheering and encouraging reports continue to be received.—Our missions are established in the destitute portions of our regular work, among the people of color, the Germans, and the Indian tribes, with one mission in China, together with our missionary interests in California. From all these we have from time to time, as occasion required, furnished the Church, through our weekly journals, with all necessary information. Each of these departments of missionary labor is treated separately in the body of the report. We have in the aggregate 413 missions, 375 missionaries, 205 churches, 79,487 church-members and probationers, 172 Sandny-schools, 27,464 children under religious instruction, 8 (Indian) manual-labor schools, and 510 Indian pupils.

We are pained to record the death of two of our native Indian preachers—Dickson W. Lewis, of the Choctaw Nation, and Tncewalita, of the Cherokee Nation. Brother Lewis was one of the most useful men of his nation, universally popular and beloved by his people, a good man and useful preacher. He was one of the national representatives of the Choctaw Nation at Washington. Tncewalita was a good and faithful man, and a minister of abundant labors among his people. His loss is truly a great one to his nation. They are gone, have rested from their labors, and entered upon their reward and the joy of their Master. May kind Heaven indeed sanctify the death of these beloved brethren to the good of the Church and the great advancement of the cause of Missions.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Nashville, May 17, 1858.

We are now in the midst of the heaviest business. You will see by the "Daily Advocate" that the striking out of the last lingering item about slavery, hangs. The Pacific, the Indian Mission and the Kansas Conferences had not the subject before them: or rather, they did not vote on it, so far as we can ascertain. The minute of the first is uncertain, ambiguous. It is known informally that the Pacific Conference is for striking out. The other two were not visited by bishops, at the last session, and did not vote. The number of votes given above the legal majority among the Annual Conferences voting, for striking out, is not equal, by one or two, to the whole number of the membership of the three Conferences that did not vote.—Now, shall it be assumed that these three Conferences are unanimously against striking out? Again: is it competent for one or two of the smallest Conferences to defeat all the others, by non-action, when the matter has been public for a year and a half?

For myself, I am for putting the matter through, differing from those who (as the boys say at playing marbles) are for counting the past action as slippance and originating the resolution to strike out by a two-thirds vote here and sending it round again for a three-fourths concurrence, among all the Annual Conferences. I wish to put an end to agitation on this subject—to kill and bury the rule now and here, with no resurgam written on its tomb.

But brethren, wise and good and true Southerners, think our constitutional right to proceed to final action, is doubtful; at least, it is doubted: that, by enduring the agitation a year longer, a larger majority may be obtained—perhaps a vote that will approximate unanimity for striking out the general rule of the Discipline that mentions slavery. Respect for the feelings and wishes of the brethren on the border, has influence. Our border brethren are sound, but they wish what is done to be done without a doubt on any mind of its legality—done in a way so clearly constitutional that every mouth shall be stopped on that point. I write in a state of formative opinion.

The city and country around afford abundant appointments for Sabbath. A score of our preachers find employment. I have heard, and heard of, many able gospel sermons. That of Dr. Doggett, in the principal Methodist church on yesterday week, was a pulpit effort of great unction and power. The editor of the Knoxville Whig, thus describes it:

"Sabbath was a day of unusual interest in Nashville and the surrounding towns, as the pulpits were all filled with men of rare abilities, members of this General Conference. Attended the McKendree Church in the morning, and heard one of the best sermons I have listened to here, by Dr. Doggett, of Washington City. His text was, 'Then cometh the end,' etc. The preacher occupied one hour, and never did I hear a man for that length of time, who made better improvement of his time. Vast as was the crowd, on the lower floor and in the spacious galleries, tears fell as profusely as the dews of Heaven from almost every eye. Looking around me, I saw men of all classes, in and out of the Church, shedding tears most freely, and for the time being at least, the strifes of long and weary years were hushed—the bugle notes of the Gospel rung truce to partisan feelings, and hushed the warring elements of poor human nature into religious silence? One could but think of the approaching period when the cold white stone will be keeping its lonely watch over the last remains of each one present, and when the sod shall be growing green that shall hide forever from the sight of man, the finely decorated forms present! All present wrestled with the consciousness of approaching death, until it poured itself upon each mind present, and all forgot this bright world of sunshine and beauty! But while, in imagination, one seemed to be sinking down to the dark valley of the shadow of death, the concluding remarks led the despondiug hearer to know in whom he had believed, and leaning on the strong arm of the Gospel, to exclaim, 'I fear no evil'—'thy rod and thy staff they comfort me.'"

I see several lay brethren seated among the delegates—Dr. Powell and Hon. R. A. Baker of Alabama, Col. Chambers, of Georgia, and others.

Nashville, May 20.

Yesterday was a work-day. One New Testament Church stands forth, clear of all intermeddling with slavery. The item in the Discipline that alludes to it, though long, obsolete, and always ambiguous, was expunged by 140 ayes to 8 nays. The absent voters will record three more ayes. This is a wonderful approach to unanimity. And of those eight, only one is in favor of the rule for its own sake; the others condemn it and would have it out, but delay for expediency. Bishop Soule made a grand speech, before the vote was taken on the expunging resolutions. He said he had no objections to see them pass. The time had come.

In less than a year the resolution of the General Conference will have gone round to the Annual Conferences. The result is not doubtful, and the Book of Discipline will then stand fully conformed to our position—that all ecclesiastical legislation on the civil institution of slavery is outside of the gospel charter: we have only to enforce the mutual duties of master and servant, as laid down in the Bible. I may state, of those eight five are from Kentucky, two from Missouri, and one from Kansas.

The Conference has been occupied to-day with a painful business. The administration of all the bishops for the four years past has been examined and approved, save that of Bishop Early. The administration of Bishop Early, in several of the Annual Conferences, has been complained of. In nothing, however, is his moral character touched. That stands, as over it has without the least tarnish or stain upon it. The substance of the complaint from the St. Louis, Texas, South Carolina, Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, and Tennessee Conferences is, that his official intercourse has been abrupt, discourteous especially to presiding elders, and sometime severed of overbearing and impatience. These things are now before the General Conference, on a long and elaborate report from the Committee on Episcopacy. The Bishop preferred that the investigation should be conducted with open doors. This I regret. If, however, it should appear to the public that our bishops have power, and to our enemies that they may abuse it, it is also seen that they are not beyond our reach, but are held to rigid accountability. Trial it is not; but when the investigation concludes you shall have the result. The most complaints are from the Mississippi Conference, growing out of the last visitation, at Brandon. His previous visit, to the session at Jackson, two years before, was very acceptable.

A year ago yesterday Bishop Early buried his wife, the partner of a long and happy life.—His bodily afflictions have been heavy and numerous, enough to break down a younger man. Under all these circumstances, the infirmities of age added to them, he tried to fill the schedule of Conferences, wherein most of the dissatisfaction originated. With characteristic energy, he dragged himself painfully around, in a state of body and mind ill fitted for the arduous labors and cares of the president of an Annual Conference.

A new Board, substituting our present Missionary Society, has been prepared and passed through the Committee on Missions. It is a great improvement; but I fear it cannot get in. Its chief feature is, that the Annual Conferences have oversight and control of all Missions within their own bounds.

One Book Agent and not two, is just now the understood policy. A very general desire has been expressed to lift a certain person out of New Orleans and put the Publishing House on his shoulders. It is thought he, if any one, could bear the burden and propel, too. But he wrote back squarely, no, and there was an end of it.

The ambrotype man, with huge camera, entered the conference room to-day just after adjournment, and took the members in a group. He bade us keep still and shut our mouths—a thing hard to do. He tries again to-morrow, at another part of the house. All faces were properly sad, and that without effort. The grouping is very good. Bishop Soulo sits in the center, supported on the right by bishops Paine, Kavanaugh, and Early, on the left by bishop Andrew and Pierce, standing. Dr. Lovick Pierce, the oldest member on the floor, is to be represented in the act of addressing the chair. The two quaint looking secretaries, Drs. Summers and Myers, with their spectacles, sit in front of the chair. When the attitude of Dr. Pierce was so properly suggested, "Our James" was delivered of a bright idea. He rose and suggested that Dr. Smith, of Virginia, should be represented on the floor, in the act of addressing the chair, from the other side of the house. What! two speakers on the floor, at once. Out of order, that; and a smile played over the scene of faces.

The picture is to be executed on a large and fine plate, by Mr. Smithson, an eminent artist of Washington City. H. N. M.

Methodist Depository.—At a late meeting of the Board of Trustees, it was resolved to buy the house now occupied by the Depository and Advocate, 112 Camp st., and a committee was appointed to effect the purchase. That committee has carried out the instructions of the Board and the house is secured. Our friends, whose notes have matured, are earnestly requested to make immediate payment of the same to Wm. H. Foster, Esq., treasurer. The funds are needed at the present moment, and the Board has taken the step in full reliance, as well as dependence, upon the promptness of those who have subscribed to the enterprise.—Men of Israel, help!

Mr. Editor: Dear Sir—I acknowledge the receipt of one hundred dollars, a voluntary subscription of Mr. W. J. Lum, of Rocky Springs, Mi., to aid in paying for our new college building, recently completed. The same amount was received from this brother last year. I propose to acknowledge subsequent receipts in the same way, with your permission, and I hope you will be troubled frequently by the donations of the liberal to this great and good enterprise. We like any kind of subscription, but especially a voluntary one.

To the Editor of the N. O. Christian Advocate.

Nashville, Tenn., May 8, 1858.

Mr. Editor: In your paper of 5th Dec. last, there appeared the following, as a part of the proceedings of the Mississippi Conference:

"The name of James Maelennan was called, and B. M. Drake moved that he be located without his consent, in conformity with the law of the Discipline which authorzes such action, where a preacher has so conducted himself as to render him unacceptable as a traveling preacher.

"After testimony given in the case by different members of the Conference, and other brethren, which are all filed with the records, bro. Maclennan addressed the Conference for a few moments and retired, when the following substitute for the original motion was adopted:

"Resolved, That while we deeply deplore the existence of the causes which afflict bro. Maclennan, and while we believe he is guilty of no immorality and regard his position as one of an unfortunate nature, calling for our sympathy, we nevertheless believe that his situation does render him unacceptable to the people, and that he therefore be located.

"James Maclennan gave notice of his appeal from the action of this Conference in his case to the next General Conference.

"On motion, the secretary was instructed to furnish bro. Maclennan a copy of the proceedings in his case."

Concerning which, by a card in your paper of Dec. 19, I asked for a suspension of public opinion until the General Conference could act upon the subject.

I have prosecuted my appeal before the General Conference, in session here, and the following is the finding of that body:

"Bishop Kavanaugh now took the chair and called up the order of the day for 10 o'clock—the appeal of James Maclennan from the action of the Mississippi Conference. The appellant concluded his defence; B. M. Drake responded in behalf of the Mississippi Conference; the vote was taken, and the decision of the Mississippi Conference in the case was reversed."

The request for the suspension of public opinion is now withdrawn. Respectfully, &c.,

JAS. MACLENNAN.

SIGNS OF A REVIVAL.

The above is not intended as the heading of an elaborate essay. It is designed to indicate a margin on which a few items of local interest may be noted.

1st. The official and other members of this charge (Caddo circuit) have exhibited a praiseworthy solicitude in regard to the comfort of their pastor and his family. The Quarterly Conference unanimously passed a resolution favoring the purchase of a parsonage. The house we design purchasing is neat and commodious; a beautiful yard, a good orchard and a small field enhance the value and loveliness of the place. Most of the purchase money is already pledged, and the remainder will be forthcoming when needed. Negotiations are now being carried on with the owner of the premises, who is upon the Brazos; and it is expected a bargain will soon be consummated. It is confidently hoped that by the beginning of the ensuing year title and possession will have been secured; and that the house, amply and tastefully furnished, will afford whoever shall be appointed to this work a pleasant home.—Our stewards have rented a house for the present year; and thanks to the generosity of the people, the taste of the sisters, and the suggestions of the Rev. P. M. Goodwyn, that prince of parsonage builders, it is very appropriately furnished.

2d. Our people are exhibiting a commendable zeal in regard to our houses of worship.—Two or three hundred dollars have recently been expended upon Greenwood Church, and a larger outlay is contemplated upon the church at Keachi, Mt. Zion. A commodious and newly painted church will be complete as soon as it shall have been ceiled, and furnished with a brace of stoves. Mooring's, just erected, will doubtless soon be finished. Another church, in the Bicham neighborhood, is under contract.

3d. My colleague, Dr. Adams, and all our local brethren—a zealous and faithful band—are laboring efficiently. Father Sale, now in his 78th year, is sojourning among us. He is still vigorous in body and mind, and is "in labors more abundant."

The foregoing are noted as signs of a revival.

Why are Infants Church Members?

1. Because God commanded it.—Gen. 17: 12, Dent. 29: 11.

2. Because God's commands should be obeyed.

3. Because infants were members of the Church when first organized, by divine right.

4. Because this right was never taken away.

5. Because Christ joined the Church when an infant.—Luke 2: 21.

6. Because Christ's example should be followed.

7. Because infants are in heaven, God's Church above, and should be in his Church below.

8. Because infants were church members for 3000 years after the Church was organized, and have never been excluded by any body of Christians, except a few called Baptists.

9. Because God never commanded the Baptists to turn them out.

10. Because infants should be trained up in the way they should go; hence they should go into the Church, and not out of it.

COMMERCIAL.

The New Orleans Price Current, of the 26th, says:

We have no material change to notice in the general market since the report of Saturday last. The transactions are limited in our leading staples, Cotton, Tobacco, Sugar, and Molasses, with irregular and generally easier rates, and there is also but a limited business doing in the various articles of Western Produce.

On Monday European advices four days later were before the public, brought to New York by the steamer City of Washington, from Liverpool 12th inst. These advices report the sales of Cotton at Liverpool for three days to have been 30,000 bales, and an advance of 1-16th @ ⅛d is spoken of, though the quotations are about the same as before. Breadstuffs were dull and Consols had declined ⅛ @ ¼ cent, being quoted at 97¼ @ 97⅜.

Saturday passed with but limited operations in our market, the sales being confined to about 4500 bales, in various small parcels. On Monday the sales were again confined to about the same. Yesterday there was a still more limited attendance of buyers, and the sales barely reached 3500 bales; making a total for the three days of 12,500 bales. Considering the unusually large stock on sale for the period of the season the amount of business and the character of the demand are scarcely sufficient to constitute a market, and such irregularity prevails in prices that our quotations are little more than nominal at the moment, buyers having the advantage in most instances, and occasional sales being made below inside figures.

COTTON—Arrived since 21st instant, of Louisiana and Mississippi 4297 bales, Tennessee and North Alabama 3394, Arkansas 209, Mobile 163, Florida 107, Texas 641; together 8811 bales. Cleared since the same date, 39,199 bales. Stock in presses and on shipboard not cleared on the 25th inst. 234,757 bales.

The receipts at this port since 1st September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida, and Texas) are 1,507,906 bales, against 1,428,683 bales to same date last year; and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year is 56,842 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase to Great Britain of 192,313 bales, and a decrease to France of 16,920 bales, and to other foreign ports of 54,902 bales.

SUGAR—Louisiana—The three days sales sum up 1000 hhds, at rates within the following quotations:

Inferior and Refining	3½ @ 4
Common to Good Common	4¼ @ 5
Fair to Fully Fair	5⅜ @ 6¾
Prime	6¾ @ 7
Choice	7⅛ @ 8
Centrifugal and Clarified	6 @ 6½

Arrived since the 21st 736 hhds 97 tierces and bbls—cleared 11 hhds 88 bbls.

MOLASSES—The market has been heavy at a further decline of about 1 cent ₱ gallon since last report. The sales of the three days barely amount to 1200 bbls, the range of prices being about as follows: Inferior and Fermenting to Good 24 @ 27, Prime to Choice 28 @ 30c in bbls; half-barrels 31 @ 32c ₱ gallon for Fermenting to Choice. Refinery rebolled 30 @ 31c in bbls. and 32 @ 34 in half-barrels. Arrived since the 21st 1201 bbls—cleared 164 bbls.

MONETARY AND FINANCIAL.

The Picayune of yesterday morning says:

The market to-day has again presented a quiet appearance. At an early hour the Africa's accounts from Europe to the 15th inst. were reported, with intelligence of an unchanged Cotton market in Liverpool, and week's sales of 57,000 bales, including 12,000 on speculation and 4000 for export. At Havre the week's business had been large amounting to 16,000 bales. Trade in the manufacturing districts is represented as satisfactory, and spinners were profitably employed. This, coupled with the steadiness of prices, is an essentially good feature, and furnishes the assurance that consumption is likely to progress on the same enormous scale as at present.

Our own market was not influenced by the news. It continues tame and spiritless. Still, the amount daily taken off is considerable, and the stock will soon show a heavy reduction.

Money matters progress as before noticed. There is an active demand for prime paper, especially for that maturing in fall, but the supply is inadequate. Some long dated signatures were passed at 10. Names due in October are taken at 8, in November at 8½ @ 9, and in December at 9 @ 9½.

The transactions in Stocks are very meagre, and none of any moment have come to our notice.

MADNESS, IDIOCY, CONVULSIONS, and a long train of other horrible diseases are the frequent consequences of permitting worms to generate and multiply, without check in the intestines and stomach. Such neglect is as inexcusable as it is dangerous; inasmuch as Winer's Canadian Vermifuge, without confinement to the house or trouble to the sufferer, will cure the disease in a few days, and at the same time improve the condition of the digestive organs, purify the blood, and regulate all the secretions.

Be particular and remember the name "Winer's Canadian Vermifuge." This is the only article that can be depended on. Remember this. For sale by

J. WRIGHT & CO., 21 and 151 Charles st.

The Wonderful Success of Dr. Hostetter's Celebrated and unrivalled STOMACH BITTERS, from the time of its introduction to the public, proves conclusively its manifest superiority over any other preparation of the kind now manufactured. Its action on the digestive organs is of the most pleasing character; removing all diseases or morbidity, and giving the system a sound and healthy tone in cases of Dyspepsia, loss of appetite, general mental or physical debility, Nightsweats, Fevers, Dryness of the Skin, or in the Eyes, Pimples or Blotches in the face, Inflammation of the Blood, Melancholy or Depression of Spirits, Diseases arising from the use of Mercury, Fever and Ague, Dysentery, Bloody Flux, Constipation of the bowels, Diseases arising from the use of Mercury, Pain in the Bones, Debility, Nervousness, Gravel, Impure Blood, Female Complaints, Cholic, Gout, Liver Complaint, and Fever and Ague of the Liver. It will also cure diseases of the Bladder and Kidneys, Incontinence of Urine, Stranguary, Diabetes, and Weakness of the Womb or Bladder, &c.

THERE IS NO MEDICINE

This Cordial will never fail to cure any of the above diseases when taken as per directions on each bottle, in any climate.

OVER HALF A MILLION OF BOTTLES

have been sold during the last six months, and in no instance has it failed in giving entire satisfaction. Who, then, will suffer from Piles, Loss or debility when McLean's Strengthening Cordial will cure you?

TO THE LADIES.

Do you wish to be healthy and strong? If so, use McLean's Strengthening Cordial. It will strengthen and invigorate your whole system, causing a healthy and pure circulation of blood through every nerve, vein, and the rich, rosy bloom of health to mount to your cheeks.

EVERY BOTTLE IS WARRANTED to give satisfaction, or money refunded.

FOR CHILDREN.

We say to parents, if your children are sickly, puny, or troubled with complaints prevalent among children, give them a small dose of McLean's Cordial, and it will make them healthy, fat and rosy. Delay not a moment. Try it and you will be convinced.

IT IS DELICIOUS TO TAKE.

EVERY COUNTRY MERCHANT

should not leave the city until he has procured a supply of McLean's Strengthening Cordial. It sells rapidly, because it is good, and a liberal discount will be made to those who buy to sell again.

CAUTION—Beware of druggists or dealers who may try to palm upon you some Bitter or Sarsaparilla trash, which they may recommend as saying it is just as good. Avoid such men. Ask for McLean's Strengthening Cordial, and take nothing else. It is the only one that will purify the blood thoroughly, and at the same time strengthen the system.

One table spoonful taken every morning fasting is a sure preventive for Cholera, Chills and Fever, Yellow Fever, and every other infectious disease.

Price only $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5.

"DON-T FORGET."

"Don't forget to have Gertie say her prayers, Nellie?"

"No, mother," said Nellie; and taking her youngest sister by the hand, she led her away to her little room to assist her in retiring for the night. I watched them as they closed the door; and it seemed to me that I would give almost anything if I could go along with them. I thought I would like to see little Gertie, who was scarcely four years of age, as she kneeled by her bedside, at her Savior's feet, and repeated before him her evening prayer. Such a little child talking with her blessed Savior would to me have been a scene of the very deepest interest.

There were many things connected with this circumstance which enlisted my attention.

The mother's solicitude. It was not a matter of indifference with her whether or not her child should say her prayers; but she enjoined upon her elder sister not to forget it. She seemed to shrink from allowing even one so young to go to rest without first committing herself to the guardianship of her Savior. That might have been the last sleep her darling daughter should take upon earth; but, if so—if at midnight Gertie should have been called away from her earthly home—how would that mother have rejoiced in the thought that she went to sleep with her infant prayer upon her lips! And with what comfort could she have believed that another angel—her own Gertrude—was added to the great number who throng the plains of Paradise!

But Gertie's age also interested me. Such a little child going in prayer to her Savior! And yet was she too young to pray? I know she was not too young to die: but could she say anything that would reach the Savior's ear? May even little children cherish hopes of heaven? Ah, yes! Jesus loved just such, and he has declared that of them, 'is the kingdom of heaven.' And he is no more regardful of the kings and princes of the earth than of the smallest children in the Sunday-school.

But I had other thoughts than these. I thought how many mothers there are—many of them professed Christians, too—who never teach their children to pray, and who even dare to let them close their eyes in sleep without first committing them to a Savior's love. I thought also, how many children there are scattered all over our country who have no pious parents to warn them from sin and teach them the path to heaven. But, my young readers, let me say to each of you, "Don't forget to pray."

"Don't forget," although you have no pious parent to kneel with you before the throne of grace

"Don't forget," although you have no elder sister to join with you at your bedside in your evening prayer, as Gertrude had.

"Don't forget," for your Savior is watching you with a great deal of interest from that bright and happy land where hereafter there will be a great and joyful meeting of all who love the Lord below.

"Little children will be there,
Who have sought the Lord in prayer,
From every Sabbath-school."

HOW MANY MERCIES IN A YEAR.

I have read of a little boy, very clever at figures, who heard so much about the goodness of God, that he thought he would try to reckon up how many mercies God had given him in that one year. So he took his slate and pencil, and began to set them down.

"Let me see, 365 days 365 mercies. No; surely every hour has been a mercy, by day and by night; that then makes 8769. But I think I should count the minutes—the moments; for God is always doing me good. How many moments are in a year? What a vast number! But let me count the greater mercies. There are my dear parents who have been spared to me all the year, two marks for this; health preserved, another; food, another; clothing, another; teachers, books, cheerful companions, and merry play, more still; the Bible! a broad mark for that; Sabbaths, fifty-two. O dear! I cannot reckon; my slate is becoming too full of figures and marks, and yet I keep thinking of more mercies. I must give it up."

And this was just what King David himself was obliged to do. I do not know what he tried to reckon in a way like the little boy's, the thought of God's love to him. But I do know that he felt the task too hard for him; for here, in the 139th Psalm, are the words, "If I should count them, they are more in number than the sand."

Think of them, dear children, more and more; and pray, not only that God's mercies may still come, but that you may be always mindful and thankful, and never forget the Giver while you receive the gift.—Union Mag.

THE MOTHER.

Despise not thy mother when she is old.—
Age may wear and waste a mother's beauty, strength, limbs, senses, and estates; but her relation as a mother is as the sun when he goes forth in his might—it is always in the meridian and knoweth no evening. The person may be gray headed, but her motherly relation is ever in its flourish. It may be autumn—yea, winter with a woman, but with the mother, as a mother, it is always spring. Alas! how little do we appreciate a mother's tenderness while living. How heedless are we in youth of all her anxieties and kindness! But when she is dead and gone—when the cares and the coldness of the world come withering to our heart —when we experience how hard it is to find true sympathy—how few love us for ourselves
—how few will befriend us in misfortune—then it is that we think of the mother we have lost.

A THOUSAND PRAYERS.

"Who ever offered so many?" You have, during the last year, if you have kept the resolution of the Psalmist: "Evening and morning, and at noon will I pray." A thousand prayers! Have they all been answered? Were they all "the effectual fervent prayer of the righteous," which avails? What reason have you to praise God, who enabled you to offer them?

Has your heart not been right with God, so that in these there has been only the form of prayer?

Perhaps a parent, child, or friend has prayed so many times for you. Will you resist the Spirit of God, and sink unsanctified under the weight of so many prayers?

THE GREATEST
Medical Discovery
OF THE AGE.
MR. KENNEDY, of Roxbury, has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures
EVERY KIND OF HUMOR,
From the worst Scrofula down to a Common Pimple.
He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases, both thunder humor. He has now in his possession over one hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.
Two bottles are warranted to cure a ouralgo sore mouth.
One to three bottles will cure the worst kind of pimples on the face.
Two or three bottles will clear the system of biles.
Two bottles are warranted to cure the worst canker in the mouth and stomach.
Three to five bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Erysipelas.
One or two bottles are warranted to cure all humor in the eyes.
Two bottles are warranted to cure running of the ears and blotches among the hair.
Four to six bottles are warranted to cure corns and running ulcers. One bottle will cure scaly eruptions of the skin.
Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of ringworm.
Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the most desperate case of rheumatism.
Three to four bottles are warranted to cure the rheum.
Five to eight bottles will cure the worst case of scrofula.
A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the above quantity is taken.
Nothing looks so improbable to those who have in vain tried all the wonderful medicines of the day, as that a common weed growing on the pastures, and along old stone walls, should cure every humor in the system; yet it is a GOD fact. If you have a humor, it has to start. There are no IFS nor ANDS, humor has about reached some cases, but not yours. I peddled over a thousand bottles of it in the vicinity of Boston. I know the effects of it in every case. It has already done some of the greatest cures ever done in Massachusetts. I give it to children a year old, to old people of sixty. I have seen poor, puny, weary-looking children, whose flesh was soft and flabby, restored to a perfect state of health by one bottle.
To those who are subject to a sick head ache, one bottle will always cure it. It gives great relief in catarrh and dizziness. Some who have taken it had been costive for years, and have been regulated by it. Where the body is found it works quite easy, but where there is any derangement of the functions of nature, it will cause very singular feelings, but you must not be alarmed; they always disappear in from four days to a week. There is never a bad result from it; on the contrary, when that feeling is gone you will feel yourself like a new person. I heard some of the most extravagant encomiums of it that ever man listened to.

The proprietor, in calling the attention of the public to this preparation, does so with a feeling of the utmost confidence in its virtues and adaptation to the diseases for which it is recommended.
It is no new and untried article, but one that has stood the test of a ten years' trial before the American people, and its reputation and sale is unrivalled by any similar preparations extant. The testimony in its favor given by the most prominent and well-known Physicians and individuals in all parts of the country is unoonsing, and a careful perusal of the Almanac, published annually by the proprietor, and to be had gratis of any of his Agents, cannot but satisfy the most skeptical that this remedy is really deserving the great celebrity it has obtained.

MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT.
Its wonderful effects and consequent popularity—perhaps no article in the history of the Materia Medica ever acquired the same patronage, was subjected to the same number of severe and different tests, and met with so few failures as the Mustang Liniment. It has justly been styled a Panacea for all external Wounds, Cuts, Swellings, Eruptions, Sprains, or Bruises on man or beast. It is so far a medicine of surprising virtue, that physicians are compelled to prescribe it; and from some remarkable cures of chronic and distorted Rheumatic cases it has naturally attracted much attention from the first sclentific minds of the age. No family can afford to be without a bottle of the Mustang Liniment in the house. Beware of imitations.
The genuine is sold by respectable dealers in all parts of the world.

HUNTSVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE,
HUNTSVILLE, ALA.
THE latter half of the scholastic year of this Institution will begin January 26, 1855. The spacious, buildings, elegant organization, the superior Faculty, and the extraordinary facilities of an accomplished collegiate education, recommend this Institution to the consideration of every parent. The French Language is taught by Parisians, and taught possibly more thoroughly than any where else outside of a native French family. This is a regular Boarding School of the highest order. Besides, Huntsville, as a location for a Female School, in point of beauty and healthfulness, has no equal in the South. I would refer to my patrons in Louisiana: Gen. B. M. Lown, of the firm of Lowe, McReynolds & Co., New Orleans; W. W. Walker, Esq., Mound Bayou, Tensas, parish; E. Millon, Esq. and Rev. Mr. White, Waterproof; also, to the Editor of this paper. G. M. LETTER FROM CHINA.

SHANGHAI, March 3, 1858.

DEAR BRO. McTYEIRE: Time flies and waits for none. Before I am well aware of it the period for my monthly communication is at hand. In health and strength I am again permitted by God to write you. I hope you are not wearied by my brief communications; for it is at all times pleasant and refreshing to me to tell what the Lord is doing in those ends of the earth. The Lord is a jealous God and will, in his own good pleasure, avenge his enemies and regard the earnest petitions of all his people in every land. May we in these times, full of commotion, do as did the apostles, pray the Lord to "increase our faith," that we may come out as gold tried in the fire. And when the Son of Man shall come to raise the dead and to judge the world, may those ransomed by the blood of Jesus, come forth rejoicing, "bringing sheaves" with them, and enter into the rest which the Lord has in store for all who love him and are faithful to the end.

We are still greatly encouraged in our work of labor and love. Many seem to be awakened, but the prejudices of others against all "barbarians" and their religion, is so great and universal, they are thereby prevented, in a great degree, from acknowledging their convictions of the truth. The Chinese are not lovers of the truth, and whatever has a tendency to dispell that darkness by which they are surrounded, they repel as injurious to their best intrests. They love darkness rather than light; but God is able to open their eyes, that they may behold wondrous things out of His law. Let the Church not be discouraged because God does not seem to answer their prayers. Their many petitions are not lost. They have all gone up before God, and when we are least expecting it, He will send back tha ship richly laden, and because of their delay they will be more heavily laden, far surpassing our expectations. And may I not say, in full confidence, that the shower is beginning to fall. Our cry has been, Lord revive thy work in China, the "valley of dry bones;" and lo! He has given us our heart's desire. The refuge of the power of darkness is no longer one of security from "the word of God, which is quick and powerful and sharper than any two edged sword." Light is springing up and gradually dispelling that gross darkness which has enveloped the minds of one-third of the whole world for so many ages. But, according to the correspondent of the London Times, the preaching of the gospel of the Savior we so much love will never elevate the Chinese from their degraded condition, but they must first be taaght the arts and sciences. And according to his views, there are but two men in China who are doing the will of God. May God convert the man and make him a Christian.

Canton is now in the hands of the English and French. The viceroy Yeh is now a prisoner of war and is on his way to Calcutta for safe keeping. I send you the face of Yeh as it is, taken by a Chinaman. He does not seem humbled, from all the intelligence we get. He has made his boast of having slain during the last year one hundred thousand men; that is, cut off the heads of that number. Our American men-of-war have gone over to Manila to settle some affair of three years standing. The American Commissioner, Reed, will return from there to Shanghai. He is now in Canton. Last week there came from Canton an embassy of the three treaty powers and Russia to Shanghai, and after remaining a few days, they proceeded in company with the Consuls of this place to Suchow, where they wished to have an interview with the viceroy of this province in order to send a communication through him to the Emperor. The presiding Mandarin of Shanghai being absent, when the representatives of these powers left Shanghai, he returned on the day of their departure and endeavored, by another way, to intercept them and prevent them from going to Suchow, but could not, and when in the neighborhood of the above city, they were requested to remain at a certain village, where the Mandarin would see them, but they refused to see him in no place but in his office. The water gate was shut against them and the American and French Consuls being in advance of the English, the door was lifted off its hinges and they forced to the office of the Mandarin, where they had an interview with him. The result was that the communication would be sent forthwith to the Emperor. The Emperor has heard of the taking of Canton by the English and seems greatly astonished that Yeh would permit the "barbarians" to come into the "city of the Rams." But contrary to the expectations of every one, instead of making preparation for defending their city from any attack, they were spending the whole time in burning incense and making supplication to their wooden gods for assistance.

Such are the poor, benighted creatures to whom we have to preach the gospel of our Savior. Do they not need the pity and prayers of every child of God? And should it not urge us to greater diligence to extend the gospel to them, that their ignorance of our Savior and their Savior may not be laid at our door? Ah! and at our very door we have them who are "bought with a price," but who know not the plan of salvation. And shall we withhold it from them? No, never; but may we, taught by the Spirit of God, possess a soul-inspiring, heart-consuming love to Jesus and a world lying in wickedness. May we count no sacrifice too great to extend the kingdom of our Lord and make known his redeeming love to man. My lot has been cast among this heathen people and my constant prayer is to love and be much with God, and that I may at all times have the indwelling of his Holy Spirit. Will the Church remember and hold me up before God in all their petitions, and may "Him who is fairer than the children of men" ever be our intimate companion. How much we need the grace of God, that we may be cleansed from inward sin and made like unto God. May we never cease to cry after holiness of heart, until we are delivered from this body of sin and death. May we not be an ungrateful vine, that when our Savior cometh he may not find us unfraitful. I thank God that he has seen fit to put me in the ministry, for thereby I have seen my need of full and entire consecration to Him, and may He ever assist me to give myself wholly and unreservedly to Him, that I may know the corruption of my own heart. Let the whole Church pray for her Missionaries in China. Your brother in Christ,

W. LAMBUTH.

P. S. I thank you very much for your paper. It comes now quite regularly. It is generally reported within the last two days, that the Emperor of China has been killed. As to the truth of it we do not yet know, but will by next mail.

Methodist General Conference.

TENTH DAY.

WEDNESDAY, May 12.

Bishop Pierce called the Conference to order; the opening exercises being conducted by A. H. Mitchell.

The journal of yesterday was read and authenticated.

Bishop Early now assumed the chair, and announced the order of reports from committees.

NEW ORLEANS STATION.

L. M. Lee, from the Committee on the Itinerancy, submitted their report (No. 1) on the resolution from the Louisiana Conference, recommending the striking out that part of the Discipline, on page 48, which excepts the city of New Orleans from the appointing duties of the Bishop; recommending its adoption.

The report, under the rules, lies over one day.

DISTRICT APPOINTMENTS.

L. M. Lee, from the same committee, to whom was referred the subject of the formation and size of Districts and Annual Conferences, reported (No. 2) their recommendation of such a modification of sec. 5, Rule 14, on page 52 of the Discipline, as that "no District shall contain more than twelve (instead of fourteen appointments."

The report lies over one day.

MINISTERIAL APPOINTMENTS.

L. M. Lee, from the same committee, to whom had been referred a resolution of inquiry into the propriety of changing the Discipline regarding the limitation and restriction of the Episcopal power of appointment, submitted their report, (No. 3,) embracing a preamble and resolution to the effect that since, by the common law of the Church, the Presiding Elders are regarded as the Advisory Council of the Bishops, and since the Bishops recognize that relation in their late Pastoral Address, it is the judgment of the committee that there is no necessity for any change of the Discipline (on page 47) with reference to the appointment of ministers.

H. A. C. Walker moved a suspension of the rules and the adoption of this report now.

L. M. Lee stated the purport of the amendment of the Discipline which the committee had reported against. In the second answer to the third question, on page 47 of the Discipline, are these words: "To fix the appointments of the preachers for the several Circuits; provided," etc. The amendment was to add, after the word "Circuits," these words: "Stations, Missions and Districts, by and with the advice and consent of the Elders of the Conference."

F. G. FERGUSON—I would be perfectly willing for this, in common with all the reports, to lie over one day, and come up in the regular order of business; but, as it is the purpose of Conference that it shall come up now, I suppose we may be indulged with looking briefly into its merits. For twenty-eight years and better, I have given practical evidence of all due loyalty to the powers that be. I glory, sir, in the well-understood machinery of our Church—the Episcopal prerogatives, the self-sacrificing itinerancy, and all that. But the time may come when such a law as that proposed here to be rejected may be necessary to the protection of what we call the inalienable rights of the Church. The reason of the committee for giving it the go-by seems to be, that, in their opinion, there is nothing in it. Still, the same committee reports a restriction on the Episcopal authority as to the number of appointments in a District, etc. But they say, the Presiding Elders are the advisory council of the Bishops, by the common law of the Church. If this be true, I grant that there is no use for the proposed law. But then the binding force of the common law might be denied. Can there be any harm in affirming in our Discipline what you have said here by way of a common law reference? I wish the Conference to look at this question without reference to men. The very best men sometimes err; and, to restrain ourselves from errors, we should have laws.

L. M. Lee explained the views and objects of the Committee. There were two parts in the resolution referred. The first was to add the words "Stations, Missions and Districts." The term "Circuit," as already in the Discipline, the Committee are of opinion, carries along with it all the idea of "Station, Mission," etc., and consequently they did not think it worth while that they should be added. The second part of the resolution was not simply to constitute the Presiding Elders an advisory council of the Bishops, as they are now recognized by the common law of Methodism, and by the Bishops themselves, in their late Pastoral Address; but it proposed to go beyond that, and to insert a law in the Discipline that would effectually tie up the hands of the Episcopacy with reference to every appointment, unless it be made with the advice and consent of the Presiding Elders. The committee did not think proper to bind the Episcopacy in such a manner, but preferred to leave the appointing power where it has always reposed—in the hands of the Bishops; believing that, under the common law of the Church as to this matter, the Bishops do and will advise with the Presiding Elders.

E. E. Wiley moved to lay the matter on the table, which was lost.

W. J. Sasnett moved an indefinite postponement.

W. A. Smith asked if the question was debatable, and said he was opposed to postponement.

Mr. SASNETT—If the motion is to be debated, I withdraw it.

Dr. SMITH—Then the motion is on the adoption of the report. The object of the resolution on which the committee has reported is evidently to put us in a position in which we may not suffer from the errors of the administration. The movers in this matter propose that the administration shall be controlled by the Presiding Elders, as a safe remedy against the evils apprehended. Is this the safe effectual remedy? Will this afford us ready relief? I say not. The relief which we have sought is to be found only in the direct responsibility of the appointing power to the General Conference. We want to provide against injury, not from the legal decisions of the Bishop, but from the party influences and personal considerations which may betray him into an abuse of the appointing power. Your present system is to make the episcopacy directly responsible to this body for the moral aspects and influence of their authority—for the exercise or abuse of their power. Vote down that resolution, and what remedy have you? An injury is done to some good brother in his appointment; can you hold the Presiding Elders accountable? The Presiding Elders are an irresponsible body. Instead of guarding against abuses, this measure throws the door wide open to abuses. I prefer to stand where we have stood from the days of our forefathers, holding the Bishops directly and immediately responsible to the General Conference for the manner of their administration. That is your remedy, your only safe remedy—not in passing a law that an irresponsible body shall control the Bishop.

Bishop Soule desired to hear again what the Bishops said in their Address as to their constitutional advisers.

L. M. Lee read the portion of the Bishops' Address referred to.

H. A. C. Walker moved that the question be now put.

J. B. McFerrin hoped that motion would be withdrawn. He wanted to propose an amendment.

It was withdrawn.

J. B. McFerrin proposed to amend by substituting the words, "common usage," for the words, "common law of the Church."

L. M. Lee said he would accept the amendment, provided none of the committee objected. The committee unanimously assented.

The reading of the whole report was now called for, and it was read.

J. B. McFERRIN—I like the tone and sentiment of my reverend friend from Virginia. If I did not think a large majority would vote for the report as now amended, I should be tempted to make a speech. I do not deem it necessary. I believe we are ready to adopt it unanimously.

The vote being taken, the report was adopted.

BOUNDARIES.

L. Pearce presented Report (No. 6) from the Committee on Boundaries, recommending that the Indian Mission Conference remain undivided, which was adopted.

Also Report (No. 7) recommending that Mount Washington, in Kentucky, be put down as included in the Louisville Conference, which lies on the table under the rule.

VOTE ON THE ALABAMA RESOLUTION.

T. W. Dorman presented Report (No. 1) from the Committee to ascertain the vote of the Annual Conferences on the Alabama and Holston Resolutions, to expunge the general rule on "the buying and selling of men, women, and children, with the intention to enslave them." The vote stands as follows:

	Concurring.	Not Con'g.		Con'g.	Not Con.
Holston	78	4	St. Louis	17	42
Texas	72	0	Tennessee	15	87
Virginia	116	0	Louisiana	48	0
Florida	59	0	W. Virginia	22	12
Missouri	1	46	Alabama	115	0
S. Carolina	94	0	East Texas	53	0
Memphis	64	12	Arkansas	17	16
Mississippi	79	7	Wachita	28	0
Louisville	14	15	Pacific—no action.
Georgia	135	0	Kansas Mission—no action.
Kentuky	18	43	Indian Mission—no action.

Whole number of votes concurring, 1160; being sixty votes over the constitutional majority.

The Chair announced that the report would lie on the table one day, under the rule.

T. W. Dorman moved that it be made the order of the day for to-morrow, at 10 o'clock.

It was announced that E. Hearne, reserve, would take the seat of O. R. Blue till his return.

REVISAL OF DISCIPLINE.

A. L. P. Green presented Report No. 2 of the Committee on Revisals, containing a great number of items, recommending the adoption of sundry proposed amendments of the Discipline, and the rejection of many others.

J. E. Evans moved to lay the subject on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

HYMN AND TUNE-BOOK.

B. M. Drake presented a memorial from the Quarterly Conference of the Vicksburg Station, on the subject of publishing a Hymn and Tune-book similar to the one published at the North, and asked that, without reading, it be referred to the Committee on Books and Periodicals.

It was so referred.

DANVILLE DISTRICT, N. C.

G. E. Carter presented a petition signed by S. H. Turner, similar to those already presented, for the transfer of the Danville District of the North Carolina Conference to the Virginia Conference; which was received without reading, and referred to the Committee on Boundaries.

RETAILING ARDENT SPIRITS.

E. Wadsworth presented a petition from the Quarterly Conference at Selma, Alabama, praying some action on the part of this body to prevent the retailing of ardent spirits by members of the Methodist Church, and asked that it be referred to the Committee on Temperance.

It was so referred.

THE MEMPHIS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

A. R. Winfield presented the report of the Agents of the Memphis, Arkansas, and Wachita Christian Advocate, giving a statement of assets, liabilities, etc., showing that the paper is handsomely paying its way, out of debt, and well-appointed and prepared to do its duty to the world; and recommending the continuance of its editorial management in the hands of Dr. Watson.

On motion of A. Hunter, the report was referred to the Committee on Books and Periodicals.

DENOMINATIONAL EDUCATION.

M. M. Henkle presented a paper, signed by himself, in behalf of the Educational Institute, requesting the General Conference to instruct its Committee on Education to inquire into the propriety of establishing primary schools, for the elementary instruction of the children of our country; which was read, and, on his motion, was referred to the Committee on Education.

W. J. Sasnett, in this connection, presented the following memorial from the Educational Institute on the subject of common-school education by the Church:

WHEREAS, There is a remarkable adaptation in the successive governmental bodies of the Methodist Church to that number and succession of educational agencies necessary to make up a complete and properly adjusted educational system—the General Conference being precisely adapted to the proper institution and government of the University system, the Annual Conferences to the College and High-school system, and the Quarterly Conferences to the Academy or Common-school system; and whereas, steps have already been taken to develop these two higher classes of educational establishments under the control of these two higher ecclesiastical bodies respectively, and it only remains, in order that the system may be made complete, and the subjection of education to the control of the Church entire, that the primary or common-school education of the country should be subject to the management of the Quarterly Conferences; therefore,

Resolved, That we memorialize the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, now in session, to take such action as will enable the Quarterly Conferences to assume the management of primary or common-school education, adopting the following provisions as necessary to realize this object:

1. That each Quarterly Conference consider itself an educational union, charged with the duty of seeing to it that the entire community within its territorial limits is provided with the necessary school facilities.

2. That the members of each Quarterly Conference shall themselves, or by committee, constitute agents, whose duty it shall be, in co-operation with or under the general direction of the preachers, to visit the various destitute neighborhoods, and interest the people in the formation of schools; to seek out teachers for them, furnish advice as to details in respect of suitable sites for school-houses, and for combination and concert; and in every prudent way, under the guidance of Christian benevolence, point out the way and provide the necessary facilities by which they, in the use of their own resources, may establish for themselves such schools as are suitable to their circumstances and wants.

3. That it shall provide, where the circumstances of the circuit or station will justify it, by regular collections, a fund to be used in defraying the salaries of teachers in those neighborhoods which require assistance.

4. That, to awaken interest and stimulate exertion, the Quarterly Conferences may appoint, annually or semi-annually, visitors to these various schools, especially on occasion of their examinations, to allow countenance, and, if deemed proper, to address the people on the claims of education. They may appoint annual celebrations to be held at eligible places, in which all the schools within their respective jurisdictions, either in mass or by representatives, shall be embraced, at which exercises shall be had suitable to the enlistment of the people in the cause of education.

5. That the preachers in charge be requested to preach upon the subject of education, and all their appointments, and use their efforts to enlist the people in this enterprise, and that the presiding elders see that this subject engage the attention of every Quarterly Conference at every one of its regular sessions.

W. J. SASNETT—We propose in this to institute a common school institution. It has been objected to the theory of education by the Church that it is inadequate to meet all the requirements of an educational system; that while it is competent for the Church to provide for college and university education, it is not competent for it to make adequate provision for primary or common school education. We propose a scheme obviating this objection, and demonstrating the practicability of primary denominational education. We do not expect the plan to be adopted at first in all the Quarterly Conferences, but we think there are some places where it will be adopted readily, and that the system will recommend and extend itself.

The object is for the Church to take a new step in this matter. That while heretofore it has been employing itself only in the department of higher education, it should now begin the work of providing for the lower department likewise. The continued success of our higher schools demands this. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Education.

It was so referred.

ANNUAL CONFERENCE MISSIONARIES.

T. W. Dorman submitted a resolution that the Committee on Missions inquire into the expediency of providing a rule whereby each Annual Conference, if necessary, may have a Conference Missionary, who shall travel through the bounds of the Conference, assisting feeble churches, and aiding the cause of Missions. He said: We need something of the kind ourselves, in our Conference. Our missions to the blacks require it. Under such a rule as this we could accomplish much more than we can now. I propose to refer the resolution to the Committee on Missions.

It was so referred.

BOOK AGENTS.

F. E. Pitts submitted the following:

Resolved, That the Committee on Books and Periodicals be instructed to consider and report on the policy of employing experienced business men to take charge of our publishing interests from amongst the laymen.

He said: I desire this resolution to be sent to the Committee, and to state that no man has a higher appreciation of the ability of our present worthy Agents than I have. I have no unkind reflection, none but what is honorable and approving, in reference to Dr. Stevenson and Dr. Owen; but I wish the question of the policy of employing Agents from among laymen to be fully canvassed.

The resolution was adopted and referred accordingly.

SECURITIES OF THE PUBLISHING HOUSE.

E. C. Slater moved the Conference to take up the consideration of Report No. 3 from the Committee on Books and Periodicals, with reference to the securities of the Publishing House.

The motion was agreed to, and the report was read again by the Secretary.

E. C. SLATER—I desire to submit a resolution bearing upon this subject, which is designed to supply a deficiency in the report. The report should have contained a feasible plan for the better security of this property. I submit the following:

Resolved, In view of the unprotected condition of a portion of the Publishing House buildings, thereby endangering the whole, that the Book Agents and Committee be empowered and required to invest, as soon as practicable, a sum not exceeding —— thousand dollars, in such improvements as may be necessary for the security of the Publishing House buildings.

This resolution was signed also by M. J. Blackwell.

C. K. Marshall thought it would not be amiss to give some direction as to the manner of proceeding in this matter, for many things might be done involving great expense. Four years ago, at Columbus, when the proposition was pending to locate the Publishing House here, he remembered that, amongst other things, it was proposed to supply water here gratuitously, so that by turning a single faucet a thousand streams of water could be turned on these premises, which would be an effectual protection from fire. If that pledge had been redeemed, he would naturally suppose that a policy of insurance could be obtained on very reasonable terms. Since we had been pledged $70,000 and the free use of water, it would be ungenerous in us to allow this occasion to pass over without a suitable vote of thanks. But, in fact, when he first looked at that Southern Publishing House and Book Concern, it reminded him of a forsaken Quaker meeting-house that had left home on a Western expedition in pursuit of manifest destiny, and had been arrested in the city of Nashville on a telegraphic writ. He should never have taken that exterior, for the great Southern Publishing House. But still, he would not be numbered amongst those despising the day of small things; therefore he hoped the resolution would pass, after being so amended as to give some direction as to the manner in which this money should be expended. A tin roof and cast-iron doors would perhaps be a sufficient improvement for the security desired.

J. B. McFerrin, after a pleasant response, in kind, to C. K. Marshall's notice of the appearance of the Publishing House, etc., said: It is true, the House makes a bad show in front, but the rear buildings would compare favorably with those of any Publishing House in the United States. Good judges, and business men in this line, have been here from New York, Boston, New Orleans, Vicksburg, and elsewhere; and, after passing through this establishment, they have pronounced it altogether superior in its appointments to any Publishing House in the United States. From its position with reference to other buildings, it is perhaps more free from exposure to fire than it could be in any other location. All the boiler-fires are outside of the main building. All the rear buildings are new, and covered with tin. The greatest mistake in their construction was, that they did not put iron frames into the windows next the hotel. Still, I think myself it is in danger of fire, and that this ought to be remedied. We have frequently debated the question of pulling down and rebuilding certain portions; but the General Conference restricted us to $75,000 for grounds and buildings, and we lacked the means. At the proper time, sir, I shall have a good deal to say to the Conference about their interests in Nashville, about outside influences, expenditures, and liabilities that have hindered and hampered us. With reference to the pledges for the location of the Publishing House in Nashville, alleged to have been given at the last General Conference, at Columbus, I can say but little. I was not there, and know little about it. I make no speech and cast no vote in Conference for Nashville, though I should most certainly have done both if I had been there. I heard of no pledge. I did hear of a memorial asking for the location here. That memorial proposed no amount of money by way of donation—not a single dollar. But it did say, that if Conference should see proper to locate the Publishing House in Nashville, the signers would do clever things; but no amount of money was specified. There was in the memorial an offer on the part of the corporate authorities of the city of Nashville to free the institution from city or corporation tax. They have redeemed that pledge, and it deserves to be regarded as a very handsome compliment to the Church; for in these times of extravagant expenditures for public works of improvement, our taxes are enormous.—There was an impression also that water was to be furnished the institution free of charge, but the Common Council did not so understand it. Still, they exempted the establishment from the water-tax one year—since that time they have it to pay. In regard to the Nashville contribution, it is proper, perhaps, to say further, that when the last General Conference adjourned and the location was made, a number of citizens of Nashville, not members of the Church, called a public meeting and got up a subscription as a kind of thank-offering for what the Conference had done. At that meeting the subject was set forth by several speakers, and a contribution of something over $20,000 was put upon paper, subject to the call of the Agents. A large proportion of this has been paid. A part of it was subscribed on the condition that the Agents should build a handsome front.—This is the whole matter, I believe. With regard to the report, the Committee merely presented the facts, and in so doing considered that they fulfilled their whole duty to the Conference.

C. K. MARSHALL—Is there enough of the unpaid subscription still collectable to do what is contemplated in the resolution—render the buildings fire-proof? Is there enough to put up the front?

J. B. McFERRIN—I do not think there is sufficient to put up the front. The subscription has been very well paid. The amount subscribed conditionally is reserved, and will not be paid unless we build a new front, and we have not now enough to do that.

The CHAIR (to E. C. Slater)—How do you propose to apply the resolution?

E. C. SLATER—As an amendment to the report of the committee.

A. L. P. Green, responding to G. W. D. Harris said: There was no specific pledge made at the General Conference by any delegate from Tennessee, but a pledge was embraced in a communication sent to the Conference by the people of Nashville. It ran thus: "We will do as much for the Book Concern, if located in Nashville, as any other city will do for any other location." I never named a specific sum, nor heard any other Tennesseean name one. I think, also, that we have done as much as any other city would have done; and if you will put me to the proof, I will show it.

G. W. D. HARRIS—I did not say Dr. Green pledged $75,000; but I said Memphis would, and Dr. Green said Nashville would do as much.

W. A. Smith, amongst other things, said: I was not satisfied with the manner of debating this question four years ago, and I am not now. We want facts. Nothing short of facts will satisfy the Conference in its efforts to push forward this great work. Amusing speeches for the Book Concern, or against the Book Concern, may do very well for the moment; but it is altogether too grave a subject to be passed off in this way. I look upon it as the duty of the committee to satisfy this Conference that the location of this Book Concern was wisely made; that it promises to be successful to such a degree as to justify every part of the Southern Church is rallying around it. The ground was taken four years ago, and the same ground is occupied now; that no place will do for a Publishing House of this kind but a great commercial centre; and it was urged on that occasion that Nashville was such a centre. Let them now look to the facts. Many are of opinion that Nashville is not a great commercial centre, and never can be. I affirm nothing now myself; but I want the committee to investigate the subject, and furnish such facts as may satisfy us, so that we may go out and unite the Church in this great work; and they must give me that satisfaction before I can vote away one dollar of the public money here. If it be true that Nashville is not a great commercial centre, it is no place for this Book Concern. How are exchanges here? Are they in favor of or against Nashville? That is one great question. What are your facilities here for sending out books? I am told that the port of shipping for Nashville is a village twelve miles below the mouth of this Cumberland river; that that village (Paducah) is the shipping-port in point of fact for Nashville by water, and that Memphis is her shipping-port by railroad. Is this so? I want information on this point; and until I can have it, I am at sea on this question. Then for the freights: I am told that it costs 3½ per cent. to get books to Charleston, and from 6 to 7½ per cent. to get books to any part of Virginia. Again, is it true that you have not facilities for manufacturing paper here? that you have to go to New York for the paper you employ in the publication of your books? Again, is it true that you cannot get the stereotyping and the daily work done here upon as favorable terms as in other cities? I do not affirm those things, but ask if they are true. These questions must be met, sir, and favorably met, before this location can be confirmed, and prosper as it ought to prosper.

J. B. McFerrin said the Committee had not yet submitted their report. There were two points to the question: 1st. Whether we should have a Publishing House or not; and 2d. If so, where it should be located.

D. R. McAnally moved that the matter lie on the table for the present.

O. K. Marshall explained. He did not wish the brethren to infer from his remarks that he entertained any idea of removing the Publishing House from Nashville. He only wanted to relieve the minds of those who desired information on the points referred to.

A. L. P. GREEN—At the General Conference four years ago, I was of the impression that the water was embraced in the grant of privilege. I was mistaken. I wish to say a word concerning the advantages gained by the present location of the concern. The house we occupy on the bluff was built for a different purpose—a sugar drinery, and intended to be filled with hogsheads of sugar. Therefore it was constructed in a very strong and substantial manner. The original cost was not less than $68,000; but it cost us no more than could have been got for the ground alone. The buildings in any Southern city would cost you $100,000; and you got that for nothing; we simply paid the cost of the ground; and the ground is now worth a hundred per cent. more than when we purchased it. Keep that in mind.—The speaker proceeded to give some account of the expenditures for improvements, etc., for which we have not room.

J. B. McFerrin was willing to see the report laid on the table for the present. We always intended to report to this body, at the proper time, the condition and prospects of the establishment. If the Conference wished to go into the investigation of all the points suggested by Dr. Smith, the committee were ready for it.

F. A. Owen did not intend to perpetrate a speech: only rose to vindicate himself and his colleague from any supposed delinquency in the protection of your interest. When we commenced, we were prepared to effect an insurance at some $25,000 or $30,000. At the end of the term, the office declined to take any further risk on the Publishing House. We could not get the property insured. We have not wilfully neglected that interest: we have done the best we could. We have kept a faithful watchman in the manufacturing part of the house; a cautious and vigilant young man lodges in the front part. We are perfectly willing you should make any inquiries; only give us time to deliberate so as to give you a proper answer. One important point should be borne in mind: locate where you will, the location will materially affect us; but the influence of the location is nothing at all in comparison with the want of sympathy, interest, and patronage.

Levi Pearce moved that the report be referred back to the committee, together with the proposed amendments; which was carried.

J. H. Linn offered the following:

Resolved, That the Committee on Books and Periodicals be and they are hereby instructed to inquire into the facilities for transportation, and all other things connected with the publication and sale of our books.

Bishop Andrew did not think this a proper subject for investigation now. It would destroy public confidence. But he would suggest an important item or two to the Conference.—The Bishops had much to do in making a distribution of the Episcopal work for the next four years. It was important that they should know, at the earliest convenient time, whether the Conference were going to give them any aid, and how much; also, the number and the boundaries of the Conferences should be settled, and the great questions pending in regard to missions; and there were certain matters which it would be necessary to settle as soon as possible, for the peace and comfort of brethren—certain elections to be made, which he hoped would be attended to at an early day.

E. M. Marvin was glad to hear the remarks of the Bishop. Four years ago he voted for another locality for the Publishing House. The Agents had labored under great embarrassment. Perhaps we had expected too much—found fault unjustly. If the publishing interests were to be disturbed every four years, as the Bishop had said, we should lose public confidence. The speaker disavowed any dissatisfaction with the management of affairs at Nashville. He believed in his heart that the Agents had done their best in the circumstances.

J. H. Linn made a similar disclaimer. Still, he said, there had been dissatisfaction, and that very general. The committee ought to make a full showing to the Conference. This was all he wanted. Then confidence would be inspired, and we should rally to the support of the Publishing House.

Levi Pearce moved to amend the resolution by striking out all that related to location; which was accepted by the mover; and the resolution, as amended, was adopted.

H. H. Montgomery proposed two resolutions calling for alterations in the Discipline; which were referred to the Committee on Revisals.

H. N. McTyeire offered the following preamble and resolution, which, at the wish of the mover, were laid on the table for the present, for consideration of the General Conference:

WHEREAS, The distribution of the General Superintendents throughout the territory of the Church is desirable; and whereas, it is important to the character and efficiency of the Episcopal office that it be filled by men chosen for their qualifications without respect to their localities; therefore,

Resolved, That the Bishop or Bishops hereafter to be chosen, shall be required to fix their domicil at such place or places as the General Conference may direct.

W. W. Bennett, W. Hicks, J. Atkins offered a resolution proposing to strike out "and want nothing," and substitute, "and attend faithfully to all their duties," in sec. 8, page 55, of Discipline; which was read and laid on the table, according to rule.

D. S. Doggett and G. W. Langhorne offered the following resolution, which was read and referred to the committee on Revisals:

Resolved, That the last clause of paragraph 6, section 3, chapter 2, of our Discipline, be either stricken out or rendered more definite in its signification.

Appointments were made, and the Conference adjourned, with benediction from the Chair.

TO AVOID SNEEZING.—It is not a superstitious notion that sneezing may be an indication of having caught a cold. The wise take it as a premonition to avoid encroaching upon a constitution at present sound; they shut every door, close every window, and even stop every crack through which the air may ooze. Sneezing is the effect of a convulsion of the diaphragm, or muscle separating the chest from the abdomen. The sudden check of the uniform condition of the respirating apparatus brings on sneezing. Therefore, by stopping or changing the cause, the effect is prevented. The air which is inhaled when a fit of sneezing is coming on, if suddenly breathed out, will effectually arrest the sneeze.—Scientific American.

DIOGENES having been asked, "What is that beast the bite of which is most dangerous?" replied, "Of wild beasts the bite of a slanderer; and of tame beasts that of the flatterer."

What we offer to God for his glory, and in token of our gratitude to him, will be made by the grace of God to turn to our own comfort and satisfaction.

Never open the door to a little vice, lest a greater one should enter.

CHURCH ITEMS.

The [illegible] annual session of the Australasian Wesleyan Methodist Conference commenced its sittings at Hobart Town Tasmania, on Thursday, the [illegible]. Fourteen candidates, having passed theological examination in the [illegible] were received into full connection with the conference. Eight young men, of decided piety, strongly recommended by the various quarterly and district meetings, were received on trial as probationers for the Christian ministry. Three other candidates, duly accredited, from England, made, in all, eleven, who were received into this conference. In connection with the missionary department of the work, two natives of the Friendly Islands were received on trial as assistant missionaries. The increase in the number of Church members in the Australian colonies is 880, and in the [illegible] 2,334. The number on trial for membership throughout the colonies is [illegible], and on the mission station, 8,222. The number of chapels belonging to the connection is [illegible], other preaching places, 683, making a total of 1,360. The regular ministers are assisted by lay agents and [illegible] to the amount of 1,897. The number attending the day and Sunday schools [illegible]. The number enrolled as Church members is 24,449, while the number of attendants at public worship exceeds 146,000.

Seventy converted Romanists have lately joined the German Methodist Church in [illegible].

The present circulation of the Christian Apologist is 8,700, and of the Sunday School Bell nearly 11,000. Both these papers are published in Cincinnati by the Western Book Concern, Dr. Nast, editor.

Rev. Geo. Coles, formerly assistant editor of the Christian Advocate and Journal for a period of [illegible] years, died in New York city Saturday last, at 1 o'clock. His end was great peace. Father Coles, says the Journal, was [illegible] in the work of the itinerancy for [illegible] thirty-two years, and at the time of his death he was [illegible] seven years of age. He was a good man and was beloved by his personal acquaintance. His health had been failing for some time, and he desired to depart and be with Christ.

President Collins writes to the N. Y. Advocate that Dickinson College will this year turn out [illegible] graduates, two of whom will, immediately on graduation, take work in the [illegible] conferences.—Western Advocate.

Methodist General Conference.

THURSDAY, May 13.

THE GERMAN MISSION.

J. Boring presented report (No. 7) of the committee on Missions, recommending the German Apologist as an efficient auxiliary to the missionary work among the Germans, and advising the following appropriation from the missionary fund for its support for the four years to come:

From May, 1858, to May, 1859			$1500
"	1859	" 1860	1200
"	1860	" 1861	1000
"	1861	" 1862	800

The amount to be paid in quarterly instalments. The report was adopted.

ELECTION OF BISHOPS.

A resolution signed A. H. Mitchell and C. D. Oliver was read, setting forth the importance of an early election of Bishops, in order to expedite the business of the Conference, and requesting the committee on Episcopacy to report on that subject as soon as possible.

INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC.

B. M. Drake submitted a resolution (signed also by J. G. Jones) making two verbal changes on the 106th page of the Discipline, and also by adding a new item, to be numbered 11, so as to prescribe that instrumental music shall not be used in public worship. He said: There is a growing tendency in our Church to congregationalism. Nobody can fail to see that many little congregations are selecting their own modes of worship. Some prefer to sit and pray; some stand and pray; some give out the hymn, and others do not; some use instrumental music, and others do not; so that it becomes difficult sometimes for a man to know how to conduct the services. I have myself even found it necessary to give out a programme—tell the people how to conduct Divine service! Now, as a connectional Church, it seems to me we ought to have uniformity. The matter of giving out a hymn, it may be said, is a small matter. But why change a time-honored custom? I have seen our venerable Superintendent more than once completely thrown out by the congregation singing on, when he was attempting to give out the hymn. These innovations are commonly made at the suggestion of choirs, many of whose members are not members of any Church, and may be positively irreligious—a sort of outside pressure, induced perhaps by a desire to conform to the usages of other Churches. This matter of change with reference to instrumental music is of more importance to me than the other propositions which I submit. Some of our smaller churches have already introduced their little melodeon or seraphine or other instrument; and I have known instrumental music to be introduced into our churches without consulting either members or preacher. Mere outsiders, who have undertaken to conduct the singing, have introduced instruments on their own account. It appears to me that the General Conference should speak out distinctly on this subject. I move that the subject lie on the table one day.

C. K. Marshall—I was going to move to amend, by adding a clause to restore the old broad-brimmed hats to the heads of all our preachers.

DRESS AND ORNAMENT.

J. Lusk called up the resolution on dress, laid on the table yesterday.

C. K. Marshall wanted to know whether it would not suit the brother to let that matter lie over, and come up hereafter in connection with the resolution of Dr. Drake about lining the hymns, instrumental music in churches, riding circuits on horseback or in wagons, etc.

The resolution in question recommends the striking out from the Discipline section 8, on page 108, entitled "Of Dress."

Under the force of the previous question, moved by E. Wadsworth, the subject was indefinitely postponed.

Bishop Soule, with reference to the foregoing, said: It is made the duty of the preachers to read the General Rules (with reference to superfluous ornaments) once a quarter in every society, and once a year in every congregation. Has this been done? and may it not be that the neglect on the part of the preachers on this important point in the instructions may have contributed in some degree to the increase in superfluity of ornament in the Church? If this had been carried out faithfully by the preachers, I think there would have been an improved condition of things in respect to this matter. The brother said this section had done no good. I think very differently. At least, sir, fifty years ago it did good. The Methodists of that day were a simple people under the observance of their rules. They knew each other everywhere they met. They came out from the world, sir—they were separated from the world.

RESIDENCE OF BISHOPS.

On motion by H. N. McTyeire, the Conference took up the consideration of his resolution requiring the Bishops hereafter to be elected to fix their domicils in such places as the General Conference may direct.

The proposition was read.

H. N. McTyeire did not know that Conference would elect a Bishop at this time—rather thought they would not; but if the resolution were passed, it ought to be done before going into the election.

B. M. Drake—It seemed the veriest absurdity for the General Conference to say where the Bishops should live, when the Bishops were the acknowledged General Superintendents.

On motion of F. E. Pitts, the proposition was laid on the table.

C. F. Deems submitted a resolution relative to two verbal alterations in the Discipline, on page 53, five lines from the bottom; which was referred to the committee on Revisals.

THE NEW ORLEANS EXCEPTION.

On motion by J. A. Ivey, the Conference now took up the consideration of the report (No. 1) of the committee on the Itinerancy, recommending the removal of that clause on page 48 of the Discipline which makes the city of New Orleans an exception to the itinerant system.

J. H. Linn moved the adoption of the resolution reported.

H. N. McTyeire hoped some reason would be assigned for this change, and rather gave his voice against it.

L. M. Lee—The answer is a brief one on the part of the committee on the Itinerancy. The recommendation of this change came as the unanimous request of the Louisiana Conference. No further reason, I believe, was laid before the committee. The brethren of that Conference thought it desirable, and we accorded it.

A Voice—The reason for the exception had ceased to exist.

L. M. Lee—That was the ground on which the Conference asked its removal.

R. J. Harp—I am sorry any opposition should exist in the mind of my colleague, (McTyeire,) or of any of the brethren, to the passage of this report. This resolution was brought before the Louisiana Conference by two ministers who were last year and are the present year residing in New Orleans. The body voted for it almost unanimously. I believe there were but five votes in the negative. So you see, sir, there must have been strong reasons for striking out this restriction. In the first place, we regard New Orleans, in respect to the epidemic of the yellow fever, as no more deserving an exception to this law than any town in our Conference or in any other Conference along the Mississippi river. Many would prefer risking the chances in New Orleans, from the fact that the mortality is not so great there as in the country, where they are destitute of experienced nurses. The increased facilities of travel is another reason why this exception should be removed. But the fact that its existence has injured the commercial interests of New Orleans is another very important reason. The idea that Methodist preachers are afraid to go there has made a most unjust and injurious impression against the character of our city for health. Then I submit, as a fourth reason for the removal of this exception, that its continuance is calculated to injure our itinerant system, which is so justly regarded as the life of Methodism. It is a hardship to be appointed to New Orleans. The best appointments are in the country; etc.

S. J. Davies said that the Louisiana Conference, from its commencement, had opposed this exception. They applied to the General Conference to rescind it, at their very first session, and it had been a standing request of theirs in this body ever since. He was sorry to see Brother McTyeire oppose it. It was the eloquence of that brother which defeated the proposition before the last General Conference; but should the voice of one man outweigh that of the entire Louisiana delegation, and that of the Annual Conference at large?

B. M. Drake—He was the author of the original resolution which made this restriction.—He submitted it to the General Conference at Pittsburg; but he had long since been convinced that is was wrong. The reason for it had ceased to exist, and he should have long ago moved to rescind it, if it had not seemed to involve a personal matter. He should not now have made the motion, but for the fact that, to be consistent in forming such exceptions, we would have to make the exception the rule.

W. A. Smith—I think this measure was brought up by Brother Drake and his honored friend (Winans) in 1832. I should like to hear from Brother Drake, or some one, what was the condition of Methodism in New Orleans before that time, and what has been its success since. How has this exception operated? That is what I want to know. If the exception has worked well, worked to the advancement of Methodism in New Orleans, and put it upon a better footing there, then it is presumable that it will continue to work well; and I see no reason for changing it. My vote will turn upon the information I get upon these points.

R. J. Harp first said to Dr. Drake, that there was no party considerstion in this matter.—The Louisiana Conference was a unit upon it. In reply to the inquiries of Dr. Smith, he alleged that the Moreau Street Church in the city of New Orleans had not come under this exception as to itinerant appointments, and that, all things considered, it was, perhaps, the most flourishing Methodist church in the city. It was a difficult question to answer, but those living there, and having the best right to make up a verdict, had decided that the cause of Methodism has not prospered in New Orleans as it would have done if the itinerant appointments had been subject to change as in other places.

J. E. Evans moved the previous question, but withdrew it for—

H. N. McTyeire—No pastor of the churches in New Orleans is here who was a pastor there before the election of delegates to this General Conference. I was glad of the appointment of Brother Harp, but his appointment to the city, as a pastor, was subsequent to the passage of the Louisiana resolution. In the absence of the New Orleans pastors, it devolves on me to make, on this subject, some showing. If Dr. Drake had moved to strike out this exception while that city was in the Mississippi Conference, then I and others should never have been in New Orleans. Then he had interest in and some influence over the appointments, and his present course would have been less open to invidious exception.

I doubt much whether the last vote of the Louisiana Conference on this question will have the full effect here it would have had, since Brother Davies has stated that long since, when the exception was acknowledged to be necessary, the Conference requested the Bishops to disregard it. Tradition says, in this connection, that the venerable Bishop Soule replied: "You may pass your resolution, but I will not regard it in the appointments."

I believe, honestly, that a great interest is at stake there in New Orleans, and this Conference now decides it. Pass this resolution, and what has been done there, for Methodism and by Methodism, will begin to wane, unless the Lord changes the circumstances and latitude of the place. When Bishop Paine, under the protection of the exception sought now to be rescinded, began the policy of appointments that now obtains in New Orleans, (about the year 1848,) we had only one large church in that city for the white congregations—the old Poydras Street Church, and that $10,000 in debt. We have now three large brick churches instead, and not a debt on all of them together equal to that on the old church in 1848; and have built four or five chapels besides, and filled them. True, one of our churches, which has changed pastors often, is flourishing, and for this reason in part: Methodism in New Orleans is one, and the other churches rallied to the help of this, and aided in build up the Moreau street Church. Being there, I know how that work progressed. And even this church was gathered and established by the labors of a faithful pastor resident for several years consecutively.

I dislike to differ with my colleagues and Conference, but did not and will not dodge this question; and was pretty sure, when speaking as I now am speaking, in my own Conference a few months ago, that you would never see my face in the flesh in this General Conference; and I am barely here. Having ventured more for our Church in New Orleans, it was a small thing to venture my seat, even in this body, in sustaining the rule under which our only success there has been achieved.

Pass the resolution before you; chop out men seasoned to epidemics and tried in the work, and bring in fresh ones, every year or two; and when you read in the papers that they have died, or ingloriously fled before the scourge; when the reproach again goes over the land that none but the Catholic clergy are staying by the stricken people, remember to whom and to what such things are attributable. Your ministers now there, under protection of this exception, have ever saved you from that reproach.

Pass this resolution, and when you find that your work is waning—that the ground gained with much difficulty and much cost in the chief metropolis of the South is lost—I hope you will be willing to bear the responsibility; I shall not be responsible; my brethren there will not be responsible. My colleagues doubtless say what they think true, that our Church in the city has not succeeded in proportion with the rest of the Conference; and that the success under this exceptive rule has not been so great as it would have been without it; though one of them has not been stationed there in ten years, and the other has just come. They are wiser than I; but I differ on both points.

I love my Conference, and am as loyal to all its true interests as my colleagues. Let the reporter put that down; for I expect to have to answer for this day's work when I "go down to Jerusalem." I am not afraid of any consequences it may bring upon me. I cannot labor in a cause with my brethren and gratefully see it rise, and the Church built up, and then silently see a measure pass that I believe will hinder and set it back. No mere matter of etiquette and Conference instructions bind me to this, especially when my opinions were freely uttered before my election as a delegate.

My Conference can instruct me to vote for it, and I am going to vote for it. I shall get up, sir, but I shall carry a ton with me when I rise. Perhaps I ought to vote with my colleagues, under these instructions, but they cannot instruct me to think. But don't be misled by my getting up to vote—sit still, any number of you. (Laughter.)

The merits of this question are old and well known. Our population is shifting—a city of strangers. It is peculiar in this. Unless a pastor stays longer than two years, he gathers little influence, makes few acquaintances among such floating people. Few fit and useful will incur the risk of epidemic for such brief services. Yellow fever in other cities is the exception: in New Orleans it is the rule, and not to have it is the exception. The rule as it now stands and has stood for twenty years is merciful to preachers and people. They still need it. Has it not worked well? Have the bishops abused the power granted them of continuing a pastor longer than two years in one charge if they deem it expedient?

With the Louisiana Conference I am identified, and expect ever to be. I prefer membership and labor there to any other; but I regret this resolution has come up. The people must concerned ask no change, and others are nothing wronged if change is not made. Let well enough alone. Too much is at stake for experiment. The Bishops may be safely trusted with the discretion which the Discipline allows them in this instance of continuing a pastor in one charge longer than two years. They are not obliged to continue them, but have often made removals as the good of the work there and elsewhere required. By and by the time may come, I hope soon, when the Methodists of New Orleans will be able to do without this rule, and enjoy the full benefits of itineracy with others. They will not be slow to perceive it and to let you know it—for they are as good Methodists as any I have seen anywhere, and as loyal.

Appointments were then read, and Conference adjourned.

Benediction by Bishop Kavanaugh.

FRIDAY, May 14.

Conference opened at the usual hour, Bishop Soule in the chair. J. G. Jones led the devotions of the body. The minutes of yesterday were read and approved.

Bishop Kavanaugh took the chair, and introduced to the Conference the Rev. Thomas Stringfield, who was invited to take his seat within the bar.

Bishop Paine then took the chair, and called for reports from committees.

CONFERENCE BOOK AND PERIODICAL AGENCY.

L. M. Lee presented the following report, which lies over till to-morrow, under the rule:

The committee on Itinerancy, to whom was referred the duty of inquiring into the propriety of authorizing the Bishops to appoint a traveling agent to promote the circulation of our books in such Conferences as may desire and recommend the appointment of an agent for such a purpose, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to recommend to your body the adoption of the following:

Resolved, That the Discipline, page 49, be amended, by adding "books and" in the third line, so as to read, "and distributing books and tracts."

EPISCOPAL PREROGATIVES IN REGARD TO TRANSFERS.

The same delegate presented report (No. 5) from the same committee, in regard to a paper referred to them on defining the duties and prerogatives of the Bishops in the transfer of preachers from one Conference to another.—Said paper proposes that the Conference to which a transference is made shall have the same power in regard to it as in cases of re-admission. The committee reported against the measure.

F. G. Ferguson opposed the report; he said unwelcome transfers were sometimes made, and transfers of superannuated men.

Bishop Soule knew of no such case: desired to know when and whers.

Mr. Ferguson replied that two superannuated men had been transferred to the Alabama Conference.

L. M. Lee said, the committee did not deem it advisable to recommend the proposed measure. It was not necessary, nor in accordance with the law and usage of the Church.

The report was adopted.

Levi Pearce presented report (No. 8) of the committee on Boundaries, as follows:

The committee on Boundaries having duly considered memorials from sundry persons within the bounds of the North Carolina Conference, praying for a transfer to the Virginia Conference, and also remonstrances against the same, submit the following:

Resolved, 1. That the request of the memorialists be granted so far as that portion of the state of Virginia lying in the North Carolina Conference is concerned, by a transfer of said territory to the Virginia Conference.

Resolved, 2. That the boundary line between the Virginia and North Carolina Conferences be Albemarle Sound and the Roanoke river, up to the point where the state line crosses the said river, and thence with the state line to the top of the Blue Ridge.

The report lies over under the rule.

BEQUEST OF MRS. ANNE WHITE, brought before the Conference by Bishop Soule. It is as follows:

The committee to whom was referred the subject of the bequest of Mrs. Anne White, brought to the notice of the Conference by Bishop Soule, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit to the Conference the following:

Resolved, 1. That Bishop Soule be and he is hereby instructed, in the event the bequest of Mrs. Anne White, made to him as trustee of the Methodist Church, South, should be contested, to take all necessary steps to defend the rights of the Church in the case, and that all expenses incurred in such defense be settled out of the fund of the bequest, when legalised; but should he fail to receive the bequest, he is hereby authorized to draw upon the Book Agents to meet such expenses.

Resolved, 2. That should the bequest be obtained, Bishop Soule is instructed to pay over the amount to the Book Agents, to be used in the publication of books and tracts.

Resolved, 3. That in the event of the death of Bishop Soule, the senior Bishops of the M. E. Church, South, successively, be and they are hereby declared to be "his successors in special trust," in the intention of the bequest, who shall take the management of the bequest, under the directions given to Bishop Soule.

The report was adopted.

C. K. Marshall prescuted the report of the committee on the proposed Great Central Paper, which was, on motion, ordered to be laid on the table for consideration, and to be published.

The committee to whom were referred the memorials on the subject of establishing and publishing periodicals on new plans, beg leave to report:

SUNDAY-SCHOOL AGENCY.

L. D. Huston offered a resolution that the committee on Sunday-schools be requested to consider the expediency of the appointment by this Conference of a General Agent to travel at large and promote the interest of Sunday-schools.

A. L. P. Green offered a substitute, proposing instead of an agent a Superintendent and Secretary of the Sunday-school Society, which was accepted by Dr. Huston.

A. R. Erwin moved an amendment making said Superintendent and Secretary editor also of Sunday-school Books and Visitor.

A. L. P. Green opposed the amendment. It was giving him too much work, and would effectually kill the measure.

E. Stevenson concurred in the opinion of Dr. Green. We wanted for that work a man of great force and energy. It would occupy him fully. It would not do to devolve upon him additional duties as editor.

G. W. Langhorne was surprised at the avidity with which ministers adopted other work than preaching the gospel. The object of the resolution might be effectually secured by the interested attentions of the pastors in the Sabbath-schools. Such effort would supersede the necessity of creating this officer. He would cut down all officials created for mere convenience. He would almost vote for a stampede from the professorships of our colleges, in order to keep the preachers to their legitimate work.

J. B. McFerrin would be sorry to think that the General Conference would create an office which would be unworthy of the work of a pastor. A pastor weary of his work was unfit to be a pastor; and it was certainly not the object of the movers of this proposition that any such man should be put into this place: for, if there was any place of responsibility greater than any other, it was that of feeding the lambs of Jesus! How many lambs had we in the flock unfed and unprovided for? But he did not suppose these brethren had any idea of creating any office at all—much less of creating a place for a man who would be unwilling to continue in the pastoral work. His name would never have been placed on such a resolution. His worthy colleague, Dr. Green, would not introduce such a resolution. The object of those moving in this matter was to give an interest, impetus, energy, success to our great Sunday-school enterprise. What were we doing for the Sunday-schools of the Church? And what had been done by those outside on all the borders of our Sunday-school operations? What were our means? Already the Publishing House had been taxed thousands and thousands of dollars, to bring out Sunday-school books. He supposed the Sunday-school Society, at this time, owed the Publishing House not less than $15,000. Was this the case in any other Church? Must this institution of the General Conference sustain all this that has been taken to the Publishing House, without any help from abroad? Our Sunday-schools were in our wealthy cities—amongst the people of our Church having means, and thousands to spare; yet, by the principle upon which this matter has been conducted, the Publishing House has stereotyped works, and sent them as a gratuity, to encourage the children of wealthy parents in the things pertaining to a religious education. His object in seconding this resolution was, to get up an interest everywhere upon this subject—to bring into the hands of the Church the means of diffusing religious instruction abroad amongst the children of the country; a thing which had never been accomplished heretofore. He would vote for any feasible means of accomplishing these very desirable ends.

A. L. P. Green—With regard to any object, intention, or motive in the direction in which the mind of the brother from Virginia seemed to turn, he never thought of any such thing.—So far as he himself was concerned, he never would have any office but that of a Circuit, a Station, or a District. How he might have felt in such a case, if no office had ever been offered to him, he could not tell. He might, in such a case, have felt like his brother from Virginia. After praying and beseeching men to leave their pastoral work, and getting their consent to other episcopal appointments, he considered it unkind to talk about making a general stampede from the colleges, and turning them all out. He was the friend of all the agents of the Church, and thought the man who should be appointed to the station proposed, would be in a position to do more good than in almost any other.

L. D. Huston also replied to what he regarded as a fling at the mover of the resolution.—Next to the preaching of the gospel, the Sunday-school cause was first in the heart of every minister. Yet the Sunday-school cause in Conference seemed to be placed in the rear of every other interest of the Church. As an officer of the Church, his hands had been manacled in reference to this cause. The Sunday-school cause had saved the Church, North, from deterioration in membership. The same, he believed, was true of the Church, South.—And he gave specific examples of the importance of this cause to the work of increasing and extending the Church, and argued thence the necessity for the motion embraced in the resolution. This position should be given to a man of pastoral talents, etc.

W. W. Bennett fully agreed with the sentiments of the brother just taking his seat. He had been placed in circumstances which had allowed him to learn something in connection with this interest. In his city an effort was made to establish two branches of the Sabbath-school. Committees were appointed to make this effort; and in two Sabbaths after, we had, besides the Central school, two Sabbath-schools in town, numbering fifty scholars each, composed principally of boys and girls who had never been in a Sunday-school before. Next to preaching the gospel, he considered this the most important interest of the Church. It was true that the preachers might preach on Sabbath-schools, but still we needed a special agency to impress upon the minds of our people the importance of this subject. Let any man look at what other Churches are doing in this matter. Let any man on a Sabbath day stand near a Catholic church in Washington City, or Baltimore, and count, if he can, the number of children that congregate there.—Let us look at our Presbyterian churches, and take example of them, where their elders and heads of families take their places in the Sunday-school. The difficulty was, that we could not get our leading men into this interest.—They are too tired. They have been casting up their accounts—carrying on their business plans through the week, and need rest. The best we can do is to get our young men and young women into the work. The agent for this work must be a man of talent and energy; and be assured we shall have to invest money in this enterprise. Five thousand dollars a year could be well invested towards the support of the Sunday-school paper and other interests of this cause.

Lovick Pierce rose to say, that he never had been able to see the great objection to taking a man from the ministry and sending him out on this work. This Sabbath-school work was subordinated too much. When he served the American Bible Society, he found that he could do good in no other way more effectually than by directing himself incidentally to this work. If he were a man of years and qualifications to justify it, he would rather have the superintendency proposed by this resolution than any other work of the Church. He hoped the proper man would be found. He trusted this general objection would not influence the godly and sober judgment of the body.

W. McMahon was very much in favor of the resolution. Facts had never learned to lie.—Experience was the best instructor. He had a little experience of three years as Missionary Agent of his Conference, and his observation was, that the Sabbath-school was the strongest and most effective lever of grace to save the world. We should carry with us the elements of our preservation. He regarded education—Sabbath-school education—as the most conservative principle for the strengthening of all our institutions. As many souls had been converted through our Sunday-schools as by the labors of the circuits. Pastors drawn away from usefulness by being placed in this great work! It was the very highest work of the pastor to get up and forward the interests of Sabbath-schools.

The Chair (Bishop Andrew) now announced the special order, and the subject was passed over till to-morrow.

ALABAMA RESOLUTION.

The Conference now resumed the special order, to wit, the consideration of the report of the special committee appointed to ascertain the vote on the Alabama Resolution, asking that the General Rule with reference to "buying and selling men, women and children, with the intention to enslave them," be expunged from the Discipline—which was again read by the Secretary.

The committee report 1160 as the whole number of votes of members of the Annual Conferences present and concurring in said resolution—being 60 more than the constitutional majority of two-thirds; and that, therefore, the subject is legitimately before the General Conference—concluding—with—two resolutions: First, That said resolution be stricken from our rules, in accordance with the concurring recommendation of a majority of the Annual Conferences present and concurring; and secondly, That this General Conference express no opinion on the general subject of the slave-trade.

T. T. Ashby and J. G. Bruce each submitted a substitute for this report, both coming to the same conclusion, by way of preamble and resolution, viz: That, because of no action on the part of the Pacific, Kansas Mission, and Indian Mission Conferences, the evidence of the constitutional majority of three-fourths of the Annual Conferences present and concurring in the Alabama Resolution is not before this General Conference.

Debate followed here, by D. B. Nicholeon, Bishop Kavanaugh, T. T. Ashby, B. M. Drake, A. L. P. Green, W. A. Smith, H. H. Montgomery, P. Doub, and others, turning principally upon the question as to what is necessary to constitute a constitutional majority of all the Annual Conferences, and the construction of law bearing upon the case—most of the copious notes of which by our reporters are excluded, for want of space in our restricted columns.

After considerable discussion as to the proper method of disposing of the question,

L. M. Lee moved that the further consideration of this subject be postponed till to-morrow morning at 9 o'clock; which was carried.

W. P. Ratcliffe presented a resolution recommending that the General Sunday-School Agent, in case one should be appointed, be required to visit each Annual Conference at least once within the four years; which was adopted.

N. F. Reid and W. Closs offered a resolution to the effect that the Committee on Sunday Schools be requested to inquire in the expediency of uniting the General Agencies for the Sunday-School and Tract causes.

N. F. Reid remarked that the object of the resolution was to pass the matter to the committee as a suggestion.

H. A. C. Walker offered a resolution calling for a certain change in the Discipline; which lies on the table one day under the rule.

The unfinished business laid over yesterday was called up by H. N. McTyeire.

R. J. Harp objected on the ground of want of time to finish it before the hour of adjournment.

Mr. McTyeire thought Conference was ready to act, and hoped the matter would proceed.

A motion was made to lay it on the table, which was lost.

Mr. Harp therefore proceeded to answer the speech of Mr. McTyeire delivered yesterday; but during his remarks the hour of adjournment came.

Appointments were given out, and the Bishop pronounced the benediction.

MONDAY, May 17.

Bishop Andrew called the General Conference to order at 8½ o'clock, the opening exercises being conducted by Rev. N. Scarritt.

The Journal of Saturday was read and authenticated.

SOUTHERN METHODIST PUBLISHING HOUSE.

J. B. McFerrin, from the Committee on Books and Periodicals, to whom had been referred the consideration of the interests of the Southern Methodist Publishing House, submitted their report, No. 4, being the result, in writing, of their deliberations on the Exhibit and Address of the Publishing Agents, which was read by the Secretary.

He also, from the same committee, submitted, in the form of a resolution, a new plan for the publication of books and periodicals—embracing certain material changes in the items of the 8th section of Part ii. of the Discipline, beginning on page 251, which was also read by the Secretary.

The Conference ordered the publication of that portion of the section relating to this Publishing House and the plan of establishing of local depositories, which lies over one day, according to rule. It is as follows:

SECTION VIII.—OF THE PUBLICATION OF BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

1. There shall be a book establishment at the city of Nashville, Tenn., for the purpose of manufacturing and publishing books, to be called the Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and to be under the control of one Agent, and a committee, to be called the Book Committee.

2. The object of this institution shall be to advance the cause of Protestant Christianity, by disseminating religious knowledge and useful literary and scientific information, in the form of cheap books, tracts, and periodicals.

3. The Agent shall receive all the funds of the Church known as the book fund, and be responsible to the General Conference for the prudent application and safe management of the same, under the general direction of the Conference. He shall make an annual exhibit to the several Annual Conferences, and a full and detailed account of the state and progress of the business to the General Conference.

4. It shall require the joint concurrence of the College of Bishops and Book Committee, formally given, after full and free consultation, to authorize the Agent to increase the present amount invested in grounds, houses, and permanent fixtures.

5. The Agent shall supply, as far as practicable, the demand of the Church for books, tracts, and periodicals, availing himself of all the facilities of other establishments for their publication at the cheapest rates; and in all investments for the manufacturing of books and in the manufacture of books, he is required to govern himself strictly by the principles of economy, in view of the ultimate permanent interests of the Publishing House.

6. The books shall be sold for cash or on six months' time, at rates sufficient to sustain the Publishing interest. Conference Agents and Depositories shall be allowed a discount on the usual wholesale rates of the House. It is recommended that each Annual Conference appoint a Book and Tract Agent, and a Book Committee, of at least three, to superintend the circulation of books and tracts within their bounds; and, whenever it is thought best, two or more Conferences may unite under one agency for this purpose. It is also recommended that a collection be taken up by the preacher in charge, at each preaching-place, at such time as the Conference or Book Committee may direct, to aid in the circulation of books and tracts among the destitute; and that the money so collected be remitted to the Conference Agent for the purpose. It is also recommended that the Presiding Elders inquire, at each Quarterly Conference, whether the preachers have been faithful in supplying the people with our books, tracts, and periodicals, and that all our preachers increase their efforts to circulate our publications.

7. There shall be a committee of five, three of whom shall be resident at Nashville, to be called the Book Committee. No permanent investment of the book fund shall be made by the Agent without their approbation. They shall give advice to the Agent in all matters of general interest, whenever consulted. They shall fix the allowances of the Agents and resident editors, fill vacancies in their own board, and, with the advice of the Bishops, fill vacancies in the agency and in the corps of resident editors.

8. There shall be an editor of the Sunday-school books, and books of the general catalogue, who shall also be editor of the Quarterly Review; and an editor for the Home Circle and Methodist Magazine, who shall also be the editor of the Sunday-school Visitor.

9. Any Conference, or Conferences unitedly, may establish an agency or a depository for the sale of our publications; provided the business with the Publishing House be conducted upon strictly business principles, and that the General Book Agent require settlement promptly every six months, and be is hereby authorized to suspend operations with any agent or depository that does not meet its payments promptly. Whenever a joint agency or depository is established by two or more Conferences they may unite in the appointment of a joint committee for its supervision. It shall be the duty of the Conference book committees, whenever appointed, upon consultation with the Conference Agent, to fix the prices at which our books shall be sold within their bounds; the per cent. to be allowed to wholesale purchasers; and they shall determine whether said purchasers may return the books not sold, also, what proportion, if any, to the amount sold, shall be gratuitously distributed; they shall fix the salary of the agent, to be paid out of the business; and in all respects direct the operations of the agent, subject to the control of the Conference or Conferences appointing him. It shall be the duty of the Conference Agent to superintend the circulation of books and tracts within the bounds of those Conferences appointing him; enlisting all the itinerant and local preachers, and other suitable persons, as

...e work may demand, that all the people may be supplied with our publications. To this end, he should circulate among the people as much as possible, making collections, and in every way possible promoting the cause. It shall be his duty to conduct the business with the General Agent at Nashville, as nearly as may be for cash; and in no case to allow his indebtedness to extend beyond six months—except the agent for the Pacific Conference, who shall be allowed twelve months on his first purchases; the General Book Agent nevertheless shall always determine, in view of all the circumstances, what amount of credit shall be extended to a Conference agent or depository. The depositories now under the control of the General Agent may be disposed of to the Conferences now patronizing them, that they may hereafter be conducted agreeably to the foregoing provisions, or be discontinued, as to the judgment of the Agent shall best subserve the general cause. And all real estate obtained for Conference depositories shall be deeded to trustees or to the General Book Agent, to be held in trust for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for the purpose of depositories; within the bounds of the Conference or Conferences making the purchase. The Conferences are requested to take active measures for the circulation of our books and periodicals, and to hold their members to a strict accountability on the subject.

W. A. SMITH—What was meant by the value of the concern—some $350,000?

Bishop ANDREW—Stock, property.

W. A. SMITH—Do you mean that that is its value after deducting liabilities?

J. B. MCFERRIN—After all liabilities are taken, the balance in favor of the House is $8,000.

Bishop ANDREW—The report lies on the table.

E. STEVENSON—If the Conference desire information in reference to the details of our showing, they will find it in the Agents' Exhibit and Address, printed, I think, in the 6th and 7th numbers of the Daily Advocate.

C. K. MARSHALL—Would it not be best for us to have this report printed?

J. B. MCFERRIN—It is very long.

C. K. MARSHALL—I know it, but it contains a variety of items of moment. I hardly think we shall have a more important document before the body, and it is very likely most of the members would like to see it in print. I move that the section intended to be substituted as a new section to the Discipline be printed in the Daily Advocate.

J. B. MCFERRIN—I have no objection to the motion; but desire to state that there are one or two items with reference to the periodicals, which the chairman supposed he was ready to report, but which, since he came in, it has been judged best to suspend a while.

The report was then ordered to be printed.

Bishop Paine was now called to the chair.

CLASS MEETINGS.

D. R. McAnally, from the select committee to whom was referred the memorial of certain persons in the State of South Carolina, asking that the Discipline be so changed as to make the attendance on class meetings advisory instead of compulsory, and a resolution to reduce the number of members of the classes to their original size of twelve, reported, in writing, adversely to both; the report closing with a recommendation of the passage of resolutions in the following effect:

Resolved, That the prayer of the memorialists, asking that the rule be stricken from the Discipline making it the duty of our membership to attend class meetings, be not granted.

Resolved, That the Annual Conferences be instructed to take measures to inquire into the conduct of our members up on this subject, and hold them to a strict accountability.

Resolved, That it be recommended to our preachers to give attention to this subject as far as practicable.

C. F. Deems moved to make the subject the special order for Wednesday at 10 o'clock. He said, if the report be adopted at once, it will take away a great deal of its moral force; to carry it through without discussion would defeat the end sought in the appointment of a special committee.

A. H. MITCHELL—If the motion to postpone does not prevail, it is my intention to move to take up the subject now.

D. S. DOGGETT—There is weight in the remark of Dr. Deems. The attention of the Church, over a wide extent of country, has been directed to this subject, and therefore it should be acted on deliberately. I am in favor of the report as it now stands.

W. A. SMITH suggested that a good many members were absent, who really wanted to vote on this subject.

The motion was agreed to, and the subject was made the special order for Wednesday.

BOUNDARY OF THE KANSAS MISSION CONFERENCE.

N. SCARRITT—Mr. President, I would ask leave to withdraw the resolutions in regard to the boundary of the Kansas Mission Conference, and to make an explanation.

Bishop PIERCE—Proceed, by unanimous consent of the Conference.

N. SCARRITT—I wish to say that the only object which the Kansas Mission Conference had in view in passing those resolutions, was that they thought, by the arrangement therein proposed, the work would be better supplied, and they knew of no better method of securing that object than by changing the boundary of the Conference. Since these resolutions were submitted to the General Conference, the delegates from the Kansas Mission Conference have had several consultations with the preachers from the Missouri and St. Louis Conferences, and also with the Bishops, and they have come to the conclusion that perhaps this is not the best way to accomplish the object. It is from assurances received from the Bishops that they will use their best endeavors to supply the work by transferring preachers; also from assurances of the preachers from Missouri that they will second the efforts of the Bishops, that we now withdraw these resolutions. If our work can be done without changing boundaries, we ourselves would prefer it. I wish this condition to be emphasized with a deep, strong mark, that these resolutions are withdrawn upon the assurance that this work shall be supplied with suitable men.

The CHAIR—Is the delegation unanimous in his request?

N. SCARRITT—Yes, sir.

The leave was granted, and the resolutions were withdrawn.

DELEGATES TO THE EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTE.

M. M. Henkle asked and obtained leave to present a paper in behalf of the Educational Institute, requesting the General Conference to make provision for the sending of delegates from each Annual Conference to the annual meeting of the Educational Institute, and asked that it be referred to the committee on Education.

It was referred.

A SCIENTIFIC DEPARTMENT.

M. M. HENKLE—I ask leave also to present another resolution in the same way. It is a request that provision may be made, if found practicable and convenient, in your Quarterly, or highest class periodical, for a distinctive scientific department. We have now no such department to which to invite our scientific men to make their contributions. I move that, without reading, it be referred to the committee on Books and Periodicals.

It was so referred.

CENTRAL SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY.

M. M. HENKLE—I have still another matter, if you please, Mr. President. It embraces a resolution of the Institute, directing me to lay before the General Conference an outline of a plan for a Central Southern University, adopted by the Institute a year ago, and which in itself provides that it shall be laid before this Conference for its concurrence. These papers may be referred with or without reading, as the Conference shall see proper.

The papers were read, and referred to the committee on Education.

M. M. HENKLE—I have also here a copy of the University Charter, which was submitted to the Institute by a committee appointed to procure a provisional charter. I move that this charter, with the accompanying resolution suggesting certain amendments to the charter, (which I believe has been read by all, for I see it on the desks here,) be referred to the committee on Education.

It was so referred.

M. M. HENKLE—I hope the Conference will consent to publish the plan. It has been more than a year since it was first published.

The motion was rejected.

GREENSBORO' UNIVERSITY.

E. Wadsworth presented a document, signed by eleven members of the Conference, Trustees of the Southern University, containing a narrative of the operations of the Alabama Conference with reference to the establishment of a university at Greensboro, and asked that it be referred to the Committee on Education.

It was read by the Secretary, and so referred.

APPLICATION OF THE CONFERENCE FUND.

T. W. Dorman submitted a resolution (signed also by A. H. Mitchell) to the effect that, whereas, there is a difference of administration amongst the Annual Conferences in regard to the application of the Conference fund—some excluding claims for deficiencies, and others placing all preachers' claims on the same basis; therefore,

Resolved, That the committee on Itinerancy report a uniform plan, etc.

The resolution was adopted, and referred to the committee on Itinerancy.

LOCATION OF THE NEXT GENERAL CONFERENCE.

J. E. Edwards submitted the memorial of a number of ministers and laymen of the city of Louisville, asking that the next General Conference be held in that city.

J. W. Whipple submitted a petition from the official members of the Church, at Galveston, asking for the same thing.

J. G. JONES—I beg leave to remind the House that New Orleans is in nomination for the next General Conference.

D. S. DOGGETT—A similar paper has been presented from the city of Richmond; it was the first presented on this subject.

These several papers were laid on the table.

THE NEW ORLEANS EXCEPTION.

The Conference now proceeded to the consideration of the unfinished business of Friday, viz: the report of the committee on Itinerancy, recommending the rescinding of the New Orleans exception to the itinerant system. (See Discipline, p. 48.)

R. J. Harp, being entitled to the floor, said he was sorry to have consumed time in what might be deemed a local matter; but he showed that it could not be regarded as a local matter. He reasoned against this exception, on the ground that other places might and would claim the same exception for the same reason. There was no remonstrance to this memorial from the Louisiana Conference, nor could any remonstrance come but from a Quarterly Conference, and that could be easily overborne by numbers and the outweighing influence of the itinerancy. It was not asked from any motive to oppress—from any personal motive, but upon a cold, settled judgment that it was just and expedient, and necessary to the prosperity of Methodism in that quarter.

B. M. Drake claimed the right of an explanation, founded on the following extract from our report of H. N. McTyeire's remarks last Thursday, as printed in the Daily Advocate of Friday morning:

"If Dr. Drake had moved to strike out this exception while that city was in the Mississippi Conference, then I and others should never have been in New Orleans. Then he had interest in and some influence over the appointments, and his present course would have been less open to invidious exception."

The speech I made, which is here referred to, was this: That I had for years been convinced that the New Orleans exception to the itinerant rule ought to be stricken out; but, inasmuch as I had moved to put it there when I was in Conference connection with New Orleans, I felt some delicacy about it, and what seemed to be other personal matters involved. I said also, that I would not now have made the motion, but I thought brother McTyeire wanted it rescinded. I said, moreover, that, before this exception was put into the Discipline, I myself had passed through the ordeal in New Orleans—I had had the yellow fever. I did not seek the floor. I answered only when brother McTyeire asked for the reasons for the motion. I certainly could have no personal feeling in the case.

H. C. Thweatt was confined to his room by indisposition when the subject was up before. He liked the sentiment expressed by our venerable Bishop, to understand well what we are about to speak, to speak briefly, and then close. He regretted conflict and opposition here with Bro. McTyeire. He examined the position of that brother as reported. They had both expressed themselves freely before the Annual Conference, but with this difference between them; his brother considering that he might not be here in the flesh; whilst he himself stood wholly without personal influence of any sort. He spoke there only what was justified by the great commission of our Lord to his disciples. That exception with reference to New Orleans was an anomaly. If his own experience were worth any thing, it would all go for expunging it. He would think it wrong to debar to me the privilege of self-sacrifice, implied by the brother's remarks, in taking a position there. But the yellow fever was as fatal elsewhere as it was in New Orleans. All he asked was to have Methodism unfettered by climate, or any other consideration—ready to enter and battle with the enemy in any field of danger. He would vote as his Conference had instructed him—would rise, not as with a ton weight, but light as a feather; and he was pleased to know that, with the exception of Bro. McTyeire, his brother delegates were all with him in this vote.

H. N. McTyeire would make a few remarks, and let the case go to vote. Bro. Harp's first string was that New Orleans was a hard place on preachers; in this country were the best appointments, etc., and he wanted to relieve them: very kind. In one of his speeches, subsequently, complains of a monopoly—preachers enjoying fine positions by prescription, and others hadn't a chance: another string. And the brother has a thousand strings, if you would hear him play on them all.—(Laughter.) As for himself, he spoke as his colleagues could not. He spoke in sympathy with family feelings and responsibilities; not only for preachers, but wives and children, who were equally exposed. But his colleagues were differently situated. Brother Harp was an old bachelor.

Mr. HARP—Can I make an explanation?

Mr. MCTYEIRE—Not now, on that point.—(Laughter.) It is but another string. There is brother Ivey, too young to marry yet, and Dr. Thweatt is a handsome widower, whose children are grown. He replied to the statement that Methodism in New Orleans had not prospered under this rule. All the prosperity attained has been under it, and, by the Divine blessing, that has been very considerable. Let the Bishops, and those who have been visiting there for the last ten years, say. The statement of brother Harp, that the statistics show less members there now than ten years ago, will be news in New Orleans, and is hardly ingenuous in that brother, since those statistics were explained once in his hearing. The impression those remarks were calculated to make, though he could not have so designed, is incorrect. The membership had appreciably increased, the position of our Church and its material interests were advanced and advancing. Whilst his colleague, on Friday, sadly driven to such necessity, was depreciating Methodism in the chief city of his beloved Conference and the country, by a singular coincidence a telegraphic dispatch was handed him from Dr. Keener, saying, "We have bought the depository." Much the largest portion of the money for that purpose, to be sure, had been raised in the country by the brother's agency, yet the city was in for a fourth of it. Let not his brethren, in pressing their views, really do injustice to their own Conference. They did not mean it, but such was the tendency of some of their remarks. He closed, asking Dr. Green to read an extract from a letter received a day or two ago from the Presiding Elder. It told of different opinions from those represented, and that a memorial from those most concerned was on its way from New Orleans to be protected from the action contemplated in the resolution.

A. L. P. Green made a statement which he considered due from him. He had induced ministers to go to New Orleans from Alabama and Tennessee, using the argument, that under this exception they could stay there and do good, after becoming acclimated, if God should spare their lives. The extract was from one of these, (Bro. Walker,) who was his relative.—It was his relative's opinion that the exception ought to be retained, and he read the extract of his letter, just received, to that effect.

S. J. Davies stated cases of other brethren who had suffered, with their families, even more than Bro. McTyeire, in which he was himself implicated, in a country village down there in Louisiana.

H. C. Thweatt explained, and alleged that every argument against the removal of this exception was based upon human prudence.—There were higher considerations than handsome appeals to the fraternal relationships of families—the honor of the Author of the Christian institution—the success of our uncompromising Methodism—which he desired to see maintained without regard to any consideration of mere human prudence. He had found New Orleans a very pleasant place.

C. K. MARSHALL—It had been said that if this law were to have perpetuity, there would be found adjoining Conferences and places coming up and demanding the same exception. He had been for twenty-five years living in a place where they had been visited by this yellow fever epidemic in its worst forms, but it was only occasionally; and perhaps Bro. Davies would live out his years of life in the little town to which he referred before he would be called to witness another case like that described by him. But he had never yet known a year when the yellow fever was not in New Orleans. He thought, therefore, it would be better to lay the subject over till the next four years shall roll round, when (with this individual exception) he hoped we might all be there, and better prepared to decide the question.

H. N. MCTYEIRE—I shall have to vote with my brethren. I hope nobody will be misled by that.

R. J. Harp asked leave that his colleague, J. A. Ivey, who had been called away to preach, might have the right to vote when he should return to his place.

H. N. McTyeire said he hoped the leave would be granted to Bro. Ivey.

Bishop Pierce (now in the chair) said the leave would be granted.

The Conference was divided on the question of striking out the New Orleans exception, resulting, affirmative, 64; negative, 72; so the report was rejected.

ALABAMA RESOLUTION.

The Conference now resumed the consideration of the unfinished business of Saturday, to wit: the consideration of the report on the Alabama Resolution, recommending that the rule of the Discipline against "buying and selling men, women, and children, with the intention of enslaving them," be expunged—the question being on the motion of J. E. Evans for the question on the first item of the report, viz: That the subject is legitimately before the Conference.

J. E. Evans was persuaded that we could not come to a vote on the resolution till we had first settled the question whether the subject was constitutionally before us. He did not think that the Bishops had settled this question, for it required the whole Board of Bishops to do that. He looked particularly at the question whether or not we have the requisite constitutional majority. He believed we had.—The difficulty was not with the acting Conferences. It was wholly with the Kansas, the Indian Mission, and the California Conferences. There was nothing in the constitution and statutes of the Church that required any special form of notification to be given to these Conferences. We are left, then, to the ordinary notification of elections in the country. The Alabama Conference had their action in December, and the Kansas and Indian Mission Conferences were held in the following fall—ten months afterward. But the Indian Mission Conference was notified. The Pacific Conference had given information that they did not desire to take action, and that they rather desired the rule should be stricken from the book. We were informed by the President of the Kansas Conference that they were not informed of the action of the Alabama Conference. But there was a clear majority of three-fourths without them. Hereupon he rested the case, and asked brethren on the border not to throw difficulties in the way, when there was evidently such a preponderating moral sense for removing from the Discipline this fruitful source of excitement in the Church.

The Chair gave notice that speakers upon the floor must stick to the question.

N. H. LEE—There was a radical fallacy in the argument of bro. Evans—that non-action should constitute just ground of being counted out; that the General Conference were under no obligation to pay any attention to the question whether notice has been given by the Bishops to the Annual Conferences.

J. E. EVANS—Provided the ordinary notifications have reached them.

H. N. LEE—Here the rights of the Annual Conferences were involved. It had been positively stated that the Kansas Mission Conference were not advertised of the fact that this resolution was to be acted on. He had received no evidence to satisfy his mind that notification had reached them of the existence of the Alabama resolution, or that it was to be brought before them. There was no proof of this. If it could be proved that they had refused to act, there would be a propriety in counting them out. But it was unsafe, in his judgment, to count out votes in such a case, where there has been no official notification; for the practice of to-day might become the rule of to-morrow.—There was no telling to what extent such a precedent might lead. We might know that it would lead in the wrong direction. Just such a precedent inaugurated the division of the M. E. Church in 1844—the adoption of expedients, instead of following out the requirements of the constitution.

When the speaker had concluded, the appointments for preaching were announced, and Conference adjourned.

News from the Churches.

BAYOU SARA, La., May 30.

BRO. MCTYEIRE: We closed a meeting here about three weeks ago, which was of considerable interest. There were a number of decided conversions and an accession of thirty-seven members to the Church.

The meeting was interrupted by the breaking of our levee, which inundated the town and rendered the church inaccessible except in boats.

There seems to be a general interest in the community on the subject of salvation. Our Episcopal friends are about to lay the corner stone of what is to be an elegant and commodious building, and the interests of Zion here are evidently looking up.

During our meeting we had the services of several of the brethren from the adjoining works.

T. W. BROWN.

FORKLAND, Ala., May 28.

BRO. MCTYEIRE: We have just closed a meeting of fourteen days continuance at this place; and under the very efficient labors of brethren Harmon, Shores, Saunders and Henderson, we have gathered a rich harvest, (no doubt) from the seed sown in tears, by brother Powers and others. Thirteen whites, among which are heads of families, were added to the Methodist Episcopal Church. Besides one to the Episcopal, one to the Presbyterian, and one perhaps to the Baptist Church. A considerable number of colored members have been added to the Church; but as the revival is still going on among them, we wait until it closes to give you the result.

Last Sabbath upwards of 80 penitents (blacks) came to the altar for prayer. The entire community seems to have been reached, and much affected by gospel truth.

Prayer and praise ascend to God from almost every heart here. Your brother in Christ,

DANIEL DUNCAN.

VIGILANCE COMMITTEE.

INTENSE EXCITEMENT!—Vigilance Committee in Action!—500 Men Under Arms! Since the last midnight chime of the Cathedral of St. Louis, Jackson Square has been reconverted into a Place d' Armes, and men, alleged to have been appointed by the Vigilance Committee of the city of New Orleans, are marching around bearing arms on their shoulders.

The military organization marched to Jackson Square about 12 o'clock last night, apparently under the command of Captain Duncan, and immediately took possession of the State Arsenal and the Second District Lockup. Soon after, outposts were established in the neighborhood, and cannon were so placed as so command all the streets leading to the Arsenal.

At 10 o'clock this morning an extraordinary session of both Boards of Aldermen was called by the Mayor to devise such measures as might be deemed necessary. The Boards, however, acted with closed doors, and the reporters, as well as the public, were obliged to retire. In requesting the lobby to be cleared, the President announced that whatever proceedings were had would be made public. At 11½ o'clock the two Boards were still together in joint executive session.

The committee, we learn, has taken possession of the rooms occupied by the Sixth District Court and by the Recorder of the Second District, and these, it is rumored, are to be used for the trial of prisoners.

Picayune, Thursday evening.

The Delta, of Friday morning, says:

The local topic of all-absorbing interest yesterday was the coup d'etat of the Vigilance Committee the previous night, and its proceedings during the day. Thousands upon thousands were flocking down Chartres and Royal streets, and through all practicable avenues, to get sight of all that were visible of the gentlemanly and determined-looking band who occupied the State Arsenal and adjoining building. The utmost good feeling in general seemed to prevail between those outside and inside of the intrenchments, and cases of affiliation were frequent. Many who came out of curiosity, remained and enrolled themselves as volunteers. Consequently the forces of the Vigilance Committee increased throughout the day, and by night, it is supposed, the whole number under arms at the arsenal was five or six hundred.

Meantime, various demonstrations were made during the day, in the neighborhood of the City Hall, of a hostile movement against the Vigilance Committee's position—a part of the force mustered being fragments of volunteer companies called out for the occasion, and the rest partisans of one of the candidates for Mayor. It numbered about 200 altogether; but no attack was made, and about 9 o'clock the collection dispersed, to meet again this morning at 6 o'clock.

An anonymous handbill was posted at the office of the Chief of Police, offering $2500 for the bodies, dead or alive, of Capt. Duncan, the military head of the Vigilance Committee's forces, and I. N. Marks, supposed to be one of the Executive Committee of the Independent Party. No doubt human bodies have been immolated for less money by the anonymous authors of the handbill.

HOME CIRCLE.

This very attractive and deservedly popular periodical is published monthly by Stevenson & Owen, Ag'ts, Nashville, Tenn., L. D. Huston, D. D., Editor, at $2 per annum, strictly in advance. Each number contains 64 pages royal octavo, embellished with one or more beautiful steel-plate engravings. The matter is mainly original, and of the most important and interesting character.

To ministers of the gospel, and all others who may be disposed to act as agents in procuring subscribers, a discount of 20 per cent. will be allowed on the subscription price.

As the patronage of this admirable issue has not yet been sufficient to meet the cost of its publication, it is therefore respectfully proposed, that a prompt, energetic, and continuous effort be made in all the Conferences to increase the list of its patrons to at least twelve thousand!—Come brethren, you have but to submit the claims of the "Circle" to the Church and her friends, and this desirable object will be more than realized at an early day.

COMMERCIAL.

The Crescent of yesterday morning says:

COTTON—The market was again without animation yesterday, the sales being confined to some 3,000 bales at very irregular and easier prices for the low grades, while the better qualities were without any material change. We repeat our last quotations, though they are nominal for the grades below Middling. Wednesday's sales were about 3200 bales.

MONETARY AND FINANCIAL.

The money market moved on very quietly to-day. There were several negotiations of long dated paper at 9 per cent; $60,000 through one party, $20,000 through another, and $10,000 by another. The calls on the banks were moderate. The only banks regularly discounting to-day were the Bank of Louisiana and the Crescent City Bank. The calls on them were very moderate. With these and the other banks every thing went on quietly.

ANGEL LILLY.

BY MRS. DENISON.

Although a wonderful child, Lilly was by no means a grave, unearthly, precocious little one. Her smile was as sunny as her hair, and her eyes were always laughing. She was indeed a beam of light wherever seen. At sight of her lovely face the stern visages of worldly men relaxed, and the old always held open arms for her. She warmed their hearts with her happy, artless prattle. One day her mother took her on board of a steamboat, on a pleasure excursion. At first Lilly looked grave, finding herself among so many strange people, but spying at the farther end of the saloon a venerable man, who held a little girl by the hand, she begged her mother to let her go and see the rosy-cheeked child. Mrs. —— was not afraid to trust Lilly. If she said, "Lilly, remember and do not go out of the door or by the window," she knew that she might rely upon the sweet child's implicit obedience. So away went Lilly, her beautiful great eyes shining, her step still rather slow, but when she got near the child she looked for a moment in her little chubby face, and smile answered smile; the two quickly understood each other, and were soon busily playing together. The old gentleman regarded them with a look of interest that was not lost upon Lilly, so by-and-bye sliding up to his knees, she asked—

"Is that your little girl?"

"Yes, dear," was the reply, "at least she is my little grand-daughter."

"Are you her grandpa?"

"Yes, dear."

"I got a grandpa," said Lilly, with that sweet, coaxing way that is in some children so irresistible, "and he's a good man and loves Jesus. Do you love Jesus?"

The old man looked at her with a strange expression, but did not speak.

"Say I you love Jesus, don't you? Don't you love Him because He died to save you? Say, don't you love Jesus?"

"My little child," murmured the old, white headed man, and his lips began to quiver.

She looked at him earnestly, thoughtfully—then a grieved expression crossed her sweet face, and she said, softly—"You do love Jesus, don't you?

My little one—ah! I wish I did—I wish I did!" and he shook his head mournfully.

For one full moment she stood gazing on the floor, then flying from the knee where she had been resting, she sought her mother, caught hold of her hand, and saying, "Oh! mamma, that little girl's grandpa over there, don't love Jesus; won't you come and tell him he must?"

The child would take no denial, but besought with such earnestness, that her mother was fain to go, and seat herself by the old man's side, after which Lilly, feeling perfectly assured that the old man would soon love Jesus whether he had before or not, resumed her merry play with her little new-found companion.

Mrs. —— sat for some time silent and embarrassed where her daughter had escorted her.

"That's a wonderful little one," said the old gentleman, after he had mastered his emotion.

"O! no, sir, a very pleasant, good child, but there is nothing wonderful about her," replied the mother.

"Madam, pardon me—but no one ever took that much interest in me before, to ask me the simple question that child put to me, and I am now in my eighty-third year."

"The Bible, sir, you know, says that out of the mouths of babes and sucklings God hath ordained praise."

"Ah! yes, I remember—I read my Bible a great deal, madam," and he sighed heavily.

"And you find comfort in its truths I hope, sir?"

"No, madam, I have for many years been shaping the Scriptures to suit some peculiar views of mine, and so busy and zealous have I been that I have given no attention to it, as a saving medium. When your child put that question to me, madam, I seemed suddenly to awake, as it were, out of a slumber of ages," and again he sighed heavily.

"I think, sir," said Mrs. ——, "if you would not disdain so humble an instrument, my little daughter, as she has perhaps begun the good work, might lead you to the truth."

"The boat is stopping, madam," said the old gentleman, then he added, eagerly, "will you accompany me to my home? It will be pleasanter than the hot grove, at this hour of the day, and I would talk more with that angel child."

His new-found friend consented, and they walked together, for some moments, the little children hand in hand, until they came in sight of a splendid mansion. A park, dotted with beautiful timber lay in front, and the sun brightened its open paths, and threw threads of light in among the shadowed foliage spreading broadly over the green. This led into a garden well laid out, blooming with various flowers. The glass roof of a large conservatory glittered in the red light of that noon hour, and through its transparent windows the lemon and the orange could be seen.

They entered the house. It wore an air of grandeur, and every room was adorned with rich and costly furniture.

"O! what a happy house!" cried angel Lilly.

"She means," said her mother, smiling, "that everything is so beautiful, one ought to be happy here."

Again came that sigh welling up from the heart of the aged man, and he shook his head sadly, holding out his arms to the child.

"Come to me, and tell me how I may love Jesus," he said.

"Why, don't you love Him yet?" she cried, looking from him to her mother.

"Is it so easy then, my sweet child?"

"Why, it's so easy you can't help it," said the little one, simply. "Mother says she loves me dearly when I'm good, and how can you help loving Jesus who is good all the time?"

"Do you think he loves me?"

"O! I know He does," replied she earnestly.

The eyes of the aged unbeliever filled with tears, as he said, "Then, surely, if he loves me, who has been always so ungrateful towards Him, I ought to love Him. Thank God! I see it in a new light," he murmured to himself.—"O! madam, how can I ever be thankful enough that I met this angel? Surely, if I seek Him He will be found."

In her own sweet way the mother of little Lilly unfolded the plan of salvation to this hoary headed sceptic—removing his impressions where they conflicted with the truth, and when she left him, he had humbled himself in prayer and promised not to give up his search till he had found the Savior precious to his soul.

It was perhaps a week after this conversation that the mother of Lilly received a letter from the old gentleman, in which he wrote the glad tidings of great joy; now he loved the Savior.

"Ask my little angel," he added, "what she would most like to have me buy for her. It must be something very beautiful and very costly, I am curious to know what she will say."

"What shall the good old man buy for you, Lilly?" asked her mother, as she read the latter part of his letter.

"For me, mother?"

"He says he will get you whatever you wish, no matter what it costs."

"O! mother, will he?" and Lilly clapped her hands. "Will he buy a whole new library for our Sabbath School? O! that would be so nice!"

"Always another—never self," thought the gratified parent, as the tears came into her eyes. Then she added aloud, "Well, daughter, I will tell him what you want."

Before the next Sabbath a new and beautiful library graced the Sabbath School room of L——, and Lilly's eyes sparkled like diamonds as she heard the superintendent tell that it was a gift through one of the Sabbath School scholars. Was it not strange that every eye turned toward the beaming face of angel Lilly? No; for they knew that she delighted in such deeds. And when the questions came pouring in upon her, "Was it you? was it you?" her childish answer was—

"Yes; arn't you glad we've got such a beautiful library?"

That old man lived to build a house unto the Lord, and when it was completed, and they told him that angel Lilly lay in her white robes, pale and motionless, his only reply was, as he wiped the tears from his furrowed cheek, and pointed to the new and elegant edifice—

"There is her monument!"

Three to five bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Erysipelas.
One or two bottles are warranted to cure all humor in the eyes.
Two bottles are warranted to cure running of the ears and blotches among the hair.
Four to six bottles are warranted to cure crpns and running ulcers.
One bottle will cure scaly eruptions of the skin.
Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of ringworm.
Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the most desperate case of rheumatism.
Three to four bottles are warranted to cure the rheum.
Five to eight bottles will cure the worst case of scrofula.
A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the above quantity is taken.
Nothing looks so improbable to those who have not tried all the wonderful medicines of the day, as that a common weed growing on the pastures, and along old stone walls, should cure every humor in the system; yet it is a fixed fact. If you have a humor, it has to start. There are no IFS nor ANDS, humors nor ha's about it suiting some cases, but not yours. I pedited over a thousand bottles of it in the vicinity of Boston. I know the effects of it in every case. It has already done some of the greatest cures ever done in Massachusetts. I give it to children a year old, to old people of sixty. I have seen poor puny, wormy-looking children, whose flesh was soft and flabby, restored to a perfect state of health by one bottle.
To those who are subject to a sick head ache, one bottle will always cure it. It gives great relief in catarrh and dizziness. Some who have taken it had been costive for years, and have been regulated by it. Where the body is sound it works quite easy, but where there is any derangement of the functions of nature, it will cause very singular feelings, but you must not be alarmed; they always disappear in from four days to a week. There is never a bad result from it, on the contrary, when that feeling is gone you will feel yourself like a new person. I heard some of the most extravagant encomiums of it that ever man listened to.

DOCTOR HOOFLAND'S
CELEBRATED
GERMAN BITTERS.
PREPARED BY
Dr. C. M. JACKSON, Philad'a, Pa.
WILL EFFECTUALLY CURE
LIVER COMPLAINT, DYSPEPSIA, JAUNDICE,
Chronic or Nervous Debility, Diseases of the Kidneys, and all diseases arising from a disordered Liver or Stomach.
Such as Constipation, Inward Piles, or Fullness or Blood the Head, Acidity on the Stomach, Nausea, Heartburn, Disgust for Food, Fullness or Weight in the Stomach, Sour Eructations, Sinking or Fluttering at the Pit of the Stomach, Swimming of the Head, Hurried and difficult Breathing, Fluttering at the Heart, Choking or Suffocating Sensations when in a lying posture, Dimness of Vision, Dots or webs before the Sight, Fever and Dull pain to the Head, Deficiency of Perspiration, Yellowness of the Skin, and Eyes, Pain in the Side, Back, Chest, Limbs, etc., Sudden Flushes of Heat, Burning in the Flesh, Constant Imaginings of Evil and great Depression of Spirits.
The proprietor, in calling the attention of the public to this preparation, does so with a feeling of the utmost confidence in its virtues and adaptation to the diseases for which it is recommended.
It is no new and untried article, but one that has stood the test of a ten years' trial before the American people, and its reputation and sale is unrivalled by any similar preparations extant. The testimony in its favor given by the most prominent and well-known Physicians and individuals in all parts of the country is numerous, and a careful perusal of the Almanac, published annually by the proprietor, and to be had gratis of any of his Agents, cannot but satisfy the most skeptical that this remedy is really deserving the great celebrity it has obtained.

MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT.
Its wonderful effects and consequent popularity—perhaps no article in the history of the Materia Medica ever acquired the same patronage, was subjected to the same number of severe and different tests, and met with so few failures as the Mustang Liniment. It has justly been styled a Panacea for all external Wounds, Cuts, Swellings, Eruptions, Sprains, or Bruises on man or beast. It is so far a medicine of surprising virtue, that physicians are compelled to prescribe it; and from some remarkable cures of chronic and distorted Rheumatic cases it has naturally attracted much attention from the first scientific minds of the age. No family can afford to be without a bottle of the Mustang Liniment in the house. Beware of imitations.
The genuine is sold by respectable dealers in all parts of the world.

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY A COMMITTEE OF MINISTERS FOR THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH---H. N. McTYEIRE, EDITOR.

VOLUME VIII—NUMBER 10. WHOLE NUMBER 384.

Methodist General Conference.

TUESDAY, May 18.

The General Conference met at half-past eight o'clock, Bishop Pierce in the chair, the opening exercises by D. B. Nicholson.

The journal of yesterday was read and authenticated.

CONFERENCE AND STATE BOUNDARIES.

Levi Pearce, from the committee on boundaries returned the report of said committee (No. 9) upon the resolution of A. R. Erwin, inquiring into the propriety of conforming Conference boundaries to State lines, with a resolution to the effect that, in the present state of affairs, so many Annual Conferences lie within two or more States, it is not expedient to make the change proposed.

On motion by T. W. Dorman, the report and resolution were adopted.

LINE BETWEEN HOLSTON AND GEORGIA CONFERENCES.

He also, from the same committee, submitted their report (No. 10) proposing certain changes in the boundary line between the Holston and Georgia Conferences, which lies over one day.

DUTIES OF BISHOPS, ELDERS, PREACHERS, ETC.

A. L. P. Green, from the committee on Revisals, submitted their third report, proposing sundry changes in the Discipline with respect to the election and consecration of Bishops, and the rights and duties of Bishops, Elders, Deacons, Preachers, Exhorters, etc.; which was read at length by the Secretary.

SUPPORT OF THE BISHOPS.

A. L. P. Green submitted a paper, signed by himself, entitled, a plan for the support of the Bishops—from the first of June, 1858, to the first of June, 1862; which was read and referred to the committee on that subject.

J. B. McFerrin presented a supplement to report No. 4 of the committee on Books and Periodicals.

It states that the Quarterly Review has failed, by $8000 in the last four years, to meet the expense of publication; that, with less than fifteen hundred paying subscribers, it has been a constant drain upon the funds of the Church; and that the committee recommended its continuance under a new plan of publication, hereafter to be submitted, which may greatly diminish its cost.

That the Home Circle is approved and popular—should be more highly appreciated—should have 20,000 subscribers—and should by all means be continued.

That the Sunday-school Visitor is an indispensable publication, and should have 50,000 subscribers.

That the Nashville Christian Advocate has been reduced in price from $2 a year to $1 50—has a circulation of twelve thousand copies—and is a source of revenue to the Church.

That the Southern Christian Advocate has a subscription list of 11,000, and has, during the last four years, paid $15,000 into the general fund of the Church.

That the Richmond Christian Advocate has fallen in arrears—but has over 7000 subscribers, and is likely soon to reinstate itself and pay its way.

That the New-Orleans Christian Advocate is on a sound and safe condition, with a list of 7000 subscribers, and an open door for usefulness.

That the St. Louis Christian Advocate occupies an important position, has 7000 subscribers, and is able to sustain itself.

That the Texas Christian Advocate, after years of hard struggling, has now a good prospect of success, with a subscription list of 5000.

That the Memphis, Arkansas and Wachita Christian Advocate enjoys increasing prosperity, with nearly 5000 subscribers, and is confident of success.

That the Holston Christian Advocate, since the death of the late editor, has been merged in the Nashville.

That the North Carolina Christian Advocate, asks to be received by the General Conference; which is recommended by the committee, on certain conditions hereafter to be described.

The report concludes with the resolution that the following items be added to the report of yesterday on books and periodicals:

10. There shall be an editor for each of the following papers, viz: the Nashville Christian Advocate, published by the Agents at Nashville; the Richmond Christian Advocate, published at Richmond; the Southern Christian Advocate, published at Charleston; the St. Louis Christian Advocate, published at St. Louis; the Memphis and Arkansas Christian Advocate, published at Memphis; the New Orleans Christian Advocate, published at New Orleans; the Texas Christian Advocate, published at Galveston; the Pacific Methodist, published at San Francisco, California; and the North Carolina Christian Advocate, published at Raleigh.

11. Each of the officers appointed by the General Conference shall be a member of such Annual Conference as he may select with the approbation of the Bishops.

12. The Annual Conferences may, at their next session, choose such of the above named papers as they may adopt, for the organ of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, within their respective bounds, and appoint publishing committees for these papers, to whom the agent, as soon as convenient after the organization of the committees, and being secured against any past or future indebtedness of said papers, shall release, in behalf of the Conference electing, all right and title in such papers, their subscription list, and their office fixtures, and also all claims of the Publishing House against them for advances made heretofore in their behalf. Provided, however, that these papers shall in future devolve no expenses upon the Publishing House, nor involve the funds of the General Church in any liabilities for their debts, which shall be used for the support of Conference depositories. Provided further, that if any one of these papers, now the property of the Church, shall not be thus adopted and received by any Conference, the Agent shall dispose of it at the close of the next volume. These papers shall be published under the style, "Published by a Committee of Ministers for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South;" and the Publishing committee shall report, annually, the fiscal condition of the papers to the Annual Conference, and quadrennially to the General Conference.

13. As this plan looks to the making of small profits by the Publishing House, and as an increase of capital may become necessary for expanding our operations or for cheapening our publications, the Bishops, Agents, and Book Committees, conjointly, are authorized to appeal to the Church, if they deem it necessary, for an annual contribution to the Publishing House by a collection, during a special month, in every congregation within our Church.

Respectfully,

J. B. McFERRIN, Chairman.

Nashville, May 18, 1858.

L. D. Huston presented a memorial from Covington, Ky., which was referred to the committee on Books and Periodicals.

J. E. Edwards presented the exhibit of the Richmond Christian Advocate.

L. M. Lee explained that the reported losses of the paper grew out of the reduction of its subscription price from $2 to $1 50; that the former price had been restored without any loss of subscribers, and the paper was now able to support itself.

The paper was referred to the committee on Books and Periodicals.

W. M. Wightman presented report No. 2 of the committee on the Episcopacy, recommending that no additional Bishops be elected by the present General Conference; which was, on motion, adopted.

R. J. Boyd presented a memorial from sundry lay brethren in the South Carolina Conference, asking for a change of the Discipline allowing a preacher to remain in the same appointment six years, instead of two only.

C. F. Deems moved the reconsideration of the vote by which the General Conference resolved to receive no more petitions or memorials for the change of the Discipline during the present session. The motion was lost.

Bishop Soule requested an official certified copy of the proceedings in relation to the legacy of Mrs. White; which was, on motion of J. E. Evans, ordered to be furnished by the Secretary.

THE ALABAMA RESOLUTION.

The Conference now resumed the consideration of the unfinished business of Saturday, to wit, the consideration of the report on the Alabama Resolution, recommending that the rule of the Discipline against "buying and selling men, women, and children, with the intention of enslaving them," be expunged—the question being on the motion of J. E. Evans for the question on the first item of the report, viz.: That the subject is legitimately before the Conference.

W. A. Smith desired to present a measure which he thought would harmonize the views of all parties on this subject, without compromising any principle; but N. H. Lee, who was entitled to the floor, refused to give him an opportunity, and insisted on making his speech before any thing else should be submitted.

He proceeded, disclaiming any intention to make the impression that there was a border party opposed to another party, and expressing his regret that there should have been such an impression. He said that the matter now under consideration seemed to resolve itself into these two points:

1. Whether, according to the constitution, the Alabama Resolution is legitimately before the General Conference for action.

2. Whether this rule is one of the General Rules in the proper sense, and therefore entitled to the protection of the Restrictive Rules.

N. H. Lee, having the floor, proposed to finish the argument he began yesterday, which was cut off by the adjournment. He recapitulated first what he had said yesterday. His argument was, that in the absence of the Bishop, and any official communication from him, the Annual Conferences were not bound to act; and this body was not authorized in counting them out for non-action in such cases.

It would be a dangerous precedent. There could not be concurrent recommendations without official notification. Any departure from this would invalve the risk of trampling on constitutional law. As a member of the Louisville Conference, he would have been opposed to taking up the subject upon newspaper notification. The very Conference that originated the resolution, contemplated notification by the Bishops. It would be revolutionary to act without such notice; and he regretted to see the doctrine advanced here.

The second question was, Is this slavery rule a rule coming within or under the protection of the Church? Such was the position of Dr. Smith.

W. A. Smith—That was not his position.

N. H. Lee read the report as follows: "Dr. Smith proceeded to show that this general rule was a part of the constitution by a conventional understanding, but not by legitimate constitutional action." It was not constitutional law in the highest sense.

W. A. Smith—Not in such sense as will justify us in an attempt to dignify it above other rules.

N. H. Lee—The direction of the Doctor's discussion was to show that, being beneath the dignity of co-ordinate items, it might be summarily thrust out. We in Kentucky love the Church South, and want to be considered as belonging to it; and what he said was intended to be altogether respectful. Dr. Smith had said that this law was not in the book by constitutional action. This was intended, certainly, to persuade the Conference that the thrusting out of the rule need not be so seriously and formerly done. But, so far as he could understand the subject, the Doctor had made a distinction without a difference: for if it was in the book by a conventional understanding, it was as firmly there as it could be. Whenever and however it was done, it had been often solemnly recognized as a part of the General Rules. He therefore claimed for it a full protection amongst the General Rules; and if the vote for expunging it had not been given and ascertained in a constitutional way, it could not be lawfully expunged now. Dr. Smith had called it a viper. He objected to this, and contended that the rule was a legitimate bantling of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.—Was it not endorsed in Louisville in 1844, and was not Dr. Smith there and so voting?

W. A. Smith—No, sir; I always voted against it.

N. H. Lee—Did he not vote for it—for defining its name in 1854? He then assisted in giving it a name—a meaning.

W. A. Smith—If the brother is alluding to the action of Conference four years ago, I reply that I said in a speech there, which was printed, that it was an absurdity. I have affirmed my position upon this subject so often, sir, that I am really weary of it.

N. H. Lee would advise that the next time the Doctor raised his cane, he be careful, lest, instead of a viper, he kill a bantling of the Church. It was always healthful and safe to recur to first principles in proceedings of this character. But it is said further in this report, that the Doctor "alleged that the principle pursued by the General Conference in retaining this rule in the Discipline was as bad as lying." What was meant by this? Was it charged that the Church South had endorsed what they knew to be false?

H. A. C. Walker, interposing—Brother Lee is replying to what I call a very unfortunate speech of Dr. Smith; but is he arguing the question before us?

N. H. Lee—Yes, sir; for if this rule is not entitled to protection, it might be expunged at once. He would have voted for the definition referred to if he had not been detained out of his place by sickness at the last Conference.

J. B. McFerrin also made a short speech—representing his desire to proceed constitutionally, but adding in the close, that he must vote for taking out the rule, let it come up as it may. He regretted the use of such language. This and Dr. Smith's speech looked too much like adopting the higher doctrine of expediency so rife in all the Church North since 1844.—Let us stick to the rigid interpretation of the Church. This was the doctrine—the glory of the peculiar position of the Southern Church, and we ought to stick to it. Otherwise the moral force of our Conference decisions would be greatly diminished. If the rule be expunged, it ought to be so done as to furnish a basis for harmony and good feeling.

W. A. Smith explained—I feel constrained, sir, to express my concurrence in the opinion of my worthy friend from South Carolina, that mine was a most unfortunate speech, for the reason that it has been so strangely misunderstood in certain quarters. At the same time it must be admitted by my friend from Kentucky, (N. H. Lee,) that it had in it at least one important feature—it furnished him with staple for his speech. But I wish to set myself right. First, I was understood to say that the brethren on the border were tainted with abolitionism. I have disclaimed that, and I wish now again, in the most distinct manner, to disclaim it. I claim, sir, to belong to the border Conferences, in the legitimate sense which the term is used on this floor; and I claim to know as much about the border difficulties as any other on this floor. I said that border Methodists had adhered to the Church South, because they recognized and believed it no part of the right and duty of the Church to legislate on the subject of slavery; and I enlarged on that. I said I did not know how it was with the border Methodists in Kentucky and Missouri, but supposed it was the same way with them there, that the brethren overlooked this in interpreting me. I said, also, that if any brother believed it was not so with them, in my opinion he misunderstood them. Was that assuming that they were either tainted with abolitionism, or that they were uninformed on the subject? I think brethren do them great injustice who assume either that they are tainted or ignorant, and if I were called upon, I would vindicate them on that point. I honestly believe that all our difficulty on the border results from the fact that you have that legislation in your book, and that the only way to get rid of the difficulty is to put that out of the Discipline. Another point, simply of explanation. I declared some days ago my perfect willingness, if a direct vote could be obtained here on the merits of this question, to vote even for the matter to go round again to all the Conferences, provided it went round with such a resolution, on the part of this Conference, as should foreclose all future difficulty in arriving at the result sought to be attained by these proceedings. But, sir, I cannot refrain from remarking, that the speech of my brother, in which there appeared to be something of a disposition to cherish and warm up this viper into life again, and make it hatch another brood to go forth again and wound the peace of the Church, has to some extent unsettled my mind as to that particular.

J. B. McFerrin—(by way of explanation)—I hope the Conference will bear in mind, that I said, If I were forced to vote on this General Rule, I should be compelled to vote it out; but I wished it to be done on constitutional principles. Brother neglected to allow me the benefit of the word "force."

S. Kelly had no disposition to distract the action of the General Conference. He had no controversy here on the subject of slavery. It had been his misfortune to have to preach very much on this subject, having debated the question in almost every town in Western Virginia. The reason why he could not vote for this resolution was this: He could not vote for it because of the unconstitutionality of the position of the question; and he knew that every word of this discussion but increased our difficulty. He was not satisfied that the question was legally before us. The Alabama Conference adopted the mode of notification. If the writs of notice had been legally served in all cases, he should not have objected. He saw not the newspaper notice in Western Virginia. But the writ was there duly served. He was instructed by his Conference to vote here for the Alabama resolution, though in his Annual Conference he voted against it. Four years ago, the General Conference said this article related to the African slave-trade. Before we could get home, the Pittsburg Advocate would tell the people that your General Conference have stricken this from the book, and done it unconstitutionally. Western Virginia had no interest in this question worthy of mention. An ulcer opened too deeply might kill the patient; whereas, if properly treated, it might carry off the deadly virus.

A. L. P. Green—It was not his purpose to say whether this rule ought to go out or not. He spoke to the legal right of Conference to act on this question now. When that was settled, he would not be offended by the action of the body on the other question. He read the law on the subject. There were certain restrictive rules not to be removed in the ordinary way, but in the way as he read from pages, 38, 39, of Discipline, as follows:

"Provided, nevertheless, that upon the concurrent recommendation of three-fourths of all the members of the several Annual Conferences, who shall be present and vote on such recommendation, then a majority of two-thirds of the General Conference succeeding shall suffice to alter any of the above restrictions, excepting the first article; and also whenever such alteration or alterations shall have been first recommended by two-thirds of the General Conference, so soon as three-fourths of the members of all the Annual Conferences shall have concurred as aforesaid, such alteration or alterations shall take effect."

This was all the law on the subject. Every thing for the carrying out of this provision was to be found by implication. There was no difference in the case of the proposition arising in an Annual or in the General Conference. If there were any, the advantage was in favor of the Annual Conference. The Bishops as superintendents were to give notice—to bring forward business. But the business of the Annual Conference was their business, and its members should bring it up. Neither was it required that the Bishops should give notice. In the absence of the Bishop, the Conference makes its own President. This question itself was not laid before the Alabama Conference by a Bishop. Next, we have established a chain of official communication. This act of the Alabama Conference was published in an official organ—a journal belonging to the General Conference, and recognized by the College of Bishops. Thus this resolution was published by eight papers. The Bishop was not called upon to publish the thing in the Annual Conference. If we take the ground that there is no official channel of communication between one Annual Conference and the rest besides the Bishops, it would be to make all our rules as fixed and unchangeable as the laws of the Chinese. He therefore assumed that the notification was entirely legal and complete.

With regard to the three Conferences not voting here: The California Conference did act. They published a paper, in which they said, we will never act on the subject of slavery. The Indiana Mission Conference did receive notice and read it, but forgot to act upon it. The other Conference forgot even to read the notice. One word more. Suppose a State Legislature should fail to elect a Senator, could such a failure paralyze the action of the Senate of the United States? Suppose a single precinct fail to open the polls, would that invalidate the election throughout the country? Further, to show the absurdity of the position of brethren, this book says the General Conference shall consist of one for every fourteen members of each Annual Conference. Upon their interpretation, then, you cannot constitute a General Conference legally until all the members from every Conference are here!

D. R. McAnally—If my friend (Dr. Green) never made a financial mistake, he has now at least made a logical one. I ask attention to this: The question of changing a general rule of the Church occupies a different relation when it originates in an Annual Conference from what it does when it originates in the General Conference. When a question of the character of that now under consideration originates in an Annual Conference, it must have the concurrent recommendation of three-fourths of the Annual Conferences, taken one by one. No one Annual Conference has the right to prescribe for or dictate to another. The Discipline recognizes no prescribed form of intercommunication between the Annual Conferences, and this question cannot come rightly before this body but by the recommendation of all the Annual Conferences, severally and unitedly. But now, with regard to the origination of such a question in the General Conference, the word "severally" is not in the provision, and I will show that it was left out intentionally. When Dr. Fisk, at the head of the proper committee, brought in the report that revised this provision, it had the word "severally" in this place also. But Mr. Tomlinson, of Kentucky, called his attention to the difficulty which would arise from it, (such as Dr. Smith has referred to,) and they struck out the word for these reasons: First, the question, when it originates here, is assumed to have originated with all the Annual Conferences, and that they all have legitimate notice; and secondly, because, when such origination has been effected, and the official notices given, then if two or three small Conferences in the remote sections of our work should fail to have the matter called up, their failure should not vitiate the whole proceeding, inasmuch as it required only three-fourths of the Annual Conferences not taken together.

He proceeded to deprecate epithets, and, indeed, all further discussion of this subject, and to recommend the adoption of something like the substitute proposed yesterday by Mr. Walker—taking up de novo, here in the General Conference, the proposition to expunge the rule, and waiting for the Annual Conferences to confirm and complete it. This could be done in such a manner as to leave no room for doubt about the legality and propriety of the proceeding. This could be done now; but if debate were to continue, he doubted whether the constitutional majority could be obtained.

T. O. Summers—In order to cut short all debate, which I exceedingly deprecate, after the remarks and suggestion just made, I propose, at the suggestion of others, including some of the Bishops, to offer a paper by way of amendment in lieu of the item of the report under consideration. It will not interfere with anybody's private opinions, which is perhaps the sole merit of the substitute. The report, after giving the vote, goes on to state that there is a surplus of fifty-six votes over the requisite constitutional majority. There it stops; and I propose to strike out all beyond, and add words to this effect: That no account be taken of the California, and the Kansas and Indian Mission Conferences, whose proceedings have not been reported. But as there is room for doubt whether we can proceed constitutionally upon the Alabama resolution, and as some of the Bishops have advised against it; therefore,

Resolved, That this General Conference consider it expedient to waive the question of non-action by these three Conferences, and proceed at once to adopt a new proposition to expunge the said General Rule, and pass the same round for the concurrence of the Annual Conferences.

I respectfully, and with much deference, submit that as a substitute; and, if adopted, I shall have another paper to offer.

The substitute was adopted without a division.

H. H. Montgomery now submitted a series of four resolutions, harmonizing with the above.

T. O. Summers—I have not at hand the paper to which I referred. It has a preamble setting forth the facts, etc.

J. G. Bruce moved to postpone the further consideration of the subject till to-morrow, at nine o'clock.

The Secretary now read a preamble and resolution submitted by J. B. McFerrin.

Levi Pearce moved to strike out that part of the latter paper read which relates to the history of this matter getting into the Discipline.

J. B. McFerrin—I have no objection to that.

B. M. Drake—I move to lay brother Montgomery's paper on the table, to enable the Conference to act directly upon brother McFerrin's.

H. H. Montgomery withdrew his resolution.

On motion by Levi Pearce, the historic part of the McFerrin preamble was stricken out.

D. R. McAnally moved further to amend the proposition by striking out the words, "purely civil," and inserting "this question" in lieu.

Bishop Soule—There are only fifteen minutes to the time of adjournment. I need not tell you that you have a very grave question before you. It was said by brother Lee, I believe, that the Northern Church was on a boisterous sea—and why? Why, sir, when the South Church was separated from the North, the North lost the helm of the ship, and no wonder they were tossed. It reminded me of my venerable friend, Dr. Dixon, when he said, it would be for the Northern Church to come back to the old soundings. They got off soundings in the General Conference at New York, and they have been off ever since. But what I desire to say to the Conference is, that as they have so short a time for this matter, it might be better to defer it to another day. I wish to make some remarks myself upon the question, of a historical character, and should like to have the opportunity.

Bishop Paine said that last Saturday he did not commit himself or his colleagues as to the constitutionality or unconstitutionality of this matter. He had suggested if it would not be better to initiate proceedings and send the proposition round again, as that course would be likely to harmonize the feelings of all. Dr. Summers had, perhaps, involved himself and colleagues, by saying, "some of the Bishops." Something was drawn up. He had not the paper; but it was substantially what had been read here. He thought there would be no difficulty about landing the ship—landing it as the brethren wish. He saw no disposition to act in hot haste on the part of his brethren of the South.

Bishop Andrew corrobated the statement of Dr. Summers last Saturday with reference to the Episcopal consultation, and his own opinion given. If that early intimation had been followed, we should have saved two or three days' debate. But he was glad to see the Conference looking in that direction now, etc.

J. E. Evans—If he had understood the Bishops' decision, as now announced, he should not have made the remarks he did.

W. A. Smith, by unanimous consent, also read and submitted a paper, to carry out what he now understood to be the object sought.

On motion of C. K. Marshall, it was ordered that T. O. Summers, W. A. Smith, J. B. McFerrin, D. R. McAnally, H. H. Montgomery, and S. Kelly, be appointed a committee to digest and arrange the chief merits of the several propositions now submitted, and report to-morrow at nine o'clock.

After the announcement of special notifications and preaching appointments,

The Conference adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, May 19.

Bishop Pierce called the Conference to order at half-past eight o'clock, the opening exercises being conducted by Rev. S. J. Davies.

The journal of yesterday was read and authenticated.

L. M. Lee, from the Committee on Itinerancy, to whom was referred the resolution to inquire into the expediency of appointing laymen to the management of the financial interests of the Church, reported (No. 6) that it was, in their judgment, inexpedient to make any change on that subject; but the committee proposed to insert the words "and educational," after the word "missionary," on page 236 of the Discipline.

The report lies over.

THE PRESIDING ELDERSHIP.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial from Portsmouth, Va., asking for the obliteration of the office of Presiding Elder, or its discontinuance in the older Conferences, submitted their report, (No. 7,) as follows:

The Committee on Itinerancy, to whom was referred the memorial from Portsmouth, Va., asking for the obliteration of the office of Presiding Elder from our ecclesiastical system, or for its discontinuance in the older Conferences, having given due deliberation to the subject, respectfully represent that while we hold the right of petition as a sacred right, and treat it, on all subjects and on all occasions, with the respect due to its sacredness; yet we do not find, in any facts brought to our notice, or in any reasons given in the memorial itself, any grounds for the charge in our system of government sought by the petitioners sufficient to authorize or justify so extreme a measure: that the object asked for is not, in the judgment of your committee, desired by the great body of the Church; and believing, moreover, that the office of Presiding Elder is one of great value to the Church, important as an element of our system, and material to its practical operations, and therefore cannot be abolished or abated without detriment to the prudential regulations and spiritual interests of the Church, we commend to your body the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the request of the memorialists be not concurred in.

Respectfully submitted,

LEROY M. LEE, Chairman.

L. M. Lee moved its adoption; the motion was agreed to, and the report was adopted accordingly.

CONFERENCE FUNDS.

L. M. Lee, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial in regard to uniformity in the application of the Conference funds, submitted their report, (No. 8,) to the following effect:

The Committee on Itinerancy, to whom was referred the duty of considering the "differences in the several Annual Conferences in the application of conference funds," and report a plan for uniform action in the Conferences, having had the same under consideration, respectfully report, that they find no necessity for new or additional legislation on this subject, and recommend to your body the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the whole matter be left, as heretofore, to such action as the Annual Conferences may deem proper to the subject.

Respectfully submitted,

LEROY M. LEE, Chairman.

The report and resolution were adopted.

ADMISSION INTO THE TRAVELING CONFERENCE.

L. M. Lee, from the same committee, to whom had been referred the duty of inquiring into the expediency of so altering the Discipline on pages 61 to 65, and 58, as to require examination for admission on trial into the traveling connection, instead of, as now, receiving them into full connection, also submitted their report, (No. 9,) to the effect that, having examined the subject, and believing the change desirable, both from the propriety of the case and its importance in fixing the character of the ministry, the committee recommend a change of the Discipline in sec. iii., pages 39, 40, so as to include those who are to be received and continued on trial and to be received in full connection; and that the phraseology of the Discipline in other places be so changed as to be conformed to this alteration and arrangement of the 8th section; and the committee submitted and recommended the adoption of three resolutions, carrying out the objects set forth in the report.

J. B. Payne moved that the report and resolutions be referred to the committee on Revisals, which he subsequently withdrew.

L. M. Lee—I am very anxious to see this adopted, and I think I could give substantial reasons for it. Whilst I do not covet to measure arms with any brother on the subject, I certainly would not shrink from a passage to accomplish this object. But I suppose this is not the time for that. I move that the subject be laid on the table, and made the special order of the day for Friday, 10 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

G. W. Langhorne—I move that the report be printed in the Daily Advocate.

J. B. McFerrin—Permit me again to request the brethren not to make their motions to print these reports before adoption, unless they be of vast importance. Several reports have been adopted by the Conference, and they must be printed, because they are now authoritative. These reports, as they shall be adopted, will be coming in throughout the session, and fill up the columns of the Daily. We have not room for all.

W. A. Smith—We have subscribed for this Daily; and our reason for subscribing was, that we wanted to know what the General Conference might be doing. But it gives us little or no information of this kind. Look at the paper this morning. They still keep standing the list of delegates and the standing committees, and they insert communications from abroad, about which our people care but little, or know already. Our people want to know what measures are submitted and brought up here. This object has not yet been accomplished to any material extent, and, without some improvement in this respect, in my humble view the paper will be esteemed abroad as a humbug. The reason given for this failure to print is, that if we publish propositions, many readers will understand that they are passed. I beg leave to say, in behalf of the people I represent, that they are as competent to read a newspaper, and to distinguish between what is submitted and adopted, as any other people. [A voice—So say I.] I hope this thing will be published.

J. B. McFerrin—If the Conference regard the Daily Advocate as a humbug, I hope they will excuse me from editing it. Sir, I have submitted this matter to the judgment of others. I have consulted wise, judicious men, men older than myself—safe men—and I have been seriously advised by them, as far as I have any agency in this matter, not to put into the columns of the Daily Advocate every thing proposed to be done here. I have been advised not to do so, for the reason that it would make a heterogeneous mass of something not easily named. Dr. Smith has the honor, I know, of representing a very remarkably intelligent community. Nobody doubts the intelligence of the people of Virginia. Yet it is notorious that even this General Conference (and who doubts the intelligence of the Conference?) is very frequently at a loss to know what was done here, as it might be but yesterday; and it is not at all uncommon for a matter to have to be called up again, reconsidered, reinvestigated, and elaborated over and over, before the General Conference can understand and appreciate fully what they themselves have done.—Again, as I said before, it is impossible for the Daily Advocate to contain all the speeches, and all that is proposed to be done here. Dr. Smith said the object of the Daily was to let our people know what we do. That is what I understood in the beginning, and that is what I as editor of the paper, during my brief connection with it, propose to do. When the Conference shall pass upon any matter, adopt any resolution or report, making alteration, modification, or change of the Discipline, then I propose to put such matter into the paper. But if the brethren desire to give the thing another direction, I am willing, and let the important acts of the session lie over a month hence.

W. A. Smith—What do we do here? We receive such a proposition in the following words. That is one thing we do; and I want such things published, that our people who take the paper may get what they have paid for.

G. W. Langhorne—It is only in a very few instances that I would propose to print in advance of action; but here is an article proposing to strike at the foundations of our economy. It is an important paper, and I desire to have it before me in order to prepare my objections, if there should be grounds for objections.

The motion to print was lost.

GENERAL RULE ON SLAVERY.

The order of the day now came up: the report of the committee appointed yesterday to digest and arrange the chief merits of the several propositions that had been submitted to the Conference touching the General Rule on Slavery.

T. O. Summers, chairman of that committee, read the report, as follows:

Report of the Committee on expunging the General Rule forbidding the buying and selling of men, women and children, with an intention to enslave them.

The committee appointed to report a preamble and resolutions in regard to the expunction of the rule in the General Rules forbidding "the buying and selling of men, women and children, with an intention to enslave them," beg leave to report the following as the result of their deliberations:

WHEREAS, The rule in the General Rules of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, forbidding "the buying and selling of men, women and children, with an intention to enslave them," is ambiguous in its phraseology, and liable to be construed as antagonistic to the institution of slavery, in regard to which the Church has no right to meddle, except in enforcing the duties of masters and servants, as set forth in the Holy Scriptures: and whereas, a strong desire for the expunction of said rule has been expressed in nearly all parts of our ecclesiastical connection: therefore,

Resolved, 1. By the delegates of the Annual Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in General Conference assembled, that the rule forbidding "the buying and selling of men, women and children, with an intention to enslave them," be expunged from the General Rules of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Resolved, 2. That in adopting the foregoing resolution this Conference expresses no opinion in regard to the African slave-trade, to which the rule in question has been "understood" to refer.

Resolved, 3. That the Bishops, or others presiding in the Annual Conferences, be and are hereby instructed to lay the foregoing resolutions before each of the Annual Conferences at their next ensuing sessions, for their concurrent action.

Resolved, 4. That the President of each Annual Conference shall be required, as soon as possible after the adjournment of the Conference, to report to the Book Editor the vote on the resolution to expunge the rule in question; and when the Book Editor shall have received returns from all the Annual Conferences voting on the said resolution, he shall lay the information before one of the Bishops; and if it shall be found that there is a concurrence of three-fourths of all the members of the Annual Conferences present, and voting on the resolution in favor of the expunging of the rule, the Bishop shall direct the Book Editor to expunge it accordingly.

Resolved, 5. That if any Annual Conference or Conferences refuse or neglect to vote on the aforesaid resolution, the members of such Conference or Conferences shall not be counted for or against the expunging of the rule.

Resolved 6. That the publication of the foregoing preamble and resolutions in the Church papers shall be considered a sufficient notification of the action of this Conference in the premises.

Resolved, 7. That the Bishops are respectfully requested to set forth in the Pastoral Address the platform occupied by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, on the relation of masters and servants, agreeably to the principles contained in the foregoing preamble and resolutions.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

T. O. SUMMERS, Chairman.

Nashville, May 18, 1858.

C. K. Marshall moved that the vote on the adoption of the report be immediately taken without discussion.

The motion was opposed; several amendments were offered, none of which prevailed; and Mr. Marshall, at length, withdrew the motion.

Bishop Soule gave a historical account of the General Rule in question.

D. S. Doggett confessed himself troubled in spirit. He thought the second resolution looked to the approval of the African slave-trade.

T. O. Summers explained the views of the committee, and their reasons for reporting said resolution—to the effect that the committee wished to harmonize the action of this Conference with that of the last General Conference, as reported in the Journal, p. 300. The resolution was reported in order that the present action might not be misconstrued.

A miscellaneous discussion arose, somewhat too chaotic for stenography; during which the ayes and noes were called for on the first resolution of the report.

Permission was asked, and granted, for absent delegates to record their votes hereafter.

The list of delegates being read, the vote was as follows:

AYES—Alexander, Robert; Anderson, J.; Anderson, W. H.; Atkins, J.; Baldwin, S. D.; Barringer, W.; Bassett, W. W.; Betts, C.; Blackwell, M. J.; Blue, C. B.; Borlog, J.; Boswell, T. L.; Boyd, R. Several brethren explained the reasons of their votes, as follows:

J. G. Bruce—Four years ago the General Conference decided, by a very large vote, that the rule referred exclusively to the African slave-trade, as prohibited by the constitution and laws of the United States. In view of that interpretation, authoritatively given, I could not, without violence to my own convictions of propriety, vote otherwise than for the resolution striking out.

alarm about losing Church control. If we turn to the 23d Article of Religion, we shall find there that the Church retains its proper authority over its members with reference to this subject. We therefore, by this act, simply maintain our original position—that of having nothing to do with the subject of slavery more than any other civil matter over which the laws of the country are extended. I beg the brethren therefore to be easy. There is nothing here to warrant any construction looking towards a repeal of the laws of the United States in regard to the African slave-trade.—There is no occasion for sensitiveness, nor for any legislation on the subject anywhere else. No harm has been done to anybody to-day.—We have only set ourselves right on a vexed question; and we may safely defy all the efforts of our enemies, North and South, to damage the Church for taking a clear position on this subject.

H. A. C. Walker—Would it be in order for brethren who voted in the negative on the second resolution to have their votes recorded? Some of them have expressed such a desire.

W. Closs—There is no record of that vote.

G. W. Langhorne—I have not authorized Brother Walker to make such a motion.

CLASS MEETINGS.

The Conference now took up the special order of the day, namely, the report of the select committee to whom was referred the memorial of sundry persons in the State of South Carolina, praying for a change in the rules in regard to Class Meetings, so that attendance thereon be made advisory instead of compulsory; and the resolution to restore the classes to their original size of twelve.

The said report was read at length, recommending the adoption of three resolutions—

1. That the prayer of the memorialists be not granted.
2. That the Annual Conferences look into this matter, and hold their membership to a strict accountability to the existing rules.
3. That local preachers and class-leaders be urged to hold class meetings wherever it is practicable.

W. P. Ratcliffe proposed to amend the report, by striking out the second resolution, and substituting words to the following effect:

Resolved, That the Bishops inquire strictly concerning the administration by the preachers in the several Annual Conferences in reference to class meetings, and that the several Annual Conferences hold the preachers to a strict accountability on that subject; and that we will sustain the Bishops in their efforts to have the existing rules carried out.

He made a speech in support of this proposition, and also regarding the whole premises, which, in consideration of our limited space, he said he was not careful to have reported.

C. F. Deems submitted a paper by way of substitute for the report and amendment, embracing three resolutions, to the effect—

1. That the regulations in the Discipline on the subject of class meetings be retained.
2. That all that which makes attendance on class meetings obligatory be rescinded.
3. That our ministers be earnestly requested to multiply the number of voluntary classes.

These resolutions were signed by C. F. Deems, J. G. Bruce, and S. D. Baldwin.

L. Campbell—Does not that paper propose a change in the restrictive rules? If so, it must be sent round for the concurrence of the Annual Conferences.

C. F. Deems—That is contemplated

E. E. Wiley—I move to lay the substitute on the table.

R. T. Heflin—If in order, I move to lay the whole subject on the table.

The Chair (Bishop Kavanaugh)—there is a brother on the floor.

C. F. Deems—I think, sir, this is probably the most important subject now left for this General Conference to decide. I therefore desire the body to act with great care and deliberation; for which ever way we may decide, we are sure to produce a strong impression upon the whole body of the Church. It is now known that the question has come before this General Conference, and the result of our action upon this gravest of all but one of the questions expected to come before us, must have its effect on the Church at large. I claim, sir, to be as devoted a class meeting pastor as any man on this floor. I claim to be as firmly in favor of Methodist classes, and to owe as much to them, under God, as any other man can claim. I have introduced this substitute, not to damage the class meeting institution, but to advance it—to increase its hold upon us, and to extend its benefits as much as possible. I wish the brethren to understand that. It being fairly premised that my object is to promote class meetings, we shall probably come to a better understanding.

Those of us who have signed this substitute are opposed to the adoption of the report for reasons like these: In the first place, the report admits that we ought to adopt such measures as seem likely to meet the exigencies of the case in all its bearings; but it does not meet the exigencies of the case so far forth as our lay brethren are concerned. The simple question is, how shall we induce our people to embrace the benefits of this institution? The report, I submit, wholly avoids that question. A second and still more important objection to the report is this: It assumes that by far the larger portion desiring a change are amongst our ministers, and that it is desired by comparatively but few laymen. But this is quite a mistake. I assume, on the contrary, that far fewer ministers than laymen desire this change, in proportion: that whilst we look at the proportion between the number of ministers and the number of laymen, there are more laymen in proportion who desire, not to abrogate class meetings—I am very deeply opposed to that—but who desire to have something done. There is certainly a deeper interest felt in this matter among laymen; and, so far as I can ascertain their views, they believe the adoption of the voluntary system is the best that can be done. Then, on the same page of the report, the committee assume that the decline of class meetings is far more attributable to the fault of preachers than people. Where is the evidence of that? The preachers all will tell you how they have labored for the advancement of all our institutions. This, also, is nothing but an assumption; and I will venture to say that if this admitted decline be the result of any fault, it does not lie with preachers or people, but in the manner in which we endeavor to force upon our people an institution, good in itself, provided we could make it voluntary. I believe it to be a good human institution, and that this decline comes from the nature of our rules. Then, again, throughout the report there seems to be a line of reflection upon the ministry. It is an easy thing for us here to talk about our brethren down there in the Annual Conferences, and to say to them: "If you will but do your duty," etc. Those brethren have just as good a right to retort upon us.—Why do we not rather propose a remedy for what we all feel to be an evil?

Then I object to the report, because it mixes this question up with other things known to be obnoxious. It attaches to it a very ugly word—smuts it with the word "radical"—radical changes of the constitution and economy of the Church! What great question in the Church has ever been settled in this way with any great degree of unanimity? I consider, sir, that it is exceedingly unfair to mix up an innocent question with bad names—put it into bad company; for in this question there is certainly no radical change proposed in any bad sense of the word. The speech of my brother who preceded me was a very radical speech, in a good ... He was for going down into the very hearts of men on this subject. Why did not the committee face the question, and give it a fair exhibition? Then, in another place, it puts the argument very unfairly. It says that those who are for voluntary classes argue that there is no express warrant for class meetings in Sacred Scripture. I never heard that argument; but, if I understand the argument, it is against making attendance on class meetings a test of Church membership—not that such meetings have no warrant in Sacred Scripture. I never saw the man who could put his finger on the scripture that would justify such a test of membership. We all admit that the class is a good institution, having authority in the Holy Scriptures. We all agree to have class meetings, and make them as useful as possible; but the whole question turns upon the point: Have we the right to make attendance obligatory? The report assumes that we have, and goes on to argue. The other side assume that we might as well require a man to countenance the Bible Society and make that a test. The committee's logic would go that length, and by it you might exclude a man from the Church because he would refuse to become a member of the American Bible Society or of the Missionary Society.

It being now half-past twelve,

A. H. Mitchell made an ineffectual motion to continue the session ten minutes.

W. W. Bennett gave notice of the desire of a photographic artist to take a picture of the General Conference in session, and it was suggested that the time be set for him to take his picture to-morrow at 12 M.

After proaching announcement and other notifications, the Conference adjourned.

Benediction by Bishop Kavanaugh.

THURSDAY, May 20.

The Conference met at half-past eight o'clock, A. M. the opening exercises being conducted by Rev. M. Yell, of Texas—Bishop Kavanaugh in the chair.

The journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Bishop Andrew was now called to the chair, and the committees were called.

ADMINISTRATION AND CHARACTER OF THE BISHOPS.

Wm. M. Wightman, from the committee on the Episcopacy, said he was ready, on the part of said committee, to present their report on the administration of the Bishops; but, he added, it was preferred by the committee that this report be presented to the Conference in secret session, with closed doors.

A. M. Shipp moved that the report be received with closed doors.

J. F. Hughes moved that the hour for hearing this report with closed doors be set for three o'clock this afternoon.

W. C. Dandy—There is an appointment for a meeting of laymen here at three o'clock, to consider the interests of the Publishing House.

Bishop Early—I do not perhaps know all the reasons of the committee for proposing a secret session, and therefore I cannot answer in full. But I will take this occasion to say, that if it is on account of any thing that relates to me, or to my administration, I do not ask for closing the door. I ask for the light, every step I take. This is only as far as I am concerned. I have no reference at all to other prudential reasons which may have actuated the committee. I believe in prudence in these matters. But as far as it applies to me, I beg not only all the light of facts, but all the observation I can get. The settled practice has been, as a general thing, where a man is implicated, he himself shall judge as to whether there shall be secrecy.—For others matters, you can take your own course; but so far as I am concerned, in this Conference or anywhere else, I invite public inspection. I hope there is no misunderstanding of my words. I do not know all the reasons for this application. My observations apply to myself alone.

W. M. Wightman—The subject of the report, for the most part, respects Bishop Early's administration, and involves matters of complaint. You sent the matter to the committee in the form of a charge and complaint against Bishop Early, and, of course, you expected a report upon it. And over and above the matters contained in the particular paper referred, there are other points of complaint which the committee have embodied in their report. Now it is the preference of the committee, in view of the character of their report, that the whole subject should be presented and considered with closed doors.—But then, of course, they defer in this matter to the preferences of Bishop Early. If he should prefer the other course, I am instructed to offer no objection. But if it is a matter of indifference with him, it is a matter of preference with the committee to proceed with closed doors.

A. M. Shipp—I withdraw the motion.

Bishop Early—I was told, two or three days ago, that closed doors were desirable, that it was desirable to organize a committee of the Whole Conference to look into those matters and see if they could not be satisfactorily explained: and to that I made no objection. But if I am to be implicated by any act of this Conference, I claim that the cause and the circumstances shall all be public. When I went before the committee, I knew the design and character of the committee, and that they did not design to damage me, but only to report matters to the Conference. But if another committee is to be appointed, before whom I am to be implicated or degraded, as the case may be—though I do not expect that—if any taint is to follow, I want the thing public. I want the preachers outside, as well as those inside, should know the whole case.

The Chair—(Bishop Andrew)—The case will be first considered in committee of the Whole.

W. M. Wightman—It was the wish of the committee that their report on this whole matter should be considered in committee of the Whole, with closed doors. But it was also understood, subsequently, that Bishop Early and his friends were opposed to this, and that was distinctly stated to the committee. I can safely say, Mr. President, and I can assure every member here, that nothing but the kindest feelings of regard and respect for our venerable friend pervades our hearts. We all wish that these difficulties which have come upon us may be all adjusted in a manner satisfactory to the parties concerned, and safe to the Church. One advantage which the committee saw in this project of a committee of the Whole was, that the specific and particular mention of facts and circumstances would not go upon the Journal of the General Conference. Suppose, for example, that this Committee of the Whole should come to a favorable result, and bring in a resolution, That, in view of all the facts in the premises, and of explanations, concessions, and pledges of Bishop Early, we recommend to the General Conference that his character pass, then that resolution would be brought before this body, and go upon the Journal as adopted, and that would end the matter. This is the reason—with many, the main reason—for favoring the idea of considering this thing in committee of the Whole. I thought it a matter of indifference so far as the committee was concerned; but defer entirely to Bishop Early and his friends.

W. A. Smith—With a view of testing this matter, I move that when Conference adjourn, it shall be to meet this afternoon at three o'clock, in committee of the Whole, on executive business, with closed doors; and that the chairman of the Episcopal committee be instructed to submit his report to the committee of the Whole at that hour. If Bishop Early prefers a different course, I am sure the Conference will conform to his wishes, and I will withdraw the motion.

C. K. Marshall—(in view of the appointment in the hall this afternoon)—Would it not be agreeable to Dr. Smith to do this business to-morrow?

C. Betts—I move an amendment: that we now resolve the committee of the Whole, on executive business with closed doors.

C. K. Marshall preferred 10 o'clock.

W. A. Smith—Bro. Marshall's object would be defeated by closing the doors at 10 o'clock.—He desires to accommodate the galleries. The citizens, knowing nothing of our order to close the doors at ten, would be coming in, and there would be much more inconvenience than to close the doors now.

C. K. Marshall—I withdraw the amendment.

W. W. Bennett—I object to closing the doors against Bishop Early's desire.

L. Rosser—I rise to propose a substitute for all that has been presented. This is not a private matter. Though it has not been proclaimed publicly, yet it is known; and I see no reason why the public should be excluded. Let this case come up fairly. Let the report be acted upon in the light of day. Let the Conference proceed with the presentation of the report, and the evidence on which we are to act. I see no occasion for executive session, and I propose, as a substitute for all motions, that the report be now read, and that we proceed at once to consider the case.

A. L. P. Green—I believe that, according to analogy, we have to open the doors. The Discipline requires closed doors in cases implicating an Elder, and I suppose a Bishop as well.

B. M. Drake—I understand that Bishop Early prefers the open Conference, and I hope the substitute will carry.

Bishop Early—I beg that brethren will not misunderstand me in this matter. I say emphatically, that I am not willing to close the doors now, when it is announced that there are charges against me that may require concessions and pledges: I say when this is announced in the presence of the galleries, I am unwilling to turn them out for examinations of those charges. If you had come at once into secret session, I should not have said a word against it. But here, in the face of the public, and of men whom I love and for whose opinions I have the deepest regard, I do hope the Conference will not compromit me in such a manner.

W. A. Smith—I concur entirely with the Bishop, and withdraw my motion.

The substitute motion was then agreed to.

The Chair—Let the report come in.

The report was then read by W. M. Wightman. It proceeds to pass the character and approve the administration and official conduct of Bishop Soule, Bishop Andrew, Bishop Paine, Bishop Pierce, Bishop Kavanaugh; and to relieve the senior Bishop (Soule) from all duties beyond his remaining strength.

With regard to Bishop Early, the committee report certain charges against his administration, preferred by members of the Mississippi and Tennessee Conferences—charges simply involving complaints against the manner in which he conducts the business of the Annual Conferences, but in no wise implicating his moral or Christian character. The committee not being able to agree as to this matter, a majority report the papers, and beg leave to refer the subject to the judgment of the General Conference.

S. Kelley presented a counter report, from a minority of the same committee, signed by himself, N. Scarritt, and D. B. Nicholson, recommending that the character of Bishop Early pass.

On motion of T. W. Dorman, that part of the report of the majority of the committee which relates to the other Bishops was adopted.

J. F. Hughes moved the adoption of that part of the report which suggests the reference of the law decision in the case of J. Mucleman to the College of Bishops for final adjudication.

H. N. McTyeire and W. Closs opposed the motion.

J. E. Evans moved to amend the report by striking out the words, "are of opinion that the Bishop did not rule, in this particular instance, according to the Discipline."

L. Campbell and F. G. Ferguson hoped the matter would go to the College of Bishops for final settlement.

Bishop Early—I beg you to recollect, that while the committee ask for your opinion, they have given their own.

Bishop Paine desired to know by what authority the Conference would send the question to the Bishops. It was stretching beyond the law made at the last General Conference. According to that law, the Bishop could decide such a question in an Annual Conference; but we were not now sitting in that capacity.

T. N. Gardner agreed with Bishop Paine, and thought that such action would set the Conference in a ridiculous attitude before the world. He held that this General Conference was competent to decide all questions of law, not only in statutory matters, but also in questions affecting the constitution.

A. L. P. Green did not see that we could proceed with the question in the present shape.—The only power the General Conference had was to change the law enacted at the last General Conference in relation to Episcopal decisions in Annual Conferences. He read the law from the Disciple, and added: We have reversed the decision of the Mississippi Conference in the case of J. Maclennan: we have protected the brother, and foreclosed further action.

W. A. Smith said, that a report would come up in due time which would settle the great question which brethren had now started. He moved to lay this part of the report for the present on the table.

E. E. Wiley moved an amendment, that Bishop Early be affectionately requested to take a superannuated relation, and that his character pass.

B. M. Drake hoped that motion would be withdrawn. Such action would be unjust to the Bishop. We had heard all on one side, and nothing on the other.

J. G. Jones begged leave to read a letter from J. Maclennan, withdrawing the charge of maladministration against Bishop Early, on the ground that the reversal of the decision of the Mississippi Conference on his case had settled the question.

G. W. Langhorne was astonished at Bro. Wiley's resolution. Who believed Bishop Early superannuated? Should he be requested to take a false relation, and without giving him an opportunity to wipe off the stain that had been cast upon his unsullied character? He scouted the idea, and moved to lay the resolution on the table.

E. E. Wiley hoped Bro. Langhorne did not think he intended to cut the Bishop off from the privilege of explanation or defence. He supposed the Bishop would have an opportunity to say all that he desired to say to the Conference.

G. W. Carter said the committee had declined recommending any course of action to the Conference, and yet they had expressed an opinion, without assuming the responsibility of a formal resolution. He thought this an exceptionable quality of the report.

Several amendments were offered, and much discussion ensued, in which Drs. Smith, Wightman, Boring, Myers, and others, took part; after which,

Bishop Early was heard at length, in a very full and candid examination of and answer to the specifications in the papers reported.

Before he had concluded, the time for adjournment having nearly arrived, the subject was passed over without coming to any resolution.

W. W. Bennett suggested that this was the hour appointed yesterday for the artist, Mr. Hughes, to take his picture of the Conference in session.

So, after reading the current notifications for preaching, etc.,

On motion of G. W. Langhorne, the Conference adjourned.

Benediction by Bishop Andrew.

FRIDAY, MAY 21.

Conference opened at the usual hour, Bishop Andrew in the chair.

W. J. Parks conducted the devotions of the morning.

The minutes of yesterday were read and approved.

Bishop Paine now took the chair, and called for reports from committees.

DUTIES OF THE BISHOPS.

W. M. Wightman, from the committee on Episcopacy, submitted their report, (No. 4,) recommending a change in chap. ii, sec. 5, question 3, of the book of Discipline, striking out the whole of the 7th answer after nn including the word "whon" at the foot of page 49, and inserting in lieu thereof something like the following: "And in all cases so decided, either party to the controversy, or the Annual Conference, shall have the right of appeal to the College of Bishops. In all cases of such appeals, it shall be the duty of the Annual Conference to send up full and complete transcripts of all the evidence in the case, together with the opinion of the Bishop. The College shall again decide the case and the decision so made shall be the law of the Church as to the questions of law involved. The opinions of the Bishops shall be in writing, and published, if the Bishops think proper, provided nothing herein shall be so construed as to affect the mode of trial on the 5th restrictive rule."

The report lies over.

THE SOUTHERN METHODIST PUBLISHING HOUSE.

J. B. McFerrin, from the committee on Books and Periodicals, submitted their report (No. 6) on the subject of the endowment of the Southern Methodist Publishing House—sundry ministers and laymen being present and consenting.

J. B. McFerrin—I presume the report had better lie over till the Conference shall have taken action on the report regulating the Depository system.

The report lies over.

JACOB WHITESIDE AND OTHERS.

J. B. McFerrin, from the same committee, submitted their report, (No. 7,) embracing the following:

WHEREAS, It appears that Jacob Whiteside and others, of the Washita Conference, have strictly pursued the course prescribed to claimants; therefore,

Resolved, 1 That the Book Agents be authorized to pay this claim in books, it being understood that the agent of the claimants was willing to have a settlement in this way.

Resolved, 2. That other claims submitted to the committee be referred to the Book Agents for settlement, under the general law of 1854, prescribing the manner in which these claims shall be allowed.

J. B. McFerrin—The committee spent considerable time investigating the subject reported in those resolutions, and differed in sentiment to some extent; but by a pretty large majority—perhaps by a unanimous vote—they finally determined to offer the resolutions set forth. It would be well, perhaps, for the General Conference to look into the law covering the case.—It is understood that these claims were presented to the Book Agents during the interval since the last session of the General Conference.—These claimants from the Washita Conference having met the requirements of the law, the committee did not feel warranted in putting claimants who had not complied with the law on the same footing.

The first resolution was adopted.

D. R. McAnally knew of one particular Conference where claimants did all they possibly could to meet the requirements of the law.—There were a large number of claimants in that Conference; and when they did all they could, it seemed to him they ought to be placed on as favorable a basis as those of the Washita Conference who met the letter of the law.

E. M. Marvin preferred that the second resolution should lie over for the present. He desired to present certain views on the question of its adoption, and was not now prepared.—He moved that it lie on the table for the present.

The motion was agreed to.

TRACT SOCIETY.

J. B. McFerrin, from the same committee, submitted their report, No. 8, to the effect that, having maturely considered again the matter incorporated in their report, No. 4, the committee beg leave to report the same back as the most feasible plan they can suggest, and recommend the adoption of the following:

Resolved, 1. That the Secretaryship of the Tract Society be abolished.

Resolved, 2. That the Rev. Dr. Hamilton be requested to remain in connection with the Society, for the purposes of winding up, till the first of January, 1859.

J. Hamilton—It has been my opinion that the parent Society ought to be continued, and, of course the Secretaryship. It would have an embarrassing effect to dissolve the Society at once. It would cause the loss of more than $5000 outstanding.

J. B. McFerrin—The report does not propose to abolish the Society.

J. Hamilton—Well, then, have a Secretary, by all means—somebody to act. Put it into the hands of some one who can give attention to it. If you are not careful, you will very greatly injure the cause by pursuing this course.

T. W. Dorman—We have made arrangements, and can very well dispense with the Secretaryship, as will be seen when the report of the Book committee with reference to this shall come up. Dr. Hamilton is requested to remain and wind up matters in his hands.

J. E. Edwards—Is it proposed that the Secretaryship be continued to the end of the present Conference year?

J. B. McFerrin—No, sir. The committee do not propose to dissolve the Tract Society, and have offered no resolution to that effect. The object is merely to discontinue the office of Secretary, as it has been in existence for nearly four years.

A. L. P. Green—I must confess that the whole of this business strikes me as rather odd. I do not believe, myself, that the Tract Society ought to be given up. I have not looked into the facts, as the committee have, and am not therefore so well prepared to judge with regard to this matter. I know this much, however, that in any new business widely spreading itself out in the course of a few years, and having connected with it a number of persons, agents, duties, liabilities, and all that, for the first year or two there will be large outstanding debts created. It is known to business men, that after a thing of this sort is fairly launched, and the maximum amount of its liabilities has come, the liabilities will not be likely to increase as before; because of the balances—bills receivable will be coming in to liquidate bills payable. I think, sir, we are in too great haste to discontinue this Society. I would prefer a report like this: That Dr. Hamilton be continued in his present position of Secretary till he shall wind up the business in his hands. It is impossible for him to wind up by the first of January.

On motion by J. B. McFerrin, the report was laid on the table for the present.

BOOK AGENTS.

J. B. McFerrin, from the same committe, submitted their report, No. 9, in reference to the resolution of F. E. Pitts and J. B Payne, for inquiry into the propriety of selecting the Book Agents of the Church from amongst laymen, concluding with a resolution that it is inexpedient to act on the subject, and asked to be discharged from its consideration.

The report was adopted.

CATECHISM OF DOCTRINES, POLITY, ETC.

J. B. McFer... from the same committee, to whom was referred the resolution of C. D. Oliver and G. W. Carter, proposing the appointment of a committee to prepare a Catechism, setting forth the doctrines, polity, etc., of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, submitted their report, No. 10, recommending the following:

Resolved, That the Book Agent be requested to have such a work prepared and issued as soon as practicable.

J. B. McFerrin—It will be remembered that Bro. Carter and Bro. Oliver offered a resolution, which was adopted, requiring the Book Committee to inquire into the expediency of having prepared and published, at as early a day as possible, a Catechism, setting forth the history, doctrines and polity of the Church; and the committee here report that the General Conference request the Book Agent to have such a work produced.

C. D. Oliver—I have, as a pastor, seen the need of such a book. A great many persons know nothing of the usages of our Church—such as class-meetings, and their advantages; the probationary state, infant baptism, etc. I have often felt the necessity for such a work; but whether it would be better to commit the work to the hands of an individual or a committee, I do not know.

Bishop Soule—I beg to say that this resolution embraces a very important subject—very important indeed; and the Conference will recollect that if it pass, the book will come out under their sanction and authority. I can only say, take heed what you do. It is a very important work to prepare a book like that—to go into the whole history, the doctrins and government of the Church; all that pertains to the Church.

H. N. McTyeire—I should be happy to see the intention of the report carried out; but should be opposed to it without an amendment. The amendment I propose is to this effect: That, when it shall be edited by our Book Editor and approved by the Bishops, then the Book Agent shall publish it. I want it guarded, not only as to its literature, but I want it guarded in doctrine. I submit this as an amendment, and shall rejoice when such a work shall be forthcoming.

J. Hamilton—I should think it better that such a work be approved first, before it is edited.

T. O. Summers—The Wesleyans have such a work as this, adopted to their peculiar economy.

J. E. Evans—It is proper to say that no book can come out, under our law, without the approbation of the Book Editor.

J. B. McFerrin—The committee would be willing to accept any thing that way.

F. E. Pitts—I propose that the General Conference appoint a committee of four or five to aid the Book Editor in getting up the work, which shall afterwards be submitted to the Bishops.

The Chair—That is not an amendment to the amendment.

A. L. P. Green—I think we had better not leave this matter to the discretion of the Book Agent, to select his man to help compile the work. I think that this Conference perhaps would be quite as competent to select the man, and that it is useless to select a committee. If the work is to be done, it will be done by some one man; and it would be a delicate matter to put it into the hands of an Agent to select this man. I move, sir, as a substitute for what is before you, that Bishop Pierce be requested to furnish the manuscript for such a work as that called for; and that the work be submitted to the other Bishops, and when approved by them, handed over for publication.

C. K. Marshall—I propose this, which I will read for information: That the Publishing Committee be authorized to select such competent brethren throughout the Church as would be willing to prepare such parts of the work as the committee shall deem them to be most capable of discussing.

R. T. Heflin—The most practicable method of reaching the end which we all desire would be, it seems to me, to request the Bishops to designate competent men to prepare the Catechism, or parts of the Catechism, if Bro. Marshall's views should prevail. The Bishops know the men throughout the Church, and their peculiar capabilities. It seems to me that such a proposition would be most effectual. It is manifest that the qualifications of a pulpit orator are not those to be required in the preparation of this Catechism.

F. E. Pitts—I think Dr. Green's substitute is just the thing, and that Bishop Pierce will do the work well.

C. C. Gillespie—I think, sir, that Dr. Green's substitute and Bro. Marshall's proposition may be harmonized upon the idea of Bro. Heflin. I understand that the object of the work is simply to answer the question, What is Methodism? I suppose, if the substitute of Dr. Green be so amended as to give Bishop Pierce the privilege of employing such helps as he may think proper, that the object of Dr. Green will be attained, and also that of Bro. Marshall and Bro. Heflin.

L. Campbell—It seems to me indelicate for this Conference to appoint a man to that work, and then suggest that he should have assistance. I am fully in favor of the substitute. I believe Bishop Pierce is competent to prepare the Catechism; and it is proper that the work should be committed to him. I do not see the necessity of half a dozen men to do this work. Suppose you were to employ half a dozen, you would have a strange medley, and it would take all the Bishops and Book Editors a considerable time to bring any thing like a perfect work out of such a combination of sources. One man would do better than a dozen, and I think Bishop Pierce is the man.

J. E. Edwards said this was one of the most important matters before the Conference. It involves the destinies of childhood, interests imperishable as the soul of man. He hoped the Conference would take a little time. He thought Dr. Green's substitute a wise one.—The work should be committed to a man entirely competent. Bishop Pierce was such a man.—But he should have the largest liberty in the selection of assistance.

C. C. Gillespie made an explanation. No man had a higher opinion than he of Bishop Pierce, as a man, a scholar, and a writer. But it ought not to be regarded as an indelicacy to express an opinion. He agreed with brethren as to the full competency of Bishop Pierce. But he thought a name ought not to be proposed—it was settling the matter. Since a name had been proposed, he was glad it was the right one.

F. G. Ferguson begged, for the Bishop's sake, that these personalities and flatteries be abated. We were heaping every thing on the Bishops—they were overburdened. Bishop Pierce had been appointed to a great and holy work. That work was not book-making. Book-making was merely incidental to it. The Bishop would have plenty of work for the next four years without embarrassing him with book-making. It was not necessary to take him from his regular work—there were plenty of men competent to the contemplated service.

D. S. Doggett would make a suggestion. It was proposed to refer this Catechism to the Bishops. He had intended to amend by inserting "College of Bishops." We wanted their entire concurrence. For this reason it was not best, in his judgment, for one of the Bishops to prepare it. The Book Editor should prepare it.—It was in accordance with his pursuit. He was in possession of all the materials. Let him prepare it, and the College of Bishops approve. He thought it would be impolicy, if not impropriety, for one of the Bishops to prepare the book. Bishop Pierce was competent. No man had more confidence in his ability, or admired him more.

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

W. M. Wightman asked what was to be the racter of the work. Was it to be a book children, or for adults? What was to be size of it?
D. Oliver thought it ought not to be too
—a hundred and fifty or two hundred es.
W. M. Wightman said, if the work was to be elaborate one of 200 or 300 pages, and if the ference look to Bishop Pierce to produce it, was certainly entirely competent, it would necessary to make provision for him to have re of at least six months for the work.—
the question comes up, whether he can be ed for that length of time. The committee reported—and he fully concurred—against election of another Bishop at this time.—
if Bishop Pierce could have time for the k, he was heartily in favor of his being rested to do it.
Monroe said the Conference had voted with t unanimity not to strengthen the Episcoat this time. It would require consideratime to prepare the work contemplated.

d with other matters. Perhaps there were or a hundred men who could make the

K. Marshall thought we had not fully com-seeded the object we were aiming at. He prepared a plan to submit on this subject; brother Oliver got the start of him, and he way. The volume needed was not a chism for infant minds, nor a series of vols; but a single volume of perhaps 400
—a book suitable for adults as well as ren—explaining the philosophy of Metho-
—for instance, why we reject the ceremony confirmation, the fable of apostolic succes-etc. One man could write something on of these subjects, another man on the other,
rd on baptism, a fourth on the Lord's supper,
etc. He estimated Bishop Pierce's abilities highly as any man; but we wanted Bishop ce for other work.
Hamilton said there seemed to be a differ-e of opinion as to what we wanted. He that the matter was likely to go to the e, and that would be the end of it. He rded it as a very important matter; but seemed to be in some confusion on the sub-

Bishop Pierce took the chair.
W. A. Smith said brother Davis, of the Busiy Committee, had been called home by family ction, and would leave to-morrow; and it s desirable to take up the report on busi-

ved, therefore, that said report be now taken

Bishop Early wished his case to proceed; ereupon, Dr. Smith withdrew his motion.
J. E. Evans moved that the order be susnded, and that we proceed with the unfinished siness of the morning; which was carried.

REV. MR. MCNEILL.

The Chair now introduced to the Conference
e Rev. Mr. McNeill, Secretary of the Ameri-n Bible Society, standing on the forum with e Bishop, who was received by rising, and ternally invited to a seat on the floor of the nference.

REV. RICHARD TYDINGS.

The Chair also brought forward and intro-ced the Rev. Richard Tydings, of Kentucky, e of the oldest Methodist preachers in the est, who was also received by members rising, and invited to the privileges of the floor.

ADMINISTRATION OF THE BISHOPS.

The Conference now resumed the unfinished siness of the morning, viz.: the consideration the case of Bishop Early's administration.
fter debate,
E. E. Wiley pressed the consideration of his solution offered yesterday, which he now sub-itted as an amendment to the report.
B. M. Drake moved to lay the amendment on e table.
The motion was lost.
G. W. Langhorne made an ineffectual motion adjourn.
S. P. Richardson moved that the question be w put.
J. G. Jones submitted a substitute for the atter before the Conference, (signed also by . A. C. Walker,) to the effect that, whereas, well-authenticated complaints have been made gainst Bishop Early, as having been arbitrary nd discourteous in Conference and the stationoom; and whereas, we believe the matters of omplaint have resulted from the advancing ge and infirmity of the Bishop; therefore,

Resolved, 1. That his character pass.
Resolved, 2. That we request our superintendents, in making out their plans of Episcopal visitation, to assign such work to Bishop Early as he can do consistently with is age and advancing infirmities.

But before any action was taken the Confer-nce adjourned.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, JUNE 12, 1858.

VALEDICTORY.

With a sad heart, reader, the editor (that was) takes his pen to bid you adieu.

Seven years ago, with a list of not quite three hundred subscribers, the New Orleans Christian Advocate began its career, under the retiring editor's charge. Having loved this Advocate from the beginning, he loves it to the end. What troubles he has seen, what trials endured, in accompanying the enterprise to its present position, need not be told. All this sort of past fades into pleasant memories in grateful view of the success achieved. The paper is firmly established, not only on a business basis, but in the confidence of those who are served by it. Nearly seven thousand copies are issued weekly, and twice that number should be before the next four years expire. Let the patronising Conferences, the agents and friends of the Advocate aim at this mark.

It is well for editors, like other preachers, to itiaerate. The principle is good in all. The doctrine that they are fixtures by privilege or necessity; that they die in their nests; and that their example never illustrates the itinerant policy which they advocate, is not Methodist doctrine. We do not claim exemption from the lot and sacrifices of our brethren. Moreover, the philosophy of itinerancy demands it in the conductors of the Church press. Through them that principle reaches the press itself; and say what we will, the press has a mighty influence. At different stand-points men take new views, or enlarge and correct their old ones. Local feelings yield to connectional ones.

This we say, reader, to comfort ourself, not you, in parting; and to justify the sacrifice, in substance and sentiment, which it involves.—Better patrons never editor had. They have been patient, forbearing, and magnanimous.—Often we have penned articles, well knowing that our views and convictions were not, at the time, shared by many of our readers. But they belong to the class who hear first and then strike. Indeed, they have not struck at all.—Where they did not agree, they awarded, with characteristic liberality, the right to differ.

A sort of friendly acquaintance, between the editor and his readers whom he has not seen, has sprung up, on his part. He has conceived what sort of people his readers and contributors are—at their homes and in their every day life—and from his heart pronounces a benediction, hoping they may meet and be known mutually—some happy day.

To his worthy successor, Rev. C. C. Gillespie, the retiring editor would turn over the good will he has enjoyed in his office. A gentleman of fine taste, noble and virtuous ambition and tried parts, he takes the helm, and will guide the Advocate safely and prosperously. Already he has achieved marked success in the ranks of Methodist journalism, and that under conditions less favorable. Rally to him.

H. N. M.

THE NEW OFFICIALS.

Our readers have been advised of certain changes and new appointments, by the General Conference, in the working bureaus of the Church.

Dr. McFerrin, the new Book Agent, takes his difficult position with many qualifications for it. He is a safe man, has managed his own business well, and will do as much for the Church. In the prime of life, strong to labor, sagacious and quick in judgment, thoroughly devoted to Methodism, widely and favorably known, he cannot fail to draw to the connectional interest in his keeping, the hearty patronage of the Church. He is on hand, and knows the ropes of the Book Concern. No time will be lost in his getting the run of things. No experiment is made in this appointment.

Perhaps the policy of one Book Agent, instead of two, is better. Throw the undivided responsibility on one, with a judicious Book Committee, such as we have, for consultation.

We part with reluctance with our old friends, Stevenson & Owen. It is understood they both declined the re-election, which many friends pressed on them. They have served the Church, in a hard office, at a critical time, with great fidelity to their trust, and deserve as they will receive, our thanks.

Rev. R. Abbey is a brisk, indefatigable business man—a new man for a new office. He has large constructiveness to plan and diligence to execute. His work, as Financial Secretary, will be to go about generally, stirring up the Conferences to co-operation, arranging for and with local depositories, collecting floating debts, making friends, funds and business for the concern. It is a necessary office and we look for good results.

Among the editors there are some changes, and three new men: Dr. Summers, as editor of the Quarterly Review jointly with his old office, will give us the benefit of his vivacious and yet profound learning, his pure taste and literary energy. He will work in able contributors; and the Quarterly, lightened of the load of a special editor's salary, must go.

Rev. L. Rosser, of the Richmond Advocate, is a sound theologian and stiffly conservative, elegant in his taste and genial in soul; also a good writer. Rev. J. E. Carnes, of the Texas Advocate, is from Kentucky. He is an eloquent talker and writer, well used to the desk and tripod, and is sure to take high rank in the Methodist press.

The children! Bless the children; they too have a bureau, and a kind, loving man at it. Dr. Charles A. Taylor, the General Superintendent of Sunday Schools, will organize and inspire the work. Sabbath Schools and children have become a power in the Church. Rather, we should say, they are now so recognized—a power they have long been. The Church must march through the gates of childhood to the conquest of the world. Dr. Taylor was a Missionary to China and is full of that spirit. He will breathe it into the Sabbath Schools. Let all the Sabbath Schools welcome him. Unfurl all the sails of the Sunday School Visitor.

OUR EDITORS.—Between the going out of our old and the coming in of our new editor, the pro tem. may introduce the following description of the corps, by the Rev. R. T. Hellin, of the North Carolina Christian Advocate. He says:

"Brother Gillespie, of the Texas Advocate, looks every inch an editor. Talented, studious, courteous, and not so old as some other people, none can meet him without desiring a more intimate acquaintance. Brother M'Tyeire, of the New Orleans Advocate, is in the prime of life; a sound Methodist in his opinions; intellectually, cool, compact and strong; personally, good looking, genial, and popular. He does not wear a shad coat, nor a bread-brim hat, nor a white cravat. Brother M'Anally, of the St. Louis Advocate, is corporeally and mentally large and strong; sound and conservative, kind and genial, well-fed and thrifty, he is a good representative of Western Methodism. Brethren M'Ferrin, of the Nashville Advocate, and Myers, of the South Carolina Advocate, have been with us in North Carolina and are known to our readers. What they were, they still are; only, Brother Myers has, of late, given some unfortunate views on lay delegation."

BARNES' FAMILY PRAYERS—Philadelphia: Chas. Desilver, No. 714 Chestnut street, 1858. This is a collection of prayers for family devotions—selected from various and distinguished sources, with additions by the author. An excellent selection of hymns is also attached. The author is well known in religious literature, and his name is a sufficient guaranty for the value of the work. From E. R. Steveus & Co., New Orleans.

GAINESVILLE CIRCUIT,
Hancock County, Mi., June 5.

Good news from this benighted region, my dear sir. Our faithful circuit rider, Rev. H. D. Berry, seems to be laboring with a special blessing. His mild, persuasive, unassuming, but earnest and zealous manner has secured many friends for himself and for the cause. The congregations at Gainesville, Pearlington, and Bay St. Louis, which had dwindled away to nothing, are now large, serious and attentive. At Jordan River he has an excellent congregation, and so at other places. On the 22d, 3d, ultimo, Quarterly Meeting was held at Pearlington. The weather was propitious, and to the gratification of all our much loved and venerated Presiding Elder, Rev. B. Pipkin, arrived in due time—travel-worn from his long and fatiguing journey—scarred all over with wounds from his conflicts with the great enemy of souls, in his campaigns of near forty years—but still full of the fire and vigor of the Christian warrior. He preached Saturday and Sunday, morning and evening, with prodigious power and effect, and many, I doubt not, will have reason to be thankful that they were there to hear him. A deep feeling was apparent. Several influential citizens joined. Many had their consciences awakened. A few such visits and a few such sermons from this able and faithful servant of God, and Gainesville circuit, with the blessing of Providence, can no more be referred to as a moral wilderness. Since the Rev. Mr. Berry came here, some fifty or more have been added to the Church.

Such was the desire to hear the Presiding Elder, that, on Sabbath morning, the steamboat Warren, Capt. Poiterent, was liberally placed at the disposal of the citizens of Gainesville, and the whole town and country round came down to Pearlington. It was an imposing and solemn spectacle, that large and serious congregation, receiving, with deep emotion, the sacred oracles as they fell from the inspired lips of the aged servant of God.

A SEEKER.

NEW CARTHAGE MISSION,
May 31st, 1858.

MR. EDITOR: The first and second quarterly report of New Carthage Mission is, that I have succeeded in getting up three white or mixed congregations and eight plantation appointments.

Ebenezer Chapel is situated on Bayou Vilell, within reach of some twelve plantations, from which servants are allowed to attend. It is a neat frame, with spacious galleries on either side for seating servants. It was built by the neighborhood and is not deeded to any branch of Christ's Church. The white congregation here range from six to sixty. There are six white members and probationers, an excellent melodeon, and some very fine performers. At this chapel I alternate with Rev. Mr. McCalla, an aged Presbyterian minister; so that the people have preaching every Sabbath. We hope the good Lord will pour out his spirit in its convincing form upon this people, for they are punctual and attentive. Let the Churches pray for us.

The other appointments are served only once in four weeks. At one of these there are a few members not yet organized into a class.

The eight plantation appointments have about 500 population, with some 80 members and about the same number of catechumens.—Owing to high water, the major part of my work is inaccessible, except by dugout navigation, which I tried one trip; but not being acquainted with the woods, I had the privilege of sleeping one night by my own fire, which I built on a floating log. But the water is now receding and I hope soon to ride to all of my appointments. The floor of one preaching house has been about three feet under water. In the woods one feels as if he is in a sea of water.—But all things considered, I feel that I have no reason to be discouraged. May the Lord bless New Carthage Mission.

E. W. GRISWOLD.

SHELBY COAL MINING MISSION, May 25.

REV. H. N. MCTYEIRE: Dear Brother—Permit me through your paper to make my report for the first and second quarters of the year for the Shelby Coal Mining Mission. This is a new Mission. It lies above and below Montevallo, along the railroad. I have at present five appointments, at which I preach on Sunday every four weeks. Our houses of worship are small. Excepting one academy, quite a commodious house, at the Shelby Springs, we preach in the tavern. My congregations are quite good; and in several places the word seems to have some good effect. I have received two on probation. There is, I hope, a gradual increase of good. Your Missionary desires the prayers of all the Church that God may bless us in this narrow field of labor. Yours,

JOSEPH T. TALLY.

GREENSBORO', May 15, 1858.

DEAR BRO. MCTYEIRE: I send you my report from the German Creek Colored Mission for the first and second quarters.

Four preaching places have been taken into the work during the two past quarters. Seven have joined on probation.

Nothing special to note as to the spiritual condition of the Mission further than a general interest is manifested in the preaching of the word. Will the plans of the Church pray for us, that God may abundantly bless, during this year, not only this but all of our missions?

Yours truly, ASBURY R. RAMEY.

☞ PERSONS WRITING TO THE OFFICE will please observe that business letters are filed by the clerk. If they write but three words to the Editor or for publication, they must so write it, that it can be separated from the business letters, if they expect the Editor ever to see it.

☞ THOSE WRITING TO DEPOSITORY will please observe the same rule. If matter for the three departments is contained on the same sheet, let it be so written that it can be separated, or better still, write it on separate slips; and then if it goes wrong, the fault is not with the writer—otherwise it will be.

In sending subscriber's names always give their Post-office, and say whether they are old or new.

In changing papers, always name the Post-office changed from as well as the one changed to.

TEACHERS AND LECTURERS.

PROF. L. J. MORRIS, A. M., the author of a Philosophical and Practical Grammar of the English Language, is prepared to engage the services of accomplished Teachers and Lecturers to travel and teach his system of Grammar. By a skillful use of this system learners of proper age and fair capacity are, in the brief space of twenty days, taught to parse any sentence which they can read understandingly, and to correct ungrammatical expressions wherever found. This is no experiment, as the peculiar and startling advantages of the system have been successfully demonstrated for years by others as well as by the author himself. As there is a widely extended call for the work, a large number of competent Teachers and Lecturers are already profitably engaged traveling and promulgating this system. Successful Teachers and Lecturers can, in this enterprise, easily make from $100 to $200 per month, exclusive of expenses. Payments monthly.

The field of labor will not be confined to any particular locality.—Teachers can obtain a specimen copy of the work by forwarding $1 00 (and 12 cents in postage stamps) to L. J. Morris, Oak Bowery, Chambers county, Ala., (near the Montgomery and West Point Railroad.)

Professor Morris' Grammar.

NEW YORK, May 11, 1857.

PROF. L. J. MORRIS—Dear Sir: I take great pleasure in offering my humble testimony in regard to the success which attended your course of instruction in this school. Of the class which I organized for you, several had a very limited idea of grammar; but after twenty lessons under your able teaching, they were quite conversant with the principles laid down in your book, and could parse with the utmost facility.

MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT.

From rich and poor, bond and free; all colors, grades and conditions of life, we hear the same meed of praise awarded to this wonderful article. Sores are healed, pains relieved, lives saved, valuable animals made useful, and untold ills assuaged by this great medicine, which are surprising to the judgment of man. What family does not require a standard Liniment?—Who ever heard of the same effects produced by any other article? For Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Rheumatism, Swellings, Strained Horses, &c., it has no equal. Beware of imitations. The genuine Mustang Liniment is sold by all respectable Druggists and Livery Men in every town, parish and hamlet throughout North and South America, Europe, and the Islands of the Ocean. Buy at once.

Chills and Fever! Chills and Fever!—One of the greatest remedies that has ever been laid before the public, for Fever and Ague, and which has received the highest encomiums from the press and the people is Dr. J. HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED BITTERS. Who would endure the tortures arising from this terrible disease, when it can be so easily cured? Who would endure sleepless nights, burning fevers, and icy chills alternately, when a remedy can be obtained for a mere trifle? And yet how many families linger out a painful existence under this deadly blight, and do nothing but gulp down quinine, until it becomes as common as their daily meals, and still they are not relieved. None but the foolish and weak would hesitate to procure these valuable Bitters, and save themselves unnecessary pain.

Sold by Druggists everywhere, and by HOSTETTER & SMITH, Sole Proprietors, 58 Water and 56 Front streets, Pittsburg. June 1-4t

A SICKLY, ALTERNATED APPEARANCE in a child is prima facie evidence that its internal organization is tenanted by some one of the many species of worms which afflict and too often destroy the most promising children. The best thing to be done is to administer Wiser's Canadian Vermifuge without delay. It will dislodge and discharge the enemy, if present in the bowels, and if no worms exist it will cleanse and invigorate the whole digestive, secretive, and excretive system, and create a healthful appetite.

☞ Be particular and remember the name "Wiser's Canadian Vermifuge." This is the only article that can be depended on. Remember this. For sale by

POETRY.

[illegible] TO HEAVEN."

The author of the appended lines, Mr. John T. Twarts, [illegible] on society, and on the religious world [illegible] sat himself down to write a poem which [illegible] would make every one a holler and [illegible] what he had read it.

[illegible] were [illegible]
[illegible] shivered with the cold;
[illegible] were knit with care,
[illegible] the sorrow told.

Said I, "Poor boy, why weepest thou?"
"My parents are dead," he said,
"I have no where to lay my head;
Oh, I am lone and friendless now!"

[illegible] child; a Friend on high,
For you his precious Blood has given;
[illegible] death bear be dry—
[illegible] in heaven."

[illegible] life's gay noon,
[illegible] o'er his young wife's bier;
[illegible] he cried, "so soon!"
[illegible] there rolled a tear;
[illegible] said I, weep not!"
[illegible] will he cried,
[illegible] my loved one died,
[illegible] so soon forgot?"
[illegible] will let her love
[illegible] with anguish riven;
[illegible] bride above,
[illegible] in heaven.
[illegible] weep,
[illegible] pressed
[illegible] a shattering breast.
[illegible] I, pray, weep no more."
[illegible] ideal of my hope
[illegible] called to render up;
[illegible] has reached death's gloomy shore."
Young mother, yield no more to grief,
Nor be by passion's tempest driven;
But find in these sweet words relief,
"There are no tears in heaven."

[illegible] o'er life's troubled wave—
[illegible] down by grief, o'erwhelmed with care,
[illegible] no arm above can save,
[illegible] yield not thou to fe l despair.
[illegible] upward, mourners look above!
[illegible] though the thunders roll so loud;
[illegible] gain shines bright bey[illegible] the cloud,
"Then trust to thy Redeemer love,
Where is thy lot in life be cast,
Whatever of toil or woe be given—
Be [illegible] remember to the last,
"There are no tears in heaven."

From the Western Watchman.

THERE IS A GOD.

The [illegible] proclaim it, and the stream
Whose murmurs sound their bass—the woods,
Together with the birds that fill their depths
With greatest melody. All speak his presence.
The [illegible] clothing with emerald, the insect
[illegible] sunshine, and the lovely flower
That [illegible] odorous perfume on the breeze.
[illegible] storm, the thunder pealing from the clouds,
[illegible] that starts the doubting atheist,
And [illegible] ocean with the rolling torrent
Declare his omnipotence and his power.
The [illegible] may be seen in dew-drops
[illegible] showers, in the golden grain
That pays the husbandman for all his toil—
And in the happiness that waits on righteous deeds
Our glory may be seen in opening day,
[illegible] night, when moon and stars
Make beautiful the slumbering earth:
All nature bows obedient to his will—
Spring fills the vacant throne of winter,
Wears her light sceptre, and robes the earth
In living green to welcome summer.
Vain man alone, the image of himself
Denies or dares his presence, his control;
And in his boasted wickedness of heart,
Scoffs at the hime his soul may never know.

OBITUARIES.

Died, near Columbia, Mi., May 14, 1858, sister JULIA A. BARNES, in the 38th year of her age. Sister Barnes was a member of the M. E. Church for about twelve years, and adorned the profession she made by an upright life and a godly conversation. Religion was her theme, and wherever she could meet with a disciple of Jesus the subject of religion was introduced. Many are the Christian witnesses that will remember her love to God and the cause of Christ expressed in private conversation. During her last illness, which was protracted for some four months, she never complained at the dealings of God with her, but bore her sufferings with Christian fortitude. Her dying, the dead, and the happiness of those that have died in the Lord were the subjects of her conversation. She seemed like one standing in the gate of glory and talking back to earth, so happy was she at the approach of death. When she felt that her end was near, she with calmness gave directions to her household concerning her funeral, and quietly, but thrice happy, left [illegible] for a better.

J. BOYD.

Died, on the morning of the 26th of May, Mrs. E. L. PITTS, wife of Rev. E. D. Pitts, aged 30 years, 5 months and [illegible] days.

[illegible] wife, affectionate mother, and faithful [illegible] highly cultivated and finely polished mind, with retiring mien and unaffected [illegible] a model in sister Pitts. She taught by [illegible] what it is to be a child of God. The [illegible] ravages of consumption made her [illegible] the just which shineth more and more unto the perfect day, was beautifully illustrated by her life. [illegible] of conversion were almost imperceptible [illegible] becoming as it approached its zenith—"the entrance"—and shining as it [illegible] with the rising rays of "perfect day."

[illegible] a glorious victory. She spoke of [illegible] an inhabitant than as one just going there. [illegible] and my five children will live [illegible] We shall part no more." Her last [illegible] when speech had failed, like Mr. [illegible] heard and then fell asleep. Her [illegible] the Methodist Church, where the [illegible] was preached to a large assembly of weeping [illegible] which they were carried to their last [illegible] to await the resurrection of the just.

HAPPY CHILDHOOD.

[illegible] Taylor, in his Treatise on Education, [illegible] this immense importance to normal [illegible] development of character, that [illegible] begin with a happy childhood. It [illegible] sphere of a happy domestic circle that [illegible] affections bud and blossom, and [illegible] of amiableness and virtue are formed. [illegible] existence begins under a cloud; [illegible] childhood's experience of life is of unmingled misery; when want and woe and [illegible] and cruelty, cast their shadows [illegible] birth. Such an existence seems blighted [illegible] morning. It receives an injury from [illegible] early records; or, if in later life it [illegible] fully restored, there still remains the [illegible] wronged nature. The shadow [illegible] cloud could never wholly depart [illegible] And it is apt to betray its [illegible] is perverted impressions of human [illegible] and in gloomy views of life.

[illegible] so religion is not a call to be better [illegible] men, but to be better than your[illegible] relative to every individual.

CHRIST'S BIBLE.

My little Bible! mother's gift!
You're very dear indeed;
I love between your purple lids
My Savior's words to read.
And long before I could do so,
I remember well,
The pretty stories out of it
Dear father used to tell.

How Jesus, once a baby, sat
Upon his mother's knee.
Before he cured the lame and blind,
Or walked upan the sea.
And he would speak of Bethany,
Where two sweet sisters lived,
And of the trembling woman who
A cure from Christ received.

Then though I was a little boy,
O, how I wished that He,
Who did so sweetly talk to them,
Would show Himself to me.
It made me long to read his Book;
So o'er the page I bent,
And till I could make out the words,
I never was content.

May I its meaning every day
Still better understand,
Until God fits me by his grace
To dwell at his right hand.
And I will try to send his Word
Where it has not been given;
For it will be a pleasant thing
To send such news from heaven.

SPEAK GENTLY TO EACH OTHER.

"Please to help me a minute, sister."

"O, don't disturb me, I'm reading," was the answer.

"But just hold this stick, won't you, while I drive this pin through?"

"I can't now, I want to finish this story," said I, emphatically; and my little brother turned away with a disappointed look, in search of somebody else to assist him. He was a bright boy, of ten years, and my only brother. He had been visiting a young friend, and had seen a wind-mill, and as soon as he came home his energies were all employed in making a small one; for he was always trying to make tops, wheelbarrows, kites, and all sorts of things, such as boys delight in. He had worked patiently all the morning with saw and jack knife, and now it only needed putting together to complete it—and his only sister had refused to assist him, and he had gone away with his young heart saddened. I thought of all this, in the fifteen minutes after he left me, and my book gave me no pleasure. It was not intentional unkindness, only thoughtlessness, for I loved my brother, and was generally kind to him; still, I had refused to help him. I would have gone after him and offered the assistance he needed, but I knew he had found some one else. But I had neglected an opportunity of gladdening a childish heart.

In half an hour he came bounding into the house, exclaiming, "Come, Mary, I've got it up; just see how it goes!" His tones were joyous, and I saw that he had forgotten my petulance, so I determined to atone by unusual kindness. I went with him, and sure enough upon the roof of the wood house was fastened a miniature wind-mill, and the arms were whirling around fast enough to suit any boy. I praised the wind-mill, and my little brother's ingenuity, and he seemed happy and entirely forgetful of my unkindness, and I resolved, as I had many times before, to be always loving and gentle.

A few days passed by, and the shadow of a great sorrow darkened our dwelling. The joyous laugh and noisy glee were hushed, and our merry boy lay in a darkened room, with anxious faces around him, his cheeks flushed, and his eyes unnaturally bright. Sometimes his temples would moisten and his muscles relax, and then hops would come into our hearts, and our eyes would fill with thankful tears. It was in one of these deceitful calms in his disease that he heard the noise of his little wheel, and said, "I hear my wind-mill."

"Does it make your head ache?" I asked. "Shall we take it down?"

"Oh! no," replied he, "it seems as if I were out doors, and it makes me feel better."

He mused a moment, and then added, "Don't you remember, Mary, that I wanted you to help me fix it, and you was reading, and told me you couldn't? But it didn't make any differeuce, for mamma helped me."

O how sadly these words fell upon my ear, and what bitter memories they awakened. How I repented, as I kissed little Frank's forehead, that I had ever spoken unkindly to him. Hours of sorrow went by, and we watched his couch, hope growing fainter, and anguish deeper, until, one week from the morning in which he spoke of his childish sports, we closed the eyes once so sparkling, and folded his hands over his pulseless heart. He sleeps now in the grave, and home is desolate; but the little wind-mill, the work of his busy hands, is still swinging in the breeze, just where he placed it, upon the roof of the old wood shed—and every time I see the tiny arms revolving I remember the lost little Frank; and I remember, also, the thoughtless, the unkind words I Brothers and sisters, be kind to each other! Be gentle, considerate, and loving.

A TESTAMENT FOR A BLOW.

"I never want to go to that school again as long as I live, never," said Eddie, as rushing in from school with flushed face and soiled garments and bruised chin, he buried his face in his mother's lap and cried aloud.

Waiting a little for him to become calm, his mother wiped his face, and then heard his story. "Joe Douglass will never let me go to school in peace, or come home either. He is always taking away my books, or catching off my cap and throwing it away, or throwing stones, or knocking me down, or something. To night, because I would not let him have my ball, he took it away, and then threw me down and struck me, and kept me from coming home till now. I never want to go to that school any more," and again his feelings burst forth into tears which he could not repress.

"Do you never try to irritate him, my son? Do you treat him kindly?"

"I try to keep out of his way. I don't want to play with him."

"Why not let him have your ball? Perhaps he has none and it might do him good."

"I have let him take my pencils and my knife, and he always says he lost them, and all the boys think he keeps them."

The mother thought a while. There was no other school for her little son to attend. She really pitied him, and tried to devise some way to soothe the feelings of the injured boy.

"Has Joseph any books of his own, Eddie?"

"No, mother, none that are good for anything. The teacher sometimes lends him some, when his lesson is torn out."

"Has he a Testament of his own?"

"I don't talnk he has. He always reads from one of the other scholars."

"You saw those pretty new Testaments I bought the other day. Now, I will give you one. You may go and pick out the prettiest cover, and if you wish, you may carry it to-morrow morning and give it to Joseph. I will write his name in it. Would you like to make him a present of it?"

It was a new idea to Eddie, but it struck him rather pleasantly; and his eyes brightened, his tears were all dried, and with a little brushing and washing he looked quite like himself again.

The next evening his mother waited a little anxiously for his return from school, as the distance was such he could not return at noon; but the smiling, happy face showed no more marks of blows.

"Why, mother, he came towards me, saying, 'Now you'll get it, old fellow;' and I held out the Testament, and said, 'Here, Joe, I've brought you a new Testament;' and he looked, and looked, and I thought was going to knock it out of my hands; and I showed him his name, and told him you said I might make him a present of it; and he said, 'I thank you,' and this afternoon he brought me an apple."

It is almost time for the school to close now, but there have been no more complaints of Joe Douglass, and Eddie says, "Mother, what shall I do when the school leaves off."

THE GREATEST
Medical Discovery
OF THE AGE.
MR. KENNEDY, of Roxbury, has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures

EVERY KIND OF HUMOR,
From the worst Scrofula down to a Common Pimple.
He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases, both thunder humor. He has now in his possession over one hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.
Two bottles are warranted to cure a nursing sore mouth.
One to three bottles will cure the worst kind of pimples on the face.
Two or three bottles will clear the system of tiles.
Two bottles are warranted to cure the worst cankor in the mouth and stomach.
Three to five bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Erysipelas.
One or two bottles are warranted to cure all humor in the eyes.
Two bottles are warranted to cure running of the ears and blotches among the hair.
Four to six bottles are warranted to cure corns and, running ulcers.
One bottle will cure scaly eruptions of the skin.
Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of ringworm.
Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the most desperate case of rheumatism.
Three to four bottles are warranted to cure the rheum.
Five to eight bottles will cure the worst case of scrofula.
A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the above quantity is taken.
Nothing looks so improbable to those who have in vain tried all the wonderful medicines of the day, as that a common weed growing on the pastures, and along old stone walls, should cure every humor in the system; yet it is a fixed fact. If you have a humor, it has to start. There are no IFS nor ANDS, humor nor he's about it suiting some cases, but not yours. I peddled over a thousand bottles of it in the vicinity of Boston. I knew the effects of it in every case. It has already done some of the greatest cures ever done in Massachesetts. I give it to children a year old, to old people of sixty. I have seen poor, puny, wormy-looking children, whose flesh was soft and flabby, restored to a perfect state of health by one bottle.
To those who are subject to a sick head ache, one bottle will always cure it. It gives great relief in catarrh and dizziness. Some who have taken it had been costive for years, and have been regulated by it. Where the body is sound it works quite easy, but where there is any derangement of the functions of nature, it will cause very singular feelings, but you must not be alarmed; they always disappear in from four days to a week. There is never a bad result from it; on the contrary, when that feeling is gone you will feel yourself like a new person. I heard some of the most extravagant encomiums of it that ever man listened to.
Manufactured by DONALD KENNEDY, No. 120 Warren street, Roxbury, Mass. Price $1 per bottle.

GERMAN BITTERS.
PREPARED BY
Dr. C. M. JACKSON, Philad'a, Pa.
WILL EFFCTUALLY CURE
LIVER COMPLAINT, DYSPEPSIA, JAUNDICE,
Chronic or Nervous Debility, Diseases of the Kidneys, and all diseases arising from a disordered Liver or Stomach;
Such as Constipation, Inward Piles, to Fullness or Blood the Head, Acidity on the Stomach, Nausea, Heartburn, Disgust for Food, Fullness or Weight in the Stomach, Sour Eructations, Sinking or Fluttering at the Pit of the Stomach, Swimming of the Head, Hurried and difficult Breathing, Fluttering at the Heart, Choking or Suffocating Sensations when in a lying posture, Dimness of Vision, Dots of webs before the Sight, Fever and Dull pain in the Head, Deficiency of Perspiration, Yellowness of the Skin, and Eyes, Pain in the Side, Back, Chest, Limbs, etc., Sudden Flushes of Heat, Burning in the Flesh, Constant Imaginings of Evil and great Depression of Spirits.
The proprietor, in calling the attention of the public to this preparation, does so with a feeling of the utmost confidence in its virtues and adaptation to the diseases for which it is recommended.
It is no new and untried article, but one that has stood the test of a ten years' trial before the American people, and its reputation and sale is unrivalled by any similar preparations extant. The testimony in its favor given by the most prominent and well-known Physicians and individuals in all parts of the country is immense, and a careful perusal of the Almanac, published annually by the proprietor, and to be had gratis of any of his Agents, cannot but satisfy the most skeptical that this remedy is really deserving the great celebrity it has obtained.

MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT.
Its wonderful effects and consequent popularity—perhaps no article in the history of the Materia Medica ever acquired the same notoriety, was subjected to the same number of severe and difficult tests, and met with so few failures, as the Mustang Liniment. It has justly been styled a Panacea for all external Wounds, Cuts, Swellings, Eruptions, Sprains, or Bruises on man or beast. It is so far a medicine of surprising virtue, that physicians are compelled to prescribe it; and from some remarkable cures of chronic and distorted Rheumatic cases it has naturally attracted much attention from the first scientific minds of the age. No family can afford to be without a bottle of the Mustang Liniment in the house. Beware of imitations.
The genuine is sold by respectable dealers in all parts of the world.

HUNTSVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE,
HUNTSVILLE, ALA.
THE latter half of the scholastic year of this Institution will begin January 26, 1858. The splendid buildings, elegant organization, the superior Faculty, and the extraordinary facilities of an accomplished education, recommend this Institution to the consideration of every parent. The French Language is taught by Parisians, and taught possibly more thoroughly than any where else outside of a native French family. This is a regular Boarding School of the highest order. Besides Huntsville, as a location for a Female School, in point of beauty and healthfulness, has no equal in the South. I would refer to my patrons in Louisiana:

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY A COMMITTEE OF MINISTERS FOR THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH---C. C. GILLESPIE, EDITOR.

VOLUME VIII—NUMBER 30. WHOLE NUMBER 383. | NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY JUNE 19, 1858. | $2 50 A YEAR, IN ADVANCE OFFICE—118 CAMP ST.

Methodist General Conference.

SATURDAY, May 22.

Conference met at 8½ o'clock; the opening exercises by Rev. N. Scarritt.

The journal of yesterday was read and authenticated—Bishop Paine taking the chair.

ADMINISTRATION AND CHARACTER OF THE BISHOPS.

J. H. DAVIS—I move that we postpone the regular order of morning business, and resume the consideration of the case of Bishop Early.

The motion was agreed to—Bishop Early himself having retired from the deliberations of Conference yesterday, after he had responded seriatim to all the complaints submitted.

The Conference then took up again the consideration of the majority and minority reports of the committee on the Episcopacy, on the administration and character of the Bishops—particularly the part having reference to complaints against the administration of Bishop Early, the question being on the adoption of the substitute submitted by J. G. Jones, sketched in our report of yesterday evening's proceedings.

After debate, and an ineffectual motion to suspend the rule restricting speech to fifteen minutes,

J. B. Payne proposed to amend the substitute by striking out the second resolution, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

Resolved, That, in view of Bishop Early's age, he be released from taking any part of the regular Episcopal work in future.

J. G. Jones accepted the amendment.

N. Scarritt moved a division of the question.

The motion was lost.

After further debate, T. N. Gardner made an ineffectual motion to lay the whole subject on the table.

W. W. Bennett submitted another substitute, which, though not in order, was entertained so far as to be ready by the Secretary for the information of the Conference.

It declares the deep regret of the Conference that, in several Annual Conferences, Bishop Early, in his official acts, has failed to give satisfaction to all the preachers, and afforded ground for complaints; nevertheless, in consideration of his services in the Church, his known integrity, and the purity of his motives, and trusting for the future in his good sense and deep devotion to the Church, it proposes that his character do now pass.

Levi Pearce read, for information, what he would propose, at the proper time, of this second resolution, to this effect:

Resolved, That the venerable Bishop Early be released from all Episcopal duties beyond his remaining strength.

Debate ensued by F. E. Pitts, B. M. Drake, J. M. Payne, A. L. P. Green, J. Hamilton, and others.

G. W. Carter made another ineffectual motion to suspend the fifteen minutes rule.

B. M. Drake moved that G. W. Carter be allowed to speak without regard to the fifteen minutes restriction.

The motion was lost.

J. B. Payne submitted a further modification of the second resolution, thus: That, in view of Bishop Early's declining strength, he be excused from any part of the Episcopal work.

J. E. Evans submitted a modification of the preamble and resolutions by J. G. Jones, to this effect:

WHEREAS, complaints have been made against Bishop Early from a number of Annual Conferences, touching the manner of his administration: and whereas, we believe the matters complained of have resulted from his age and increasing infirmities, therefore,

Resolved, 1. That, in view of the explanations made by Bishop Early, his character do now pass.

Resolved, 2. That in view of the advanced age and increasing infirmities of our beloved brother, Bishop Early, he be relieved from the duties of the Episcopal visitation in future.

H. A. C. Wniker also submitted a substitute, to this effect:

WHEREAS, It appears that Bishop Early, in the discharge of his official duties, has so coaducted himself as to give offense in several instances, though the integrity of his motives remains unquestioned; and whereas, Bishop Early has given assurances of being more guarded for the future; there ore,

Resolved, 1. That we disapprove of the administration of Bishop Early in the cases complained of, and confidently expect him to be more guarded in the future.

Resolved, 2. That we now pass the character of Bishop Early.

G. W. Laughorne submitted and spoke fifteen minutes on the following:

WHEREAS, After a patient hearing of the case, the General Conference deeply regret that there are serious grounds of complaint against Bishop Early; but in view of the explanations and concessions of the Bishop, and in the hope that he will render himself acceptable to such Conferences as his labors may be hereafter assigned by the College; therefore,

Resolved, That his character do now pass.

S. G. JONES—if I understand Bro. Evan's preamble, I can accept that. I wish to retain my first resolution; but I am willing also to accept his last resolution in place of my last.

Debate followed by O. R. Blue, Wm. Closs, T. N. Gardner, J. Anderson, W. A. Smith, F. G. Ferguson, L. Rosser, and W. McMahon, which, though the reporters have full notes, it is not the policy of this paper to publish at present.

J. W. Kelly made an ineffectual motion for an evening session.

And then—without coming to any further conclusion—after the announcement of the Sabbath preaching appointments, and the usual committee notifications,

The Conference adjourned till Monday morning, half-past eight o'clock.

Benediction by Bishop Paine.

MONDAY, May 24.

Conference met at half-past eight o'clock—the opening exercises by Rev. H. C. Thweatt.

The journal of Saturday was read and authenticated. Bishop Pierce being in the chair, proceeded to call the committees.

SUPPORT OF MISSIONS.

J. Boring, from the committee on Missions, submitted their report, No. 8, which was read by the Secretary. It lies over according to rule, and is designed as a substitute for the present constitution of the Missionary Society. It is as follows:

The Committee on Missions having examined, as thoroughly as their time and means have enabled them, the plan, as laid down in the book of Discipline, for the support of Missions, and having found, as they believe, that it is in numerous respects seriously defective—especially that it is encumbered with embarrassing details, and is insusceptible of such changes and modifications as are necessary to adapt it to the ends proposed—beg leave to recommend the following in its stead:

1st. There shall be a Board of Missions, under the control of the General Conference, consisting of the Bishops, twelve itinerant Elders, a Secretary, Treasurer, six members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, residing in Nashville, Tenn., and one Manager from each Annual and Mission Conference. Thirteen members shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

2d. The itinerant Elders, Secretary, Treasurer, and six members residing in Nashville, shall be elected by the General Conference, the Secretary and Treasurer to reside in Nashville during their terms of service. The secretary shall be chosen from the itinerant elders, and the treasurer from the member-ship of the M. E. Church, South.

3d. The managers shall be annually chosen, one from within the bounds of each Annual and Mission Conference, by a vote of said Conferences respectively, and shall be members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

4th. The Board of Missions, thus constituted, shall have authority to make by-laws for the regulation of its own proceedings; to determine what fields shall be accepted or continued as foreign missions; the number of persons to be employed in each, and the sums necessary for their respective support.

They shall fix the amounts which may be drawn for during the year, in the Mission Conferences, and for the missions to Germans. Those Annual Conferences which may not be able to support their own missions, shall be styled Mission Conferences.

They shall make appropriations for the support of the secretary, superannuated missionaries, the widows and orphans of missionaries; also, to defray incidental expenses.

They shall have authority to fill any vacancy which may occur in the offices of secretary, treasurer, or itinerant elders, in the interim of the General Conference.

The assessments and appropriations above authorized shall be made at the annual meeting of the Board, to be held in Nashville on the third Monday in April.

5th. The Annual Conferences shall, respectively, organize boards auxiliary to the Board of Missions, at Nashville, which shall have the control of the missions within their bounds; shall determine what missions shall be occupied, the number of persons to be employed, and the sums necessary for their support.

They shall also be authorized to retain and appropriate to the missions under their care, the mission fund collected within their bounds, respectively; provided, that not more than seventy per cent. of the whole amount shall be so applied, and the balance, together with all sums contributed for foreign missions, shall be forwarded to the treasurer in Nashville.

6th. The Board of each Mission Conference, and of those Annual Conferences which are not able to meet the wants of their own domestic missions, and have a surplus, shall be authorized to hold all collections within their respective bounds, subject to the order of the Board at Nashville.

7th. Each Annual and Mission Conference shall organize a Board of Missions, auxiliary to the parent Board, consisting of a President, four Vice-Presidents, a Secretary and Treasurer, nine clerical and nine lay members of the Church.

8th. All donors of $—— at one time shall be entitled to a certificate of membership in the Annual Conference Board, and donors of $100 at one time, shall be entitled to a certificate of membership in the parent Board; and, provided they are members of our Church, shall be authorized to take part in the discussions in Annual Conferences, and to vote upon our missionary operations.

The committee further recommend that section 7, part 2d, page 237, be stricken out, and that this constitution be inserted in the Discipline next after "Quarterly Conferences," section 4, part 2, page 47.

Resolved, That this Board be incorporated, and that the Board of Managers of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, be directed to transfer to the Board, to be organized under this plan, all the interests of said society.

Respectfully submitted,

J. BORING, Chairman.

Nashville, Tenn., May 20, 1858.

J. Boring moved to make the report a special order for Wednesday morning, 10 o'clock, and that it be printed.

F. G. Ferguson proposed to amend by making the Secretaries and Bishops a sort of Business Committee, to select from the mass of matter before the Conference such matter as shall be first acted on. We shall have to come to this.

J. BORING—I do not see the propriety of brother Ferguson's remarks touching the case before us. The time will come, of course, when some such action will be called for. The matter of this report involves a subject of immense interest to the Church—one to which the committee have devoted a great deal of thought—and we desire so to provide that the attention of the Conference shall be specially directed to it. Hence we ask that a certain day and hour be fixed for its consideration, and that it be printed. I hope the Conference will make the order.

F. E. PITTS—I hope it will be printed, and that every member will read it.

A. H. Mitchell asked that the question be divided—being opposed to making special orders.

The CHAIR—The brethren will save time by allowing these questions to be taken without division.

The motion was agreed to, the order made for Wednesday, and the question of printing left with the Editor.

THE BURIAL SERVICE.

A. L. P. Green presented report (No. 4) of the committee on Revisal, proposing several alterations in the book of Discipline with reference to the burial service; which was read.

C. K. Marshall suggested that it might be proper to add some suitable form of service for burials at sea, and for the burial of infants.

Bishop SOULE—I have buried a number at sea—introducing only this modification of the form: "When the earth and sea shall give up their dead."

The subject lies over.

THE BEQUEST OF JAMES C. CARROLL.

A. L. P. Green submitted, in writing, a statement of facts in relation to the bequest of $1000 to the Missionary Society, and of $1000 to the Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; which was read by the Secretary.

A. L. P. GREEN—The brother holding these funds is unwilling to part with them, unless he can get vouchers to protect him. He seemed at first to suppose that the laws of the State of Virginia were in his way; but, upon a re-examination, he seems to have come to the conclusion that if he can find the proper person to receive it, he will now pay it over. But the matter will have to go regularly through the mill. It will have to go to the Fiscal Committee; and when they shall report, and the Conference shall act thereon, then the Treasurer or Book Agent will be able to draw on Mr. Carroll, who will receive that draft as his voucher, and pay the money over. I move that it be referred to the Book Committee.

E. F. SEVIER—Charles Carroll is sole heir and administrator of the estate of this testator, and he was to pay over this money. He declined to do so at first; but afterwards relented, and sent the money to the Holston Conference, to pay it over there to any person who might be authorized to receipt for it. The authority to receipt being doubted, the money was returned. It will be paid over as soon as the administrator can find some person properly authorized to receive it.

E. Stevenson submitted a paper of the same character, having relation to the same matter, signed by Michael Smizer.

These two papers were referred to the committee on Books and Periodicals.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

L. Pearce, from the committee on Sunday Schools, submitted their report (No. 1) upon the resolution directing an inquiry into the expediency of appointing a General Sunday School Agent, to this effect:

Resolved, That we do not recommend the appointment of a General Sunday-school Agent.

Resolved, That we recommend the adoption of some schema of inquiry into the attention paid to the Sunday-school cause by each and every pastor in all the Annual Conferences as an indispensable condition of ministerial faithfulness.

W. W. Bennett, from the same committee, submitted a minority report, signed also by T. W. Randle, and M. Yoll, being a written argument on the subject.

On motion of D. B. Nicholson, it was laid on the table for the present.

H. N. McTyeire presented the report of the special committee on the support of the Bishops, recommending the striking out from the Discipline of all that which provides that said support be drawn from the funds of the Publishing House, making the Missionary Board responsible for one-fifth of the amount, the remainder to be raised by a per centage levied on all moneys collected for the support of the ministry in the several Circuits and Stations—the Book Committee to be a board of managers for the Bishops' fund, and the Book Agent the Treasurer.

At the request of W. A. Smith, the plan was explained by H. N. McTyeire and J. E. Evans.

The report lies on the table, under the rule.

J. Hamilton presented the report of the Special Committe on the Pacific Conference Memorial, as follows:

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE MEMORIAL OF THE PACIFIC CONFERENCE.

The committee to whom was referred portions of the memorial from the Pacific Conference, have had the same under consideration, and offer the following as their report:

From all the information derived from the various documents placed in their possession, and from the statements of different brethren who have been in that field, your committee are constrained to believe that the interests of our Church are gaining a firm footing in that interesting region, and require only the fostering care of the body to secure, under the blessing of God, complete permanency. With this conviction, we can but feel that it is the duty and true policy of the Church to adopt liberal measures for the aid and encouragement of our brethren who are laboring so worthily to advance the kingdom of Christ in that portion of his vineyard.

We ought to pursue the course, as a measure of economy, that we may save and render available the large amount of money which has already been appropriated to the work, and retain the services of the brethren who have gone out there relying upon the good faith of the Church—t at we may not forfeit the confidence of the Church by seeming to be un teady and fickle in our plans and purposes, entering upon fields of labor with pledges to the world that we would prosecute our designs, and then ingloriously abandoning them, and thot our brethren may in future rely.

For i n the requests presented in the memorial, in that which relates to the increase of the strength of the Pacific Conference by transfers.

The memorialists represent that the work in that Conference is suffering for want of men of experience and ability; and your committee are convinced that this is true. Most of those who have gone there have been young in the ministry, and though good men and true, many of them lack that weight of character and talent necessary to give the cause of Southern Methodism that elevated position which it ought to and might soon be made to occupy. Your committee cornestly hope that this prayer of the memorialists will be answered at an early day—Delay may go far toward defeating the objects had in view, and now within our reach.

A house of worship is greatly needed in San Francisco; our cause there is almost prostrate for want of it; and our brethren and friends in that city, though willing to do their utmost, feel that they cannot secure one without help from abroad, and call upon us to aid them. To this call we feel that the Church at home ought to and would respond, were it properly brought before them.

This, it is believed, would be most successfully done by the Bishop who may be designated to attend the next session of that Conference, in the interval between the adjournment of this body and the time of departure for that region.

Upon the requests that our Church in the Pacific Conference should be furnished with books—that aid might be afforded to the Pacific Methodist, and that Rev. O. Fisher should be compensated for sacrifices made in sustaining that paper—your committee have found more difficulty in reaching satisfactory conclusions.

The most feasible measure that has occurred to us for meeting those several wants, is to be found in furnishing them with books at such rates that in meeting the first of these wants we shall place in their hands the means of meeting the other two, at least in a good degree, by the profits on their sales. That the Church there should have our books, and not be obliged to use those of the Northern Church, is very clear, and that they might be furnished to them at such prices as would afford aid to other interests and the Publishing House by so doing, we think is evident. If aided beyond this, it must be by direct appropriation. In conclusion, we recommend for adoption the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, That we have undiminished confidence in our brethren of the Pacific Conference, and will give them our warmest sympathies, fervent prayers, and hearty support.

2. Resolved, That the Bishops be and they are hereby requested to strengthen our brethren in the Pacific Conference, by transferring as soon as practicable at least four men suitable in point of talents and influence to that work.

3. Resolved, That the Bishop who may be designated to attend the next session of the Pacific Conference is hereby requested to do what he can to raise funds for the erection of a church in San Francisco, by laying the subject before the Church as far as practicable, and carry the same with him, to be applied, under his advice, to that object.

4. Resolved, That in order to supply the Church in the Pacific Conference with books for the present, the General Conference recommend that the book agent furnish them with $1000 worth of our publications at 10 per cent. on prime cost, on condition that they pay one-half of the amount in four months after the books are received in San Francisco, and the balance in twelve months from their reception.

5. Resolved, That the Missionary Society be and hereby is instructed so appropriate $1000 per annum to the Pacific Methodist for the next four years.

J. HAMILTON, Chairman.

Nashville, Tenn., May 24, 1858.

The first resolution of the report was adopted.

While the second resolution was under consideration,

Bishop Andrew said: You have determined, by your action the other day, not to strengthen the Episcopacy. You have said we need no strengthening. Therefore, we are a very strong corps. But it seems you expect one of us to visit California annually for the next four years. Of course you intend that some of the Conferences here shall run the risk of being neglected. The Bishops seem to have got into strange latitudes. We are a great convenience to the Church. When the Conference can't do a thing, the Bishops can do it. The Bishops can send men to California. The Bishops can go to California. You were for making one of the Bishops write a book. I think the Bishops have enough to do—a little more than they ought to have. I think some of us ought to be superannuated. I have no objection to be considered superannuated myself.

The resolution was adopted.

On the third resolution J. Hamilton said he was sorry Bishop Kavanaugh was not present. The Bishop had expressed his opinion that if we could raise three or four thousand dollars, it would go far towards accomplishing this object.

J. Boring said he would like the Conference to make a more liberal provision. If the Bishops should detail one of their number for that work, and, before going, he should visit our principal cities, towns, and wealthy sections of country, he might raise money enough to carry great relief to our brethren in San Francisco. A correspondent of the Christian Advocate and Journal, both last year and this, had stated that the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, had expended fifty thousand dollars missionary money for the establishment of a church in San Francisco. It was false and slanderous. He had written to the editor, correcting the matter, but had not yet seen the correction in the paper.

W. R. Branham said the correction was published in the last number of the Christian Advocate and Journal.

J. Boring did not wish to convey an improper idea. Brother Branham informs me now that the correction has been made in the New York paper, with the exception of one item.

O. R. Blue proposed to amend, by adding a proposition to the effect, That in view of all the circumstances connected with the Church in California, our brethren there be advised to form a separate organization.

On the motion of J. W. Kelley, the amendment was laid on the table.

H. N. McTyeire proposed an amendment to this effect:

Resolved 1. That if at any time during the next four years the Pacific Conference should judge it expedient to change its present relation to the Methodist E. Church, South, it have authority to do so.

Resolved 2. That if the Pacific Conference should elect a Bishop for their own service, the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, shall, if they approve of the person so elected, ordain him according to our forms to such work and service.

The CHAIR—That cannot come in.

The third resolution, authorizing funds to be raised for the erection of a church in San Francisco, was then adopted.

The fourth resolution, authorizing the Book Agent to furnish said Conference with $1000 worth of books, at ten per cent. advance on cost, etc., was also adopted.

The fifth and last resolution, authorizing the Missionary Society to appropriate $1000 per annum to the Pacific Methodist, for the next four years, was also adopted.

J. BOARING—I was about to express my strong desire to have this sum raised to $1500, instead of $1000, because they need it, and because we have already appropriated $1500, $1000, and $800 towards the support of the German Apologist there. That bill passed the house without the slightest difficulty; and it does seem to me if we were justified in that, we might go to the extent of $1500 in this.

H. N. McTyeire now desired to submit his resolutions by way of amendment.

The CHAIR—Let it come up as an independent proposition.

On motion of T. O. Summers, the report was now adopted as a whole.

H. N. McTyeire now submitted his propositions above rehearsed, (signed also by J. G. Bruce and J. H. Linn,) and they were read by the Secretary.

D. M. Wiggins proposed to amend, by including in the provisions of the resolutions the Conferences of Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas.

H. N. McTYEIRE—I love the connection of Methodism as much as any man; but there are circumstances which make it a wise and prudent thing, for the sake of Methodism, to set off certain independent bodies. The Wesleyans have already set off Australia, because that country was so far from them; and since they have taken that measure, the work in Australia has greatly prospered. They have also set off the French Conference, after having cultivated it for a few years, for good reasons. The Church, North, has set off Liberia, to do the best it can, and I have no doubt it will be much better, and that much advantage has been realized in all three of these cases. Suppose that in future we should want to help Methodism on the Pacific, this would not prevent us from doing so. The Church, North, still find, sometimes, that they cannot spend a thousand dollars better than by giving it to the French Conference. So I have no doubt it would be with us and our Pacific brethren if we were to set them off. We could not do a better thing than to send out money to help them. In the next place, I believe that if this work continues hanging on to us as it now does, it will die. That is my sad faith. It has had no visitation from our Bishops for its last two Conferences.

A VOICE—"For one."

H. N. McTYEIRE—My brother says for one, and the reason is, that our superintendency could not spare them a Bishop. It is not the Bishops' fault, but it is death to the work there. Allow them to set up for themselves, if they should judge it expedient—let them have an organization of their own—and they will draw such men to them as cannot now be induced to go. Your report calls for at least four men to be sent out now—out of hearing, out of sight. But so long as you hold them under leading-strings at home, you cannot get them. But if you say, "Go out and develop; have an existence of your own," you will find plenty of men willing to go. Again, I learn from good authority, that when the last General Conference North were about to take some extreme action on the subject of slavery, their Pacific dependencies were very uneasy. Still, I believe they will so act at their next Conference, and that it will throw them off. At present, these Methodists will not join any organization of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; but set up this Pacific Conference, under the name of Western Methodism, or any other name they may choose to adopt, I have no doubt that in a few years you will have a strong, combined Conference there, working out a great destiny, such as under your present protectorate they will never be able to accomplish. Hold on to it as it is, administer it as heretofore, and there will no large success. I regard this proposition to be the only chance for large success and sure.

P. DOUB—I am opposed to any such measures. The brother from New Orleans tells us that the Canada, the French, and the Liberia Conferences have all been set off; but if you will look at the journal of these transactions, you will find that they were set off on the ground that they belonged to civil governments, diverse and contrary to the Government of the United States. The other argument for setting off the Pacific Conference is, because, if it continues to hang on to us, it will die. This is the first time I ever heard, sir, that it was necessary to amputate a defective limb in order to save its life. I think the best way is to let it remain on the original stem. Let us send the life-blood there, and it will live. With reference to the Pacific dependencies of the Northern Church, I think the greater probability is that they will unite with the Church, South, under any circumstances.

C. C. GILLESPIE—Mr. President——

The CHAIR—I think this proposition will have to lie on the table, under your rules. I cannot indulge debate. There is nothing before you, unless you suspend the rules.

W. BARRINGER—I move to suspend the rules.

C. K. MARSHALL—I hope that will not be done. Other committees are waiting to report.

The motion was lost.

C. K. MARSHALL—I have a report from the committee on the Great Central Periodical; and this paper is to bear the same relation to other papers that the Mississippi does to its tributaries.

The report embraces two resolutions, to be numbered as the 4th and 5th of seven resolutions, heretofore reported from the same committee. They are to the following effect:

1. The General Conference to make provision for raising a permanent fund of not less than $100,000 for the endowment of said weekly paper—the interest on which is to be appropriated to the sending of the paper among the needy.

2. All sums given to said endowment fund shall be invested within the limits of the Conference where their donors respectively reside.

D. B. Nicholson moved that the subject lie on the table.

C. K. MARSHALL—It is a very important subject, but I yield. I move to amend, so as to make the report embracing these resolutions a special order for to-morrow at 10 o'clock.

The amendment was rejected.

The subject was then laid on the table for the present.

On motion, S. Anthony and W. J. Sasnett were allowed now to record their votes for the adoption of the Expunging Resolutions.

ADMINISTRATION AND CHARACTER OF THE BISHOPS.

The Conference now again took up the consideration of the unfinished order, viz.: the Episcopal committee's report, No. 3, on the administration and character of the Bishops—particularly that part having reference to complaints against the manner of the administration of Bishop Early—the question being the adoption of the amended substitute by J. G. Jones.

The substitute was withdrawn; and then, as the result of a debate of an hour and a half, the following amendment of the report of the majority, submitted by G. W. Carter and J. G. Jones, was adopted; and so the report was adopted and passed record:

Resolved, That after a patient consideration of the complaints made against Bishop Early, the Conference deeply regrets there is any ground for said complaints; nevertheless, inasmuch as the complaints submitted do not impeach the purity of his character, nor his fealty to the Church, but refer to the manner of his administration; and furthermore, in view of the explanations made by Bishop Early, and his expressed willingness to guard against giving offense in future on the points above referred to, his character do now pass.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

J. H. McFERRIN said in this connection—I hope the Conference will bear with me whilst I make a few words of explanation. I have been approached this morning by one or two members, and a little reflection has been made upon me privately, because, as Editor of the Daily Advocate, I have not permitted more full and extended reports of the speeches, etc., in this case to be made public. I certainly did, as far as I have been concerned, keep out every thing I could, and I would gladly have restricted the report more. The reporters have taken more extended notes, but restricted themselves in writing out a great deal. Still I have hewed down their report; cut it out, restrained and restricted it, and given as little as I possibly could. I have not done this thing arbitrarily, but on full advice and counsel of many aged and experienced brethren. If I have done wrong in this, I have done so upon the exercise of my best judgment in the case, and upon the advice of men of wise heads and good hearts. Now, if the Conference is not satisfied with what has been done in this respect, if they still desire a report setting forth a brief statement of the facts in the case, I hope they will appoint a judicious committee to draw it up. I could not think it required of me to report all that has been proposed and said in this case. I still think I have done right; and thank the body for the opportunity to explain my course.

The CHAIR—The Chair has no doubt of the prudence of the course pursued by the Editor.

Bishop ANDREW—I think Bro. McFerrin deserves a vote of thanks for having kept out those things; and I hope he will not report the debate of this morning.

After further explanation—

The vote on the adoption of the report, as amended, was taken by an affirmative rising up of the members—without a division—the Chair declaring it a very decided affirmative vote.

The current preaching appointments and committee notifications were made,

And then the Conference adjourned.

Benediction by Bishop Pierce.

TUESDAY, May 25.

The Conference met at half-past eight o'clock, the opening services by Rev. Wm. McMahon—Bishop Pierce in the chair.

The journal of yesterday was read and authenticated.

Bishop Paine was now called to the chair.

J. B. McFerrin asked and obtained leave to withdraw the report, No. 4, of the committee on Books and Periodicals—the committee being desirous of making a slight modification therein.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE SUPPORT OF THE BISHOPS.

W. M. Wightman, from the committee on the Episcopacy, submitted their report, No. 5, as follows:

Resolved, That the appropriation for the support of the Bishops annually, for the next four years, commencing with June 1, 1858, shall be as follows:

Bishop Soule, $1000; Bishop Andrew, 1400; Bishop Paine, $1000; Bishop Pierce, $1500; Bishop Early, $1000; Bishop Kavanaugh, $1000.

For the widow and youngest son of Bishop Capers, $700.

For the widow of Bishop Bascom, $150.

For the son of Bishop Bascom, to be paid to his guardian, $250.

J. E. Evans moved the adoption of the report.

E. F. SEVIER—There is one item in that report to which some of us object. We understand that the son of Bishop Bascom is now about fifteen years of age, and the Discipline restricts the support of children to sixteen years. That report contemplates an annual appropriation for four years—three years beyond the limitation of the law. The report comes in as from the whole committee. It is not so. I speak for myself, and perhaps others of the committee. We do not, on that point, concur with the majority. We think we have no power to make appropriations to children of Bishops, or anybody else, beyond the age of sixteen years. Individually, I object also to the appropriation for Mrs. Bascom. I would rather that were stricken out, and the report amended so as to give $300 a year to the Bishop's son till he shall be sixteen years of age.

A. MONROE—Brother Sevier has expressed my view.

J. G. BRUCE—Brother Sevier is mistaken about the age of Dr. Bascom's son. Dr. Bascom's son is not more than twelve or thirteen years of age.

G. W. BRUSH—He is at school, near where I live, in Jefferson county, Ky. He is a most promising lad, of about twelve or thirteen years of age.

A. H. MITCHELL—If we err at all, let it be on the side of liberality.

W. M. WIGHTMAN—I concur in that. I hope the Conference will not higgle over such a sum to be appropriated to the representative of such a man as Dr. Bascom.

L. ROSSER—I wish to call the attention of the Conference to another item in the report—the allowance to Bishop Early. I reside in Lynchburg, where his family live. I am acquainted with them. He has a very expensive family—part of them being afflicted so as to increase that expense. Besides, Lynchburg is a very expensive city to live in. I am constrained to express my surprise that but one thousand dollars should have been reported for the support of Bishop Early. It is but sheer justice, sir, that that item should be enlarged. But I must say, also, that this information was not before the committee.

F. G. FERGUSON—Perhaps it would be as well to state, in behalf of the committee, that a sub-committee was raised to converse freely with the Bishops as to the size of their respective families, and what would be necessary for their support. We tried to do this business carefully, and to make a just and uniform assessment according to what we considered the claims of each under the law. The former apportionment to Bishop Early was $1800 a year. Since that his wife ceased to be, and we thought the report presented but a fair reduction. I might say, that my figures were higher for him; they were higher for all of them. But, weighing the whole matter, the committee made the assessment reported, thinking it a proper one.

C. C. GILLESPIE—I move to make the allowance to Bishop Early $1200 a year—as better harmonizing with the rest.

A. R. WINFIELD—I would inquire whether Bishop Early has any children. I believe neither Bishop Early nor Bishop Soule has children, and if the salary of one be raised, the other should be raised also.

B. M. DRAKE—I understand Bishop Early has two daughters.

J. HAMILTON—We understood, from Bishop Early, that he has two children dependent upon him, but that they are above the Disciplinary age.

G. W. LANGHORNE—He has two daughters below the Disciplinary age.

G. W. CARTER—He has two daughters under Disciplinary age, and the decease of his wife, instead of decreasing, rather increases the expenses of his family. I would be glad if Bro. Gillespie would say $1800 instead of $1200, for I am very sure that would not cover his actual family expenses.

The motion was agreed to, and the appropriation to Bishop Early was accordingly raised to $1200 a year.

A. MONROE—As it regards the appropriation for the education and support of Bishop Bascom's son, I wish to state for myself that the dissenting members of the committee acted under what we understand to be the law. If the law allows it, I allow it most cheerfully.

E. F. SEVIER—It was on the very same ground I laid my objection. It was not the money. I am willing that the Conference, if they think proper, should give him even $500 or $600 a year till he reaches the age of sixteen. We were not willing to violate the law. If the General Conference observe not the law, how can it expect the Annual Conferences, elders, and preachers in charge to do it?

F. G. Ferguson read the law in the case.

J. B. McFerrin thought the salaries all probably rather too low, and alleged that, having himself served the Church longer for a less compensation than perhaps any other man North or South, he could speak from experience. Twelve hundred dollars was certainly not too much for Bishop Early. And this being so, it was unreasonable to suppose that a man with a wife and five or six children to be educated could subsist on $1200 or $1500.

J. HAMILTON—If it is right and proper to raise the salaries, the money can be forthcoming.

The CHAIR—We have nothing to say about that. So far as I am concerned, I want no raising of salary.

E. H. MYERS—I move to raise Bishop Pierce's salary to $1600. He has four children, and he is almost all the time from home.

F. G. FERGUSON—If that begins, we shall have to go all round.

A VOICE—That is what we want.

The CHAIR—I beg you to give Bishop Pierce the $1600, or reduce mine to his.

The motion was agreed to, and Bishop Pierce's salary was increased to $1600.

A. H. MITCHELL—From my knowledge of Bishop Andrew's family, I think his salary ought not to be less than $1600. It is true that some of his children are over Disciplinary age, but some of them from home are still dependent upon him.

D. S. DOGGETT—I feel ashamed of this whole proceeding. We are a great Church—a very great and rich Church; and to pin down our Bishops to $1400, $1500, and $1600, is, to my mind, very discreditable to us. If I could, I would move, irrespective of all this, that each Bishop should have $2000 without regard to family.

The CHAIR—Then such a carping as you would raise! We have rasping enough as it is.

D. S. DOGGETT—I think the General Conference bound in duty and honor to make our Bishops easy in their circumstances. They give up all, and are servants of the Church in the highest sense.

L. CAMPBELL—This is a difficult matter, sir, in some respects. You may vote to increase these salaries; but you cannot satisfy the people of the justice of voting the Bishops $1600 or $2000, when there are other men doing just as hard work for $500. The distinction would be felt and talked about. I would rather see the Bishops getting extra compensation distinguish themselves also by the performance of extra service. I tell you, sir, you cannot get such salaries, much as you talk of the wealth of the Church. I go for the support of the ministry, but I believe that they also should make sacrifices, and we should keep down these invidious distinctions.

J. E. EVANS—Brother Campbell says $1600 is a larger salary than any of the preachers get. That is not the case where I live. It is absurd to talk about $1500 or $1600 to support and educate a Bishop's family. I venture to say that the families of our Bishops have been supported from private sources. Why, sir, I have known ministers with $1500 and [illegible] who have been obliged to fall back on private resources. Then, the Bishops are cut off, to a very great extent, from the perquisites which inure to the pastors, which in many places amount to from $200 to $500 a year. Then the presents to the pastors are far greater. It is a reflection upon the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to say that her people will complain of $1600 or $2000. Why, sir, $2000 or $2500 would not overpay the Bishops. And though it is a delicate question with preachers to do any thing with regard to fixing their own salaries, I hope this Conference will not be deterred from taking the proper action in these cases.

C. K. MARSHALL—I greatly differ from Bro. Campbell, for two reasons. First, because he gets his argument from that exhaustless source from which he derives so many—the rock in one end of the sack to balance against something in the other. And, in the next place, I differ because he has assumed that the people will murmur. But Dr. Edwards has presented this matter in such a full, strong light that I need not refer to it. I feel that the Bishops sustain a relation to the work at large which deserves something in advance of that ordinarily doled out to them. I am in favor of Bro. Doggett's resolution.

A VOICE—It was only a suggestion.

T. O. SUMMERS—The question is on the motion to raise Bishop Andrew's salary.

J. J. HUTCHINSON—I venture to say that two-thirds of our people understand that [illegible] are receiving liberal salaries; and that would astonish many to be told that the [illegible] are receiving from $1000 to $1600. By your action here the standard value of ministerial labor is regulated. You make out the yardstick and the very office itself is lowered in the estimation of mankind by the low money appreciation put upon it. I believe in my heart that all the very sort of speeches which my Bro. Campbell has just made against raising salaries, would justly refer the cause of the crushing [illegible] of the ministry of which he speaks. The Methodist Church is abundantly able to honor ministry in a just and liberal way, and our membership will do it, if you will only put the matter in a proper light before them.

B. M. DRAKE—I move a reconsideration of the report.

Bishop ANDREW—I can [illegible] to the [illegible] of brethren in this matter. It is not a natural thing to inquire into the difference in salaries of Bishops and others. All I know is true that none of the Bishops are supported by the Church. For myself, I [illegible]

REPORT OF THE AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.

R. Alexander presented a report from the Committee on the Claims of the American Bible Society.

The first resolution was read for adoption, as follows:

Resolved, That we continue to approve the American Bible Society, and cordially co-operate with it in the great work of circulating the Holy Scriptures in our own country and throughout the world.

The Rev. Mr. McNeill, Financial Secretary of the Society, came forward and addressed the Conference. He said that the action of the Board of Managers, within the last year, had excited great interest in some parts of the country, and he hoped it would be cordially and fully acquiesced in by all the friends of the Society. In consequence of the discreponcies and typographical errors existing in the different editions, a collation had been ordered, and a corrected editlon issued, several years ago.—Soms dissatisfaction had been expressed with this edition by several ecclesiastical bodies.—It was ascertained that several unwarrantable alterations had been made, and the Board felt bound to recede, and correct this new edition.

H. N. McTyeire responded. He had several days ago drawn up a preamble and resolution, which he now read, as indicative of the sense of some of us on this subject.

He offered, as a substitute for the report, the following preamble and resolution, seconded by J. Boring:

Whereas, This Society, under the pressure of what seems to be a sectarian influence, has lately receded from an edition of the Holy Scriptures which had been generally called for and accepted by the American public; therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on the American Bible Society be instructed to inquire into the matter, and especially whether the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is properly represented in the Board of Management, and report at an early day to this body.

He said: The American Bible Society is a noble institution; but recent developments make it necessary that Methodists should look to its working and its catholic character, and so safely continue our contributions for Bible circulation throughout this channel. Local and sectarian influences have so far been manifested of late as to challenge attention. It is said that $3000 can be so laid out about New York and Brooklyn as to purchase a controlling voting power in its gravest deliberations. Is this so? The Society should be revised, if not the book. A Committee on Revision, representing various patronizing Churches, after learned and careful labor, produced an edition of the Holy Scriptures—not a revision proper—and their results, after having been accepted and circulated for six years, have been put aside. The committee's labors were valuable, and gave us the most perfect copy of the Bible in the world.—They touched no disputed word—no word on which a theological issue could be made; they did not revise, but edited and proof-read the text of King James.

A distinguished member of a Presbyterian Assembly lately in session in another part of the country, is reported as boasting before that body of "the boundless power of the Presbyterian Church, as felt in this thing; never had seen it so signally manifested as on this question. Synod after synod took up the matter and made the Society recede," etc., etc.

I fear that this Society, if all its true friends are not on their guard, is to be made another of many examples, how certain Churches manage to obtain undue and vaunting control in every society, no matter how catholic, with which they have to do. This hue and cry raised by a few Old School divines, leading on Synods and Assemblies, glorying in "boundless power," and taking this occasion to show it, caused the Society to recede. Their glorying is not good—it is offensive. If I am correctly informed, the Board of thirty-six Managers has sixteen Old School and five New School Presbyterians in it, and but four Methodists, and not one of these representing our branch of the Church.

This is not according to the basis of membership, public position and influence, or contributions. The Committee on Versions resigned upon this empty triumph of "boundless power"—all resigned save one, an eminent Presbyterian divine. Shall we all be driven on in this way, and build up an institution to be left finally in sectarian hands? We must take care not.—The question is a moral one, and demands prompt treatment. Let not this noble institution be brought into sectarian subserviency or suspicion. Let us preserve public confidence. Voluntary societies are going and have gone by the board. This one—a bond of the Christian Church and the country, and a noble charity to the world—should be preserved. If the Board of Management were right in issuing their standard editlon six years ago, they were wrong in receding from it before local and sectarian dictation. We, though contributors and life-members of the Society, opening our churches for collections and sending out agents, were not consulted in these matters of the Society. Our auxiliary Societies have not been consulted. We must speak out, here and now; and, having rights involved, must look after them. This we owe to the Society and to ourselves.

Mr. M'Neil replied.

It was true that the Presbyterian Church had a larger number of members in the Board than any other. He was not able to say exactly what was the number of representatives of any particular denomination in the Board. If he had a list of their names before him, he could not tell who were Presbyterians, or Methodists, or Lutherans, etc. He could only say that, in the official direction of the Society, each of the evangelical denominations was represented as far as practicable. The Old and New School Presbyterians were distinct. There were fifteen of the former, but several of them had become such since they were placed in the Board. The Presbyterians in that body did not act together; they were not unanimous; they exerted no denominational influence.

He regretted that this question of denominational influence should have been brought up. There was no disposition in the Board to possess or perpetuate a majority influence of any one denomination. The Presbyterians had not now, and never had, a majority. They were in the minority. But for the influence of other denominations, this action of the Board would never have been accomplished by the Presbyterians, for they were divided upon the subject. Every standing committee was composed of one member from each of the evangelical denominations; and every item of business in that Board came through those committees; so that all had an equal voice and equal influence.—There were Presbyterians in that Board who intended to resign, in order that the alleged predominance might no longer exist. For twenty years, the Methodist Church did not co-operate with the Society, but published the Bible for themselves, in their sectarian capacity. After the burning of the Book Concern, they united with the American Bible Society. Since that, when vacancies had occurred, they had been filled with Methodists, as far as practicable.—The Board consisted of thirty-six laymen, who met monthly, who met weekly, for the transaction of business. They must be men on the spot, where they may receive notice to-day of a meeting to be held to-morrow. There was, therefore, a practical difficulty in the representation of the Southern Methodist Church in the Board. But if the Church would designate any man there to represent them, he would guarantee that at the very next meeting that man should be placed in the Board. Further, these thirty-six laymen were not the sole managers of the Society, but the thirty thousand life-members and life-directors, who had a right to be heard whenever they pleased in the deliberations of the Board. The Board of thirty-six laymen was instituted in order that there might be a body of men on the ground to attend to such business as was to be done from week to week and from month to month. If there was dissatisfaction with the Board, it could be changed at the next annual meeting.

But, leaving out of view the Presbyterian element, he must say, there was not to be found a more candid, honest, faithful set of men. The edition of the Bible that they were now publishing was perfect; if there was even one typographical error in it, it had yet to be pointed out. He thought, and he believed the friends of the Society would think, they had done right in receding from an edition in which errors had occurred and in resolving to adhere to the plain letter of the Society's constitution, which was their only safeguard. And as to all this talk about thirty thousand dollars, a man might say that with such a sum he could bring in a set of men that should control the action of the body; but it was an unworthy speech, and the man who made it was ashamed of it, and retracted it. The Board was resolved that the old version of the English Bible should continue to be published by the Society, and that no alterations should be made, either in the text or the accessories, except such as were necessary for the correction of the typographical errors, the variations which had crept in from time to time. This was the present position of the Board. The Methodist representation in the Board was steadily increasing, and there was a desire to remove all dissatisfaction of that sort.

The Board of Managers is a body created by the constitution of the Society, to which is referred the transaction of the business of the Society; and when this question came before them, they felt called upon to decide in accordance with the constitution. They were bound by it; otherwise they would forfeit their charter.—They were bound to act in the emergency according to the plain teachings of the constitution; but they did not act until they had allowed a year to elapse, and they had received an expression from every part of the Society. This is not to say that every member had been called upon; but the Bible Societies of the States of Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Tennessee were heard from; and your own Nashville Bible Society were only prevented from adopting stringent resolutions calling upon the Board to take the course they did by the information that the Board would take that course. So far as the auxiliary Societies were concerned, the Board received what they conceived to be a general, hearty expression of opinion justifying their course. But with reference to the question whether the Board will not or may not act in such a way as to cut off one portion of the patrons of the Society, or one co-operating branch, the only consideration is whether the Board have acted in accordance with the views of Christians generally. It certainly cannot be held by this body that they should exercise the power of modifying the Scripture text in accordance with what they may deem advisable. I am of opinion that there are none, with the exception of the Baptists, that would go for such a license. And the consequence will be that their editions will be free from typographical errors, as far as that result can be obtained from a careful collation with the received copies.

Bishop Soule—I regret, sir, that a matter of such minor importance, with regard to this great enterprise of the American Bible Society, should have been introduced here and consumed so much time. It is not a matter of so much interest with me whether the Board of this Society at New York be Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Lutherans, or Methodists, as it is, whether this Board, composed as it may be, shall adhere to those great principles laid down in the constitution of the Society for the preservation of pure, unadulterated copies of the Holy Scriptures, and the circulation of them in every quarter of the world. That is the most important matter with me. I would desire that every thing sectional should be kept out. I thank God there is nothing in the association that has a single particle of sectionalism in it. It is a most capital institution in every respect. Why, sir, the Board of Managers of the American Bible Society must necessarily be local: it grows out of the very nature of the work they have to do. The reason for this has been sufficiently stated by the reverend gentleman who has just sat down. It is the suggestion of common sense. It must be local. But the Society itself is as broad as our land.

I was myself concerned deeply in the preparations for the first issue of the Holy Scriptures by the American Bible Society. I had the honor to be concerned in that enterprise in 1816, in the city of New York. It was a very interesting work to me, sir—very. The object of the Society was to issue the most perfect copies of the Holy Scriptures, according to the present English version. In casting over the various copies, it was found that here was a difference, and there was a difference—not merely in punctuation, but in other things.

Well, a conference was had, and a committee was appointed consisting of ministers from each denomination represented, with authority to bring each a copy of the whole English Scriptures, so they might choose between them; and the process was, then, to compare these copies and ascertain what differences there were between these copies. And we had also there the German Bible, and the French Bible, as well as the English Bible; and we had the original Hebrew text and the Greek text, and there were men in that committee capable of reading them. Dr. Matthews was there—a fine Hebrew scholar, capable of searching the Holy Scriptures in the Hebrew text. What was the course pursued? They took the copies of the English versions of the Scriptures thus brought together, and saw where they differed, and these they referred to Hebrew and Greek standards. They took the original text and examined carefully which of these copies was most agreeable to the original text. They were not going to translate the Holy Scriptures; but from these different copies they were going to make a selection of that copy which they judged most consistent with the original. This they did; and the first copy of the Holy Scriptures issued by the American Bible Society was the result of this examination—choosing that copy of the English Bible which they regarded as nearest the original text. And so far as I know, that course was pursued, and continued to be pursued. It was a most laborious work, sir. I was a member of that committee for several months, and a most laborious and interesting work it was for me. I carried Benson's Bible for my copy. But I never before had any apprehension of the extent and number of the differences in the English copies. The great object, as I have stated, was to print from that copy which, from a careful examination, was found in strictest conformity with the original text. Such was the issue of the first Bible by the American Bible Society.

You will permit me to add, sir, that I never had any connection with any Society which I esteemed as highly as my connection with the American Bible Society, except my connection with the Church of God. And so long as it stands as an elementary principle in the Christian Church, that "faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God," so long shall I rejoice to carry out the principles of the American Bible Society.

The first resolution was then adopted.

The second resolution reported being now read again by the Secretary, it was also adopted, to the following effect:

Resolved, That we recommend to the several Annual Conferences, and all Districts, Circuits, and Stations, to adopt measures for raising funds for the spread of the Sacred Scriptures in co-operation with the American Bible Society.

The question recurring on the adoption of the report as a whole—

T. O. Summers proposed to amend the preamble by striking out these words: "We strongly recommend to all our people not to purchase those editions of the Holy Bible into which the Apocrypha has been incorporated by private publishers."

The amendment was agreed to, and the words were stricken out.

C. F. Deems—I move to amend further, by striking out so much of the preamble as expresses an opinion upon the present position of the Board of the American Bible Society with regard to the action of the Committee on Versions. There is an entire paragraph there in which we endorse the action of the Board of Managers.

The paragraph was read by the Secretary.

I want that stricken out, because, in the first place, it is a proposition to endorse the action of the Bible Society, when, during all the years in which the matter has been under discussion, there has been no appeal made to us for our opinion in the case. But now, after the Bible Society has taken its position and finds some difficulty in its way, then the Southern Church is called upon to endorse its action.

In the second place, personally, I cannot vote for that, although I hold myself a fast friend of the American Bible Society, for I am just now studying the matter in question. I have not yet made up my mind upon it, although I am inclined to think they have done right. For it is conceded that the Committee on Versions contained some of the very finest scholars in America—that they brought into that work an array of talent, scholarship, and industry, such as have never been collected and engaged in such a work since the time of the translation by the authority of King James.

Why should we express an opinion? If our endorsement be so very important, why were we not consulted before? I feel averse to doing this, because no Southern Methodist scholar has yet been consulted. I think, also, that we ought to pause before we endorse this special act of a Society managed by a Board which, from the necessity of the case, as Mr. McNeill says, must reside in New York city.

I cannot go for the preamble with that in it; but with it out, after the amendment of Dr. Summers, I will freely go for the report, as I have already for the commendatory resolutions.

J. H. McNeill—I understood the brother to say that no representative of the Methodist Church was engaged in that work.

C. F. Deems—Not at all. No Southern scholar, I said.

J. H. McNeill—That is true. But this recent work of collation was performed by a committee of nine of the most distinguished scholars in this country. Two of the members of that committee—its chairman and the Rev. Dr. McClintock—have approved entirely of the course pursued by the Board, and Dr. McClintock is now upon the Board. So far are we from afflicting anybody by these proceedings, it is even true that the resigning Board are now co-operating with the Society, and are willing, upon the same ground that this body is requested to do, to approve the proceedings of the Board.

Then again in reply: This body was not before consulted, because this is the first meeting of the body since the matter in question arose.

As to the difficulty involved, they would have been involved in difficulty far worse, if this act of restoration had not taken place; they would have been involved in a violation of the Society's charter.

At this point in the proceedings, on the motion of J. H. Linn, it was ordered that when the Conference adjourn, it shall be to meet again this afternoon at 3 o'clock.

On motion of A. H. Mitchell, it was ordered that the present session be prolonged till the Conference shall have finished the matter under consideration.

After further debate, in which E. C. Slater, W. C. Johnson, J. Atkins, C. F. Deems and others took part,

L. Campbell moved that the motion to recommit the report lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

L. Campbell—I now move that Dr. Deem's motion to strike out be laid on the table.

The motion was rejected, and the question recurring on striking out the paragraph described,

Levi Pearce demanded the previous question, which was sustained; and under its force, the paragraph was stricken out, and the report, as amended, was adpoted.

H. N. McTyeire, in view of the amendments of the report, and explanations of the Secretary of the American Bible Society, asked and obtained leave to withdraw his substitute.

After the announcement of the preaching and other special notifications, the Conference, according to order, took a recess till 3 o'clock P. M.

Benediction by Bishop Paine.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Conference met pursuant to adjournment at three o'clock, Bishop Paine in the chair.

C. F. Deems conducted the devotions of the body.

T. W. Dorman presented a report, No. 2, of the committee on the Holston Conference Resolution. It states that the vote ascertained was not sufficient to bring the matter before the Conference, and begs that the committee be discharged from further action.

It was adopted.

J. B. McFerrin presented report, No. 4, of the committee on Books and Periodicals. It was withdrawn for a brief modification. It was taken up item by item. The first and second items were adopted; and, pending a discussion on the third item, a motion was made to adjourn, which motion prevailed, and Bishop Soule pronounced the benediction.

WEDNESDAY, May 26.

Conference met at the usual hour—Bishop Paine in the chair.

E. F. Sevier led the devotions of the morning.

The minutes of yesterday afternoon were read and approved.

Bishop Early took the chair and called for reports.

MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

J. Boring presented the final report of the committee on Missions, as follows.

The committe on Missions, in submitting their final report, beg leave to state that they have reviewed, in part at least, the proceedings of the Board of Managers of the Missionary Society for the last few years; and although they find the item of incidental expenses to have been heavy, do not feel it necessary to do more than allude to the fact.

In conclusion, the committee ask to be permitted to present the accompanying extract from the Journals of the Board of Managers of the Missionary Society.

The extract embraces resolutions of thanks to Rev. Dr. Scion, Secretary, and I. Litton, Treasurer of the Society for the last four years, adopted on the 19th of April, 1858.

The report was, on motion of J. E. Evans, adopted.

ELECTIONS.

A. H. Mitchell, seconded by C. D. Oliver, moved the following:

Resolved, 1. That the elections hereafter to be held by this Conference, of Book Agents, Editors, Secretaries, and the like, be held by ballot.

Resolved, 2. That Thursday, at three o'clock in the afternoon, be set as the time for holding such elections.

The first resolution was adopted.

M. J. Blackwell moved to amend the second, by substituting Friday for Thursday.

E. H. Myers suggested Saturday.

After considerable discussion, pro and con, several speakers expressing the opinion that an early election of officers would facilitate the business of the Conference, and several others the contrary,

W. W. Bennett moved to lay the whole subject on the table, which was lost.

L. Campbell moved that we now vote on the first question, which prevailed

The vote was first taken on E. H. Myers' amendment, and then on that of M. J. Blackwell, both of which were lost.

The next vote fixed Thursday, at three o'clock in the afternoon, as the time for holding the elections.

PUBLICATION OF BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

The unfinished business of yesterday afternoon was now resumed—the report of the committee on Books and Periodicals, proposing a substitute for sec. viii., part 2, of the Discipline—the question being on the adoption of the third item, in the report, namely, that authorizing the office of Financial Secretary.

B. M. Drake—I am opposed to the entire report. Let me say, in the first place, that this is a proposition to leave a long-tried plan of the Church—a plan that has built up two magnificent Book Concerns in the United States; for there was a magnificent Book Concern built up before the year 1836, which was burned in New York; and, after that, another was built up, worth perhaps eight hundred thousand dollars. The plan has been tried, and proved successful. We think our plan does now prove successful. But the reason it looks dark is, that the Publishing House has been pressed beyond propriety. New arrangements have been made and added here and there; such as the employment of colporteurs, and, in some instances, giving them decided advantages over the preachers, and thus discouraging preachers from entering into this work. Still, I am in no fear of the final failure of the old plan. Now we propose, because of these dark aspects for the moment, to change the entire plan, and establish what is called the Conference Depository system, which, according to the remark of a worthy Bishop, would require such an amount of stock to be kept on hand that it would break down by its own weight. Every Conference must have a Depository. It will require ten thousand dollars' worth of books to make a respectable Depository; and say twenty of these would require on aggregate stock of two hundred thousand dollars; and the Concern at Nashville, in order to be able to supply these Depositories, must keep on hand at least one hundred thousand dollars' worth of stock more, making a grand total of three hundred thousand dollars. The interest on that sum would be a very large amount.

But this would work badly on another account. The several Conferences, by increasing these Depositories, will find themselves in debt; and, between the discouragements on this account, and the embarrassments occasioned by the large amount of stock—dead capital—on hand, the system will go down. Again: it will involve an additional expense for agencies.—Each Depository will require its own Agent, and he must have a first-rate clerk; and every Depository must have a house. A thousand dollars for the Agent, eight hundred dollars for the clerk, and two hundred dollars to five hundred dollars for the house, will tax each Conference to the amount of two thousand dollars, making nearly fifty thousand dollars of additional expense amongst all the Conferences.—This would inevitably increase the price of books thus furnished. We talk about lowering the price.; but it seems to me that no man can help seeing that this will have precisely the contrary effect.

Now, I am in favor of continuing the old plan, and, leaving out colporteurs, put the books into the hands of the preachers—establishing only a few depositories under the authority of the General Conference.

E. H. Myers—Bro. Drake seems to think the report requires each Conference to have a depository. That is not the case.

B. M. Drake—Not at all. But one thought more. I am opposed to putting different newspapers under the control of different Conferences. It will be building up rival book concerns, and so our connectional ties will be weakened. I hope both propositions will fail, and that we shall return to our old and well-tried plans.

W. A. Smith—I shall perhaps vote for all the committee ask; but I must say, as a matter of justice to myself, that I never yet gave a vote with more hesitation as to its propriety. The principle that governs me is this: that, if I admit the general principles of a report, I concede to the committee, and those who are to carry out its principles, all they think important in the details to effect that object. Now, I am shut up as to the leading principle of the report, that the present Publishing House must stand on the principle we based it four years ago. I cannot get away from this. I wish I could. Not being in a condition to examine the details, I am disposed to admit what they ask.

As to the demand for a Financial Agent——

D. R. McAnally, (interposing)—The arrangement never passed the committee in form.—There were not more than six or seven present when it was put into the report. As one of the committee, I do not hold myself responsible for it.

J. B. McFerrin explained the history of the matter involving a withdrawal of the report for modification. He had called the committee together yesterday afternoon, and the modifications were all stated. Brother Myers notified the committee that he intended to offer this proposition for a Financial Secretary as an amendment; and thereupon, those present agreed that it should be incorporated in the report. If Bro. McAnally thinks I could have brought in a different report, he is mistaken.—There was but one dissenting vote.

D. R. McAnally—All I intended to say was, that the committee had not time to mature the subject.

E. H. Myers—When this plan originally came up, this proposition was not in it. Facts coming to my knowledge since the plan was presented, made it seem to me necessary that we should have this Financial Secretary. I could not bring it before the committee in full meeting. When I brought it before that portion of that committee, I said I would not insist on its being incorporated; but, whether incorporated or not, I intended to bring it before the Conference as an amendment, and insist upon it as a sine qua non. That is my connection with the affair. All present, save one, thought it better to come in as part of the report.

W. A. Smith, (resuming)—The explanation somewhat changes the position of the case to my mind as it relates to the principle laid down—for I never interfere with the details of a well-matured report. Unless I attack its leading features, I do not attack it at all. But it seems the committee have not matured the subject, and that makes it more appropriate that we should consider the details.

I like the plan of one head to any thing.—Two heads constitutes a monster; and I think the M. E. Church, in its experience of book-making, has found that out. I like one head; and it is proposed here to get this head in the form of a financial agent. It is urged that he will have a great deal to do. I do not think that. You contemplate the establishment of Depositories in different parts of the South.—If that is the case, and the books are sold at the Depositories on better terms than the preachers can sell them, then there will be very few accounts to keep, except with those Depositories. I understand from the reading of the report that the business of this financial Agent is simply this: to go out and beg money to endow the Book Concern at this place.—That is the way it reads to me.

Now is that proper? In the first place, we establish these Depositories all over the country, we shall have large amounts of money to raise for them; and the inquiry will be, Have we not already given three hundred thousand dollars to the Concern at Nashville? The Agent cannot dodge that question. He will be dealing with financial minds; and the very best he can say will be this: that, whilst the Publishing House has succeeded as a book establishment, it has not succeeded as the Publishing House of the M. E. Church, South, and cannot be sustained as such but by the continued donations of the people. Now, if it cannot succeed as the Publishing House of the M. E. Church, South, without the liberal donations of the people, it is a failure, and the people will tell you so; and because they believe this, they will not give you their money. It strikes me that this plan will only tend to dissociate the minds of the people from the Nashville Publishing House, and so only widen the difficulty.

There is another aspect of this case. It is not possible to turn the minds of the whole of the Southern people to Nashville, unless the trade with Nashville turns their minds to that point. So, I say, I fear that the report is not practicable in itself, because Nashville is not a great commercial centre. The more you look at it, the more evident will fais appear; and the more you turn attention to it, the more dissatisfaction will result.

J. B. McFerrin—I regret that the discussion has taken this range. I do not propose to augurate any plan that would turn the attention of the whole Church to Nashville—not at all. But I do propose that we inaugurate a plan to turn the eyes of the whole Church, the Southern Methodist Publishing House. With me, Nashville is one thing, and the Southern Methodist Publishing House is quite another thing; and locate the Publishing House anywhere else, within or without our bounds, and I will still heartily unite with you in sustaining it.

I regret that Dr. Smith talks about failure. Here is the quadrennial exhibit of the Book Agents; and if they are to be trusted, the thing has not failed at all.

W. A. Smith (interposing)—The brother speaking will do me the justice to admit that I said it was no failure as a local concern; that it was a success on that score; but that it failed to meet the wants of the Southern Church; and that, unless Nashville were a great commercial centre, was obliged to fail in that character.

J. B. McFerrin—That, Mr. President, is the most fatal item in the speech: that it is a local concern—that it has failed as a general concern, but as a local concern it has wrought admirably. Will the Doctor explain that thing to me? A general Publishing House, located at a given point, has succeeded admirably as a local institution; yet, as a general institution, it has signally failed! How has it operated? How has it operated as the agent of the whole Church? It has not confined its operations to the State of Tennessee. I am proud to say, that the conferences east of the Mountains have put in and paid for more books than the Tennessee Conference. Sir, I remember well enough that the excitement about local concerns existed before the separation. When I was young and green, I remember what used to be said about the concern at New York, and the efforts to transfer it to Philadelphia and Baltimore. There was always a war against New York, because of the Book Concern's loeality there. I was not the honor of being present when our Concern was located; but when, after no honorable struggle, Nashville had gained, I had hoped we should hear nothing more about local concerns. This idea of a local concern, dragged upon with the peculiar emphasis of my friend from Virginia, that the committee want to take the eyes of the Church to Nashville! No, Nashville is but a very small speck in the domain of Southern Methodism; and if the whole city, with this proud State House, were to go down to the depths below, it could not much affect the Church. Its progress would still be onward, as though this metropolis had never been.

But where would you make your location? At Richmond?

W. A. Smith—No.

J. B. McFerrin—At New Orleans? I have that is not the question before us; but let a man make his motion for another location, and if he can convince me that the Southern Publishing House can operate to greater advantage to the whole Church at any other point than Nashville, then I will vote for its removal before the adjournment of this General Conference. Ay, sir, it's a great thing, this Publishing House, but it involves great responsibilities also. I am reminded of the remark of a venerated man, which I heard him address to his colleagues when this location was made. Said he: "We ought the rather to rejoice that we have lost it, for we are saved from an immense trouble."

Here, sir, is the exhibit of Drs. Stevens and Owen: is this good authority with the Conference?

The Chair—No question about that, brother.

J. B. McFerrin—Well, this exhibit shows now a balance on hand, deducting all liabilities of $258,885 58. It shows also a net gain, after meeting all outside liabilities, of over $50,000, a gain of $22,000, after liabilities of every kind. And four years ago not an inch of ground was broken where this Publishing House now stands. Its expenditures began before the General Conference left Columbus, and drafts had to be drawn for thousands and thousands of dollars before a wheel was turned for the manufacture of a book.

I repeat, sir, that I am not wedded to the institution because of its locality. And I desire also to report what I said yesterday, that by a concentration of money, energy, and harmony of action by the whole Church, the Southern Methodist Publishing House will sustain itself, continue to be an ornament to the Church, South, and remain a blessing to the whole community.

W. A. Smith explained. He intended no reflection upon Nashville, the Agents, or anybody else, etc.

L. Campbell would not discuss the question of location. Let it remain. He considered the propriety of making the proposed change in the management of the concern. It has been said we do not need two Agents. We foist upon the Concern a more expensive management? We do not control the purses of our people. I would not place even the missionary cause on the footing of a tax-gathering. It seemed that our whole work was running into the hands of special agents, for special purposes, be feared. Upon the exhibit of the Agents and the statement of brother Myerin, he was willing to account this Book Concern as a success; but preferred to allow it to remain as it is. There was something suspicious in the manner of getting up that report.

W. Closs opposed, because the report contemplated an unnecessary officer. It was needless burdoning the Concern. The duties to be performed by this second Agent were uncalled for. All the work proposed to him could be better performed by the members of the Annual Conferences. They better knew the people, and when and where to make speeches. He would have the Annual Conferences to raise money and send it on for books. Do a cash business with the Publishing House. Let the Publishing House have the cash in hand. The objection of Dr. Drake, that local depositories required too much capital, struck him as singular—that the Publishing House would have too much capital. That was just what we wanted—a large tom. Other arguments looked as though the Publishing House were the recipient and not the dispenser of benefits. The statement that the depositories would purchase elsewhere struck him as very singular also, and suggested an inquiry whether we have judiciously invested our $300,000 in this Concern.

C. Betts thought it time to take action. He proposed to lay that part of the report which refers to the Financial Secretary on the table for the present. He wished a test vote.

L. M. Lee—That question was tried yesterday afternoon.

The Chair—The motion yesterday was not identical with this.

The motion was agreed to.

E. H. Myers replied to L. Campbell's charge of suspicious circumstances in connection with the report.

L. Campbell—The report was withdrawn, and one item was before only a small portion of the committee.

L. Rosser, Secretary of the committee, read the committee's proceedings in the case.

D. R. McAnally and E. H. Myers proceeded to explain at length.

C. C. Gillespie desired, by way of explanation, to sustain the statements of E. H. Myers. There were eleven members of the committee present. He had presented the same idea of two Agents two weeks ago.

The Chair now directed the reading of the remainder of the report—the question being on the adoption of the 14th item, viz:

Constituting a Book Committee, consisting of five members—three to be residents of Nashville—to advise with the Book Agent on all matters relating to the Publishing House, fix salary of Agents at Nashville, fill editorial vacancies, etc.

D. B. Nicholson—It seems to me that we ought to make it the business of the Agent to consult this committee on all important questions.

J. E. Evans—The verbiage is exactly as it is in the book.

The Chair—The same language was adopted thirty years ago.

The 4th item was adopted.

The Chair then directed the reading of the 5th item, to this effect:

Constituting a Sunday-school Book Editor, who shall also be Editor of the Quarterly Review; also na Editor of the Home Circle, who shall also be Editor of the Sunday-school Visiter.

E. H. Myers proposed a substitute for this, consisting of two items, to be numbered 5 and 6—one with reference to the periodicals of the Conference, and the other with reference to the Editors.

He proposed that the Book Agent shall publish in Nashville a weekly paper, to be called "The ——— Advocate;" a child's paper, to be called "The Sunday-school Visitor;" and after the first of January, 1859, a monthly, to be called "The Home Circle and Methodist Magazine"—combining the features of the Quarterly Review and a Family Miscellany. It will be seen, (he said,) that this disposes of the Quarterly Review, merging it into the Home Circle, sinks the Quarterly and enlarges the Monthly. The Quarterly has sunk $8000 to the Church in four years, and we had better stop such a work.

D. S. Doggett opposed the substitute. It was a blow at the Quarterly Review—a deathblow—questioning the propriety of its continuance. There was discrepancy between the figures of the Agents and the Committee.

E. Stevenson—There was an oversight in a bill payable, which was discovered and corrected by myself.

D. S. Doggett—Was this Conference prepared to pronounce the doom of the Quarterly? His connection with that Review justified his remarks. He had no personal interest in it now. It was, however, a species of literature required by the best interests of the Church. It was only a failure financially. As to its character and influence, it was not a failure. It had, for the past eight years, compared favorably with any periodical in the country; to say nothing of his own hand therein.

He proceeded to explain its financial embarrassments. A Review like this could not, from the nature of the objects contemplated by it, meet the wants of the masses. It might be adapted to the masses, but could not meet their wants. Its discontinuance would be a disaster—a discredit to the Church. He would no longer be its editor if he could be excused. It were better, he said, to discontinue some other of your papers. But the cost of the Quarterly must be paid—the labor of men of talent must be paid. Three dollars or even five dollars a year was not too much for the subscription to the Quarterly. It could not be united, compounded with any thing else. It must have individuality.

He was sorry the Quarterly was in debt; but we were not to measure our moral and intellectual energies by dollars and cents. There was not a preacher, nor a reading family, but would have a Quarterly of some sort. It had been a matter of profound regret to him that it had been out of his power to travel and set forth, in person, the claims of the Review; but he was restrained, and could not. The Conference might obtain an editor who could do this.

J. W. Phillips was opposed to making the proposed alliance of the Quarterly with the Home Circle. He would be sorry to see the Quarterly die.

Bishop Soule should exceedingly regret to see the Quarterly go down; but expressing a desire not to be noticed in these reports, the reporter deems it respectful to say that his remarks are omitted.

E. Stevenson—The Southern Methodist Quarterly needs no endorsement. Its editors have done their whole duty. The Agents also have done their duty in striving to enlarge its circulation. But after all, it has involved us in a debt of more than $8000.

D. S. Doggett—Are there not outstanding dues?

E. Stevenson—There are; but I doubt whether five per cent. on them will ever be realized—judging in this case as in all others of a kindred character. You have lost by that Review, within the last four years, nearly $9000, in my opinion; and I will go as far as any man to exempt the Publishing House from a sinking interest. I will never lift my hand again to devolve upon it such a burden. I am prepared to go as far as any man to support the Quarterly, as an individual; but I will raise my hand here for its discontinuance as a stipendiary of the Publishing House, and most cheerfully abide the disgrace and dishonor, if any there be, in that act.

B. M. Drake was opposed to both the original item and the substitute. He desired the continuance of both the Review and the Home Circle. The Review had been furnished at too cheap a rate—at $1 50 to preachers. He would pay $5 per annum rather than see it go down. Dr. Doggett had unveiled the matter. He was the man for the work, but during the whole of his editorial career he had been occupied with pastoral labors. Such an editorship required all the energies of any mind. The union of the Quarterly with the Home Circle would make quite another thing from either. He desired the continuance of both, in their appropriate, distinctive character.

L. Campbell was in favor of the substitute. Fact was better than theory. Neither the Quarterly nor the Home Circle had paid expenses. Failing to make papers for the masses, it were better to make none. Dollars and cents were substantial matters. He went for retrenchment. This Quarterly could not be put on wheels and be made to go at $3 or $5 a year. We must have reading for the masses, or no reading, etc.

D. S. Dogget spoke to the character of the Quarterly.

J. E. Edwards said there were hundreds of ministers among us who took pleasure in that sort of literature. They must have it, or they would take the Northern Methodist Quarterly, with all its objectionable features. A discontinuance would be a going backward: he would be deeply mortified.

E. H. Myers advocated his substitute. He thought that it would be unwise to continue the Quarterly, and much better to blend it with the Home Circle. He was sorry to hear the marriage opposed—sorry to hear a married man say a young lady was more interesting than a married lady. He hoped the reporter would not set it down, for his wife to read it. The Home Circle would be improved by the marriage.

J. F. Hughes moved to lay brother Myers' subject on the table, which was carried.

The fifth item, relating to Newspapers and Editors, was then adopted.

The sixth item was adopted.

Conference adjourned.

Benediction by Bishop Soule.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, JUNE 19, 1858.

Church Dedication.—The new church in Bouligny—Jefferson City—will be dedicated on Sabbath at 3½ o'clock P. M. This church has been erected under many difficulties, and the brethren who have had the matter in charge have met with many discouragements. In January last, when the building was up, steeple and all, there came a wind and laid it prostrate. The brethren turned this providence to account with the addition of a commodious basement. Afterwards the bell was stolen from the ground and recovered through the untiring efforts of a brother. Now the house is up and finished, from steeple to basement. Let it be opened with joy and thanksgiving. Persons going from the city will take the 3 o'clock cars and get out at Napoleon Avenue.

NEW ORLEANS DEPOSITORY.

We take pleasure in announcing to the public that the establishment of the Methodist Book Depository in New Orleans begins to assume the appearance of a tangible reality. The building is secured: the Trustees have purchased, and the Depository is now permanently located at 112 Camp street.

To enable the Trustees to meet the terms of their contract and make payments on the house as they fall due, it is necessary that our friends who have subscribed to the Depository fund make as speedy payments as possible.

Let us have your earliest remittances through your merchants here, or remit to me direct.

W. H. Foster, Treas.

TESTIMONIAL.

The accompanying letter and a beautiful service of silver were placed upon the counter of the Advocate office on Tuesday morning last—the expression of many appreciating hearts—"from the Methodists of New Orleans."

"New Orleans, June 14, 1858.

"Rev. H. N. McTyeire: Dear Brother—We have learned with regret that your field of labor and usefulness is about to be transferred from New Orleans to Nashville; and as members of the Methodist Church in New Orleans we beg you to accept our prayers for your future happiness and welfare; and as a slight testimonial of our love and affection for you as a man and a Christian and our high appreciation of your able and efficient services in the Church, we beg that you accept for sister McTyeire the accompanying silver tea set."

We witnessed the bright surprise of our dear brother when his eye rested on the parting gift; a surprise doubtless shaded with the thoughts of leaving so many warm friends. For our part, we shall never be done feeling sad at losing him until he comes back to us by election, appointment, or some other providence.

Nearly ten years ago he came to this city, and from that time his labors and counsel and ministry have been truly devoted to the interests of its Methodism. Some of those years we have reason to know were full of anxiety and toil, scarcely relieved by the encouragement of success or the stimulus of hope. Yet afterward, the winter was gone and the fruit appeared.—The Society of Felicity Street, which we reckon now to be one of the most substantial Churches in the Southwest, was established under his ministry. This paper, of which the history will never be written, has passed through its various stages of life, from the feeblest first symptom, until it has fairly escaped from the chrysalid and is flying gaily over all the land. He was present at the very first dawn of its being, and by his care, patience and genius nurtured it into maturity. It is the business of a life-time to establish a paper—especially a religious one—and more especially a religious one in this city. This crown no man may take from him.

We count Nashville fortunate in the acquisition of one who will bring to the aid of its Methodism both zeal, experience and ability; if any thing remains there to be done—if Methodism is not already so mature and "refined upon the lees" as to present rather an opportunity for religious enjoyment than a theater for christian zeal. And however heartily we may welcome the successor of our dear friend, no one, we are persuaded, can ever take the place which he has made for himself in our hearts.

Brethren will doubtless learn with satisfaction that brother McTyeire, though editing in Nashville, will continue to hold his membership in the Louisiana Conference.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE BIBLE.

We learn from Mr. Kent, the General Agent of the S. W. Bible Society, that, in reply to letters he addressed to ministers of the gospel, throughout the field of the Society on the first of May, many voluntary distributors are offering to supply portions of the field in their vicinity with the "Word of Life," and some who will undertake whole counties, visiting every family. It is hoped that this will be done, wherever it is practicable, that the work of supply may be speedily accomplished.

The following results of six weeks labor by two distributors, in a portion of two districts in the city, are taken from their reports of 1st June:

Number of families visited	3,094
Number destitute of the Bible	1,072
Number who refused to receive a Bible	628
Number of Families supplied	466

VALEDICTORY—A RESPONSE.

As we were looking over the "Advocate" of last week, our eyes rested on the word "Valedictory." To us it has long been a sad, sad word; for it brings to mind the valedictories of our school-days, far back in the vista of years. We read as follows: "With a sad heart, reader, the editor (that was) takes his pen to bid you adieu." And surely our hearts were sad too, and we felt that many hearts would sympathize with ours as they read this, while others would scarcely give it a thought. To some our editor has only been an editor; but there are stronger ties that bind us. He has been our pastor—our spiritual friend and teacher. Well do we remember the first pastoral visit he paid us. It is as fresh in our memory as though it were but yesterday, although nine long years have rolled away into the ages of the past. We put into his hand the old family Bible, and as he turned its well-worn pages over, in tones of love and words of charity, he spoke of those who had read it in years gone by, although we informed him that they were of another persuasion; and that in that Bible our father had read morning and evening as we sat around the family altar. Our new pastor read a short chapter and we knelt at a throne of grace and united our hearts in prayer. When he left we felt that he was the man we had been praying the Lord Jesus to send us to gather the then scattered flock. We have often sat in the sanctuary and felt that the word preached by him came to our hearts, clothed with power from on high. We blessed God that he had given us a preacher, who was not afraid to declare the whole council of God; and that too, at a time when, as Methodists, a dark cloud hung over us. It was a time that tried the souls of many; and then it was that our pastor took a bold stand in our defence.—He took upon him our responsibilities, and to this day bears the reproach and despises the shame, for the sake of Christ.

Then there are other circumstances that make us and at parting. He is endeared to us by many sacred ties. He had visited us in deep affliction, and at such times we have realized him to be a shepherd in Israel. He has baptized our children; he has registered their names in the church-book; he has buried our little ones. He has wept when we have wept, he has rejoiced when we have rejoiced; and in every sense we have found him to be a sympathizing friend. Does any one think it selfish in us because we are so loth to part with one who has been so faithful—so true to that which the Lord of the vineyard has committed to his care? We cannot think any one so unkind. We must acknowledge that we have looked upon our editor as a fixture among us, and not a bad one either; nor did we think him easily moved. But we believe in an all-wise Providence, and that God is "too wise to err, too good to be unkind;" and, therefore, we will submit, believing as we do that all things shall work together for good to them that love and serve God. We commit into the hands of God our editor, brother, friend—praying that the richest blessings of heaven may rest upon him and his. May we, one and all, so improve the teachings received and the grace given, that when we come to bid adieu to the things of time and sense we may be borne on the pinions of faith to the paradise of God; there to sing our sufferings, to bask in the smiles of God's countenance, and to unite in ascribing praise to God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost. Amen. HOPE.

New Orleans, June 16, 1858.

Mansfield, La., June 9, 1858.

Mr. Editor: We have recently closed a protracted meeting in this village, which continued seventeen days. It resulted in 15 conversions, 27 accessions, and a most gracious revival among the membership. Our morning prayer-meetings were attended with peculiarly great power from God—a characteristic more marked this year among prayer-meetings every where than I have ever before seen or heard of. We most gratefully acknowledge the ministerial assistance bros. Pipes, Goodwyn, Scurlock and Pitts. Our gratitude to our Heavenly Father we cannot express. S.

P. S. "Commencement class-meeting" will be held in the Methodist Church in this village on the first Sabbath in July, at 9 o'clock A. M.

DEDICATION.

The new Methodist Church, just completed in Jefferson City, will be dedicated on Sunday afternoon, June 20, at 3½ o'clock, by Rev. Dr. Walker. The church is situated at the corner of Cadiz and Plaquemine streets, two squares above Napoleon Avenue and near the railroad. Friends from the city will take the 3 o'clock train and get out at Napoleon Avenue.

The River, Levees, and Crevasses.

The Vicksburg Whig, of yesterday, 17th inst., furnishes the following intelligence:

The waters remain stationary here. The flood from above is still threatening.

A large number of hands were put to work yesterday opposite this city to raise the levee, the flood of water rendering it highly probable that the levee would be overflowed.

Captain Herron, of the steamer J. H. Doane, informs the Louisville Courier that the Wabash is now a sea of water, being twenty miles wide. The prospect of the farmers along the Wabash Valley are not very flattering, as hardly an acre of corn, owing to the continued overflow, has been planted in that region this season.

The inhabitants of the village of Hopefield, opposite Memphis, have been obliged to move up into their second stories, the water having run them out from below. The Little Rock Railroad track was submerged to the depth of half a foot for the distance of a mile back from the town.

The levees continue to give way in Bolivar county. We learned yesterday from Captain Marshall Miller, of the Daniel Boone, that the levee at Mr. Gallay's plantation has broken within the past few days.

The so much talked about Yazoo Pass levee has also succumbed to the disastrous Mississippi, doing immense damage.

The Coahoma (Miss.) Citizen, of the 12th, gives the following account of the breach in the Yazoo levee:

On Thursday night, the levee one mile above this place (on the bank of the Pass) broke, and when discovered at daylight, the break was about twenty feet wide, but before the citizens could assemble, it was thirty yards wide.—Strenuous efforts to stop it were made, but to no purpose. The work was continued until the breach had gained sixty yards in width, when it was abandoned. The channel is widening and deepening every hour. The water has a fall of eight or ten feet and is rushing down it with such power and force as to fell trees in its course, throwing waves and foam, and spray, high into the air, with a roaring akin to that of an approaching tempest.

The damage to this country is almost incalculable. It is estimated by Judge Shelby and Mr. C. Boro (old residents) at $1,000,000. Judge Shelby estimates his loss at $25,000. Mr. Boro estimates his loss at $3000. It will injure a majority of our planters, by destroying crops, stock, etc. If the river remains full it will flood the country along the lower pass.

HOME CIRCLE.

This very attractive and deservedly popular periodical is published monthly by Stevenson & Owen, Ag'ts, Nashville, Tenn., L. D. Huston, D. D., Editor, at $2 per annum, strictly in advance. Each number contains 64 pages royal octavo, embellished with one or more beautiful steel-plate engravings. The matter is mainly original, and of the most important and interesting character.

To ministers of the gospel, and all others who may be disposed to act as agents in procuring subscribers, a discount of 20 per cent. will be allowed on the subscription price.

As the patronage of this admirable issue has not yet been sufficient to meet the cost of its publication, it is therefore respectfully proposed that a prompt, energetic, and continuous effort be made in all the Conferences to increase the list of its patrons to at least twelve thousand!—Come brethren, you have but to submit the claims of the "Circle" to the Church and her friends, and this desirable object will be more than realized at an early day.

Professor Morris' Grammar.

New York, May 11, 1857.

Prof. I. G. Morris—Dear Sir: I take great pleasure in offering my humble testimony in regard to the success which attended your course of instruction in this school. Of the class which I organized for you, several had a very limited idea of grammar; but after twenty lessons under your able teaching, they were quite conversant with the principles laid down in your book, and could parse with the utmost facility.

Chills and Fever! Chills and Fever!—One of the greatest remedies that has ever been laid before the public, for Fever and Ague, and which has received the highest encomiums from the press and the people is Dr. J. Huestetter's Celebrated Bitters. Who would endure the tortures arising from this terrible disease, when it can be so easily cured? Who would endure sleepless nights, burning fevers, and icy chills alternately, when a remedy can be obtained for a mere trifle? And yet how many families linger out a painful existence under this deadly blight, and do nothing but gulp down quinine, until it becomes as common as their daily meals, and still they are not relieved. None but the foolish and weak would hesitate to procure these valuable Bitters, and save themselves intense agony.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

DR. T. McGOWN'S
SARSAPARILLA
AND IODINE OF POTASI,
THE GREAT
BLOOD PURIFIER AND HEALTH RESTORER,

Prepared from sweet wood, the only kind worthy the confidence of physicians of the public. Old, imported root is inert and worthless, facts too much overlooked by the profession. According to many, this compound is nearer a Panacea or Catholicon than any; and its components have been highly extolled by some of the most distinguished physicians of Europe and America, viz: Sir Wm. Fordyce, Brodie, Lugol, Colnder, Baron, Bardsley, Hanson, Record; Cendrin, Bell, Harrison, Cumming, Hilbreth, &c.—for the cure of Scrofula or King's Evil, White Swelling, Gout, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Dropsy; diseases of the Kidneys, Liver, Lungs, Skin; Eruptions; Piles, Ulcers, old and obstinate Sores (McGown's Ointment should also be used, applied locally;) Blotches, Pimples on the face, Ringworm, Tetter, Chronic Sore Eyes, Scald Head, Leprosy, Goiter; Pains of the Bones, Joints; Spinal Complaints, Lumbago, Chronic Bronchitis, Tenacious Lung Cough, Bleeding from the Lungs, Typhoid Pneumonia, Scarlet Fever, Erysipelas; Dyspepsia, Jaundice; Glandular Tubercles, especially of the neck; Cachexy, Palsy, Tumors, Gonorrhea, Gleet; Enlargements of the Liver, Spleen, Testes; Syphilis, in all its forms. Sir Wm. Fordyce says of Sarsaparilla, when exhibited in constitutions enfeebled and emaciated by long attacks of the venereal, or by the abuse of mercury, it is the "great restorer of the appetite, flesh, color, strength and vigor." Professor Bell, lecturing on the Venereal, says of Iodine of Potash, it is a "powerful, safe and benign remedy, and its salutary operation is aided by preparations of Sarsaparilla."

Female Complaints.—Amenorrhea, Dysmenorrhea, Irregularities, Suppression, Diseases of the Womb, Leucorrhea, Tumors, Enlargement of the Uterus, Breasts; Chorea, etc.; Impurities of the Blood or System, and all diseases dependent thereon. Makes the skin clear and smooth—an object of interest with the ladies. It should be used in the spring to purify the blood and prevent sickness.

McGOWN'S ESSENCE TAR—A certain cure for Bowel Complaints, as Diarrhea, Dysentery, Flux, etc.

McGOWN'S DOGWOOD AND IRON—A permanent cure for Chills, Ague take, Night Sweats, Debility, Dyspepsia, etc.

McGOWN'S GOLDEN PECTORAL—For the relief of Coughs, Colds, Consumption, etc.

McGOWN'S STOMACH BITTERS—A pleasant invigorating Tonic, to be used before meals in Dyspepsia, Debility, etc.

McGOWN'S OINTMENT—Never known to fail curing old Sores, Cancers, Chronic Sore Eyes, etc.

The above prepared and sold in Memphis by H. S. HUGHES, Druggist, No. 343 Main st.

TEACHERS AND LECTURERS.

Prof. I. J. Morris, A. M., the author of a Philosophical and Practical Grammar of the English Language, is prepared to engage the services of accomplished Teachers and Lecturers to travel and teach his system of Grammar. By a skillful use of this system learners of proper age and fair capacity are, in the brief space of twenty days, taught to parse any sentence which they can read understandingly, and to correct ungrammatical expressions wherever found. This is no experiment, as the peculiar and startling advantages of the system have been successfully demonstrated for years by others as well as by the author of himself. As there is a widely extended call for the work, a large number of competent Teachers and Lecturers are already profitably engaged travelling and promulgating this system. Successful Teachers and Lecturers can, in this enterprise, easily make from $100 to $200 per month, exclusive of expenses. Payments monthly.

The field of labor will not be confined to any particular locality.—Teachers can obtain a specimen copy of the work by forwarding $1 00 (and 12 cents in postage stamps) to I. J. Morris, Oak Bowery, Chambers county, Ala., (near the Montgomery and West Point Railroad.)

June 12-2t.

Worms—Their Symptoms and Cure.—Among the most common symptoms of worms, are irregularities of the bowels, giddiness, pallor, a dry spasmodic cough, an intermittent appetite, a disagreeable breath, hardness and prominence of the abdomen, wasting of the flesh, irritability, tingling of the ears, occasional nausea, leaden dullness of the eyes, indisposition to exertion, and restless slumbers; whenever these symptoms appear, administer Wiser's Canadian Vermifuge, and in 48 hours relief will be obtained; in a week a radical cure will be effected, and health, strength, and appetite will be completely restored.

☞ Be particular and remember the name "Wiser's Canadian Vermifuge." This is the only article that can be depended on. Remember this. For sale by

POETRY.

THE PLACE WHERE I WAS FORGIVEN.

There is a spot to me more dear
Than native vale or mountain;
A spot for which affection's tear
Springs grateful from its fountain.

Not kindred souls abound,
Though that is almost heaven,
But where I first my Savior found,
And felt my sins forgiven.

Hard was my toil to reach the shore,
Long toss'd upon the ocean;
Above me was the thunder's roar,
Beneath, the waves' commotion.

Darkly the pall of night was thrown
Around me, faint with terror;
In that dark hour how did my groans
Abound for years of error.

Sinking, and panting as for breath,
I knew not help was near me,
And cried, "Oh, save me, Lord, from death,
Immortal Jesus, save me."

As quick as thought I felt him mine,
My Savior stood before me,
Around me did his brightness shine,
I shouted, "Glory, Glory!"

O, sacred hour! O hallowed spot,
Where love divine first found me!
Wherever falls my distant lot,
My heart shall linger round thee.

And when from earth I rise to soar,
Up to my home in heaven,
Down will I cast my eyes once more
Where I was first forgiven.

OBITUARIES.

April 11th, 1858, the Rev. MARK MCCUTCHEN ceased to suffer and entered into the rest remaining for the people of God. He was born in Oglethorpe county, Ga., December 1794; was converted about the year 1816; appointed class leader about 1824; and licensed to preach in 1845. From the period of his spiritual birth to his temporal death he was an humble, devout, zealous soldier of the cross. In all the relations of life, both private and public, secular and religious, he took for his model and exemplar Him who was meek and lowly of heart. His was the simplicity of the truth—Christ Jesus; the humility of self knowledge; the zeal of an all apprehending, strong, unwavering faith, which stumbled not at the most mysterious, incomprehensible, and awe-inspiring truths of revelation. The invisible and eternal worlds, which can scarcely be considered as having an existence in the natural mind as vital ideas, were present to his spiritual discernment as actual entities, as awful truths, the reception of which was essential to salvation. The leading idea of his mind, the all-absorbing, all-subjugating principle of his heart was to glorify God in the conversion of sinners, and he was ever diligent and assiduous in his efforts to accomplish this highest end. In the pulpit he was simple, earnest, pointed, persuasive, and pathetic: Christian experience was his favorite theme. He loved to dwell meditate upon the preciousness of the fruits of the Spirit: and while he spoke, his countenance, radiant with the out-beamings of the light of love divine, was an eloquent exposition of the truths flowing from his lips. The truth which he proclaimed to others as the wisdom and power of God, was the soul of all his words and actions. Never have I known a man so heavenly minded all his thoughts, desires, affections, and hopes were hid with Christ to God. His heart was a sympathetic fountain whose waters were ever flowing into channels of want and suffering. To the extent of his ability he was abundant in good works. His liberal hand was ever open to the call of christian charity for christian beneficence. The purity of his life may be attributed to the fact that he was directed by the spirit and grace of God to the Bible as the fountain of knowledge. He proved it to be profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness. This knowledge, sanctified by the Spirit of God and directed into the channel of usefulness, was an accession of power conducting him to a deeper, a richer experience, a more intimate acquaintance with the way of salvation, the perfection of love. He became a living, illustrative, demonstrative argument in proof of the practicability of attaining to a state of holiness in this life which the opposers of this doctrine could not refute. But a few months ago the writer, while maintaining the efficacy of the blood of Jesus to cleanse from all sin, was challenged to produce a single example of one who had been thus sanctified. I mentioned Father McCutchen. The force of the argument was felt and admitted. This living epistle the dim eye read, the dull understanding apprehended, the obtuse conscience felt. Blessed be the light of such an example, the savor of such an influence—their tendency being to direct and preserve us in the way of knowledge, righteousness, and true holiness. As a traveler in a weary land loves to recline in the shadow of a great rock and forget the burden and heat of the day while enjoying the cool breeze and verdant moss, so the Christian in this Sahara of sin loves to recline in the ample shade of sublime and far-spreading christian example, and oblivious of the heat and thirst, the toil and pain endured by the way, delights to refresh and animate his exhausted spirit by contemplating the living beauty of holiness. We may contemplate the lives of Alexanders, Cæsars, and Napoleons without admiration, ambition, emulation, veneration or awe; but what mind, in the least illuminated by the Spirit of God, can contemplate the image of his Savior, however rude and imperfect in itself, however dimly discerned, and not be attracted by its beauty, humbled by its purity, and moved with strong desire for its possession. Such was the effect produced in the mind and heart of the writer by intercourse with this eminent Christian. It was my pleasant and profitable privilege frequently to associate with him in the domestic circle, in the class-room and in the public sanctuary. He was ever the same uniform, consistent Christian. For twenty years he was the prey of a severe dyspepsia. His sufferings were such as can be imagined only by the victims of this arch fiend of the powers of melancholy; but where disease and suffering abounded grace did much more abound. He was always calm, resigned and usually cheerful. Several times at distant intervals he was carried to the verge of eternity; but no trembling seized his soul; his mind, stayed on God, was kept in perfect peace. The fatal attack his friends attribute to over exertion in the house of God. Having addressed the colored congregation with his habitual fervor, he went home feeling much fatigued. In a few days he was taken with a profuse hemorrhage from the stomach. On the Sabbath preceding his departure he called together his household, and read in their audience the 12th chapter of Deuteronomy. That night the blood flowed afresh and so exhausted him that he was no longer able to converse with his family and friends. To their inquiries he could reply only in monosyllables. Bro. B. F. Alexander, being present during the last week of his illness, addressed to him a variety of leading questions, with a view of eliciting a knowledge of his spiritual condition, all of which he answered by pressing his hand. In the prospect of death he was calm, peaceful, and resigned. So severe had been his sufferings for years that he loved to think of Heaven as a rest and joyfully anticipated the period when he would be permitted to enter into that rest. This period at length arrived. He became more and more feeble until Sabbath morning, when the king of terrors, assuming the form of an angel of mercy, loosed his fetters and his emancipated spirit winged its flight to the paradise of the saints. To his wife and children he has left a good name, a better inheritance than great riches; to the Church an example worthy of the imitation of the most ambitious, of the holiness of truth; to all a holy influence, which, as a mountain cast into the ocean of human life, hath upheaved a circlet of waves which shall continue to expand until the shores of eternity feel its impulse. Who can review a life so rich in the elements of moral nobility—a death so superior to fear, so tranquil in love, so triumphantly in hope—and not exclaim from the depths of his heart, let me live the life of the righteous "and let my last end be like his"—"Mark the perfect man and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace."

Resolutions of the Quarterly Conference of Caddo Circuit.

Resolved, That in the death of the Rev. Mark McCutchen we have lost a pure, devoted, faithful, and efficient minister.

Resolved, That we tender our warmest Christian sympathies to the widow, children, and friends of our deceased brother.

Resolved, That we earnestly beseech our Heavenly Father to enable us to follow him as he followed Christ, that our end may be like his—peace.

Resolved, That the secretary of this Quarterly Conference be requested to transmit a copy of these resolutions to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

J. PIPES, P. E.

DIED—In this city on the 13th of March, of typhoid fever, MRS. SUSAN BROWN, wife of Mr. B. F. Brown, in the 43d year of her age. She was born in Alexandria, Va., where she was converted and became a member of the M. E. Church. Her father was a brother of the late Bishop Waugh, and died in this city while on a visit to his daughter in 1857. About that time we first became well acquainted with her and had opportunity to mark that tender solicitude for the welfare of others which was the characteristic trait of her life. Previous to her residence in New Orleans she lived in St. Louis, surrounded by all the comforts of wealth. Then, in prosperity, her generosity and piety shone as conspicuously as they did afterward; when she was reduced to the most slender means of support.—Amid the severest struggles and cares, her cheerfulness upheld her strength and was a source of pleasure to all who knew her.

She was ardently attached to Methodism; was always to be found in the class and prayer meeting; was an intimate friend of the preachers; was considerate of the poor and attentive to the sick; was active and full of mercy and good fruits as if she had no poverty or troubles of her own. No wonder that she attached to her almost every one with whom she became acquainted. It was a pleasure to visit one who was so forgetful of self; so perfect a lady in all her social intercourse, and whose life had in its texture so much of the substance and grace of christianity.

When first attacked with the sickness which proved fatal she was impressed with the belief that she would not recover. During its progress she was calm and without fear and expressed strong confidence in the Savior's blood.—She requested the reading of the Scriptures—14th of St. John—and the singing of "Jesus lover of my soul."—While listening to "five bleeding wounds he bears," she exclaimed, "I have lived much for this world, but what hope there words inspire!" When asked if she could trust the Savior, she answered, "O yes, I do, I do."

She felt great solicitude for the dear children she was about to leave; but the Lord so ordered it that she saw before her death the workings of a gracious Providence for their welfare. The care she felt for her children had served her for years together; by it she overcame all the labor and inequalities of life's way, and which were to her as nothing for the love which she bore them. Never was there a more devoted mother or a more striking example than her life afforded of the sustaining energy of a mother's love. "Her children arise up and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her."

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

TO A CHILD.

How sweet it is for a dear child to give to God the dew of his youth! Some may think that this bright world is so full of life and joy, and they love is so well, that they do not wish to think much of God, lest it should make them sad and dull. He takes care of them through the night, they rise from their beds and do not kneel down to thank him! His bright sun cheers them with its beams, and they do not ask that Christ, the light of the world, may shine in their hearts! The food they eat, the clothes they wear, are all sent to them from God, and yet they do not love to pray, and so they do not thank him for his gifts! Is this kind? Is it right? No, you know that it is wrong for you to live in this way!

God says to you to-day, "My son, give me thine heart." O do not say, as you have done so long, Go thy way for this time! This bright world can not give you true joy, so long as your heart is so full of sin that you do not hear the voice of God when he calls to you.

A few days since, I said to a dear boy, "John, do you love to pray?"

"O no," he said, "I don't get time!"

Now I will just tell you what God has done for that child since this new year came in, and see if you do not think it is a shame for him to treat his best Friend so ill.

Just at the close of the year he sent for me to come and see him. I found him so ill that I thought he must soon die. If he had been one of Christ's lambs I should not have felt so sad. But I knew that if John should die in his sins, his soul must be lost. He would not come to Christ when he was in health, and now he had so much pain that it made him worse to talk to him. The things that he loved most when he was well did not now please him at all. If he had all the wealth in the whole world, it would have been of no use to him, for it would not have eased his pain. In fact, John would not have cared for it then. If one has not found rest to their souls, that sweet peace which Christ gives to all those who love him, how must they feel when they find death to be near? Dear child, do you come to Christ now, and he will do with you then. For he will take all his own lambs in his arms, and bear them safe to his fold on high.

But God was so good that he did not take John out of the world with his heart all full of sin. In a few weeks the pain left him. His limbs grew strong, so that he could walk out and breathe the fresh air, and now, though he still looks pale, I meet him with his books, on the way to school. Once more he hears a low sweet voice, "My son give me thy heart." And what does he say to that dear Friend who took care of him when he was sick, and raised him up to health?

O, do not ask my heart to day,
I have no time to think or pray;

What do you say, my dear child, when you hear this call from God, "Give me thine heart!"

HAPPY DEATHS OF TWO LITTLE CHILDREN.

Little Oscar W. Belknap was a child of four summers, and Emma, his little sister, had seen but six summers when the Lord took them to himself. With another little brother and sister, they often had little meetings, and would pray to God to bless them. When the fingers of death were severing Willie's heart-strings, he asked his ma to kiss him, and smiled himself to sleep. After Willie was gone, Emma grew sad, and wanted to go to her brother. She told her ma that she would die, and go to him. Her ma asked her if she wanted to die and leave her. She said, "Yes, ma, you can die and go with us." From this time forth the child had intense longings for the spirit-land; and she had not long to pine, for in a few weeks she was with the angel brother. Two days after she fell sick she slept, and awoke and told her ma that something came into the bedroom and looked round on all four of the children, and took hold of her brother, and went to take him up, and she caught hold of him, to hold him, and it took them both up. From this time we gave her up. She slept again, and smiled, and awoke and told her ma that she had seen so many people in the churchyard, and they had such sweet music, and were marching, and her brother was with them.—She slept and dreamed the same again, or, was it not rather an angel's vision? After this, like an aged Christian, she kissed father, mother, brother, and sister, and bade all adieu, charging all to take care of each other, and not let the evil one get them. She then looked up into heaven, and said she saw "pretty things;" smiled sweetly, and while the vision yet lingered, the pure young spirit took its flight to its star-light home beyond the sky.—Western Christian Advocate.

A PET DOVE.

In Leedsville, New York, a tame pigeon accompanies two children to school regularly, flying after them along the street, alighting on the fences, trees, and in the road before them. If it flies too far ahead, it will turn round and look at the children, wait patiently for them to come up, and then fly a stretch further on; and so it continues until they reach the school. It then perches upon the window sill, where it remains until school is out, when it observes the same manner in going home.

THE GREATEST
Medical Discovery
OF THE AGE.

MR. KENNEDY, of Roxbury, has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures

EVERY KIND OF HUMOR,
From the worst Scrofula down to a Common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases, both thunder-humor. He has now in his possession over one hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.
Two bottles are warranted to cure a nursing sore mouth.
One to three bottles will cure the worst kind of pimples on the face.
Two or three bottles will clear the system of biles.
Two bottles are warranted to cure the worst canker in the mouth and stomach.
Three to five bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Erysipelas.
One or two bottles are warranted to cure all humor in the eyes.
Two bottles are warranted to cure running of the ears and blotches among the hair.
Four to six bottles are warranted to cure corns and running ulcers.
One bottle will cure scaly eruptions of the skin.
Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of ringworm.
Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the most desperate case of rheumatism.
Three to four bottles are warranted to cure the rheum.
Five to eight bottles will cure the worst case of scrofula.
A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the above quantity is taken.
Nothing looks so impossible to those who have in vain tried all the wonderful medicines of the day, as that a common weed growing on the pastures, and along old stone walls, should cure every humor in the system; yet it is a fixed fact. If you have a humor, it has to vert. There are no IFS nor ANDS, buts nor ha'n'about it, saving some cases, but not yours. I peddled over a thousand bottles of it in the vicinity of Boston. I know the effects of it in every case. It has already done some of the greatest cures ever done in Massachusetts. I give it to children a year old, to old people of sixty. I have seen poor puny, worny-looking children, whose flesh was soft and flabby, restored to a perfect state of health by one bottle.
To those who are subject to a sick head ache, one bottle will always cure it. It gives great relief in catarrh and dizziness. Some who have taken it had been costive for years and have been regulated by it. Where the body is sound it works quite easy, but where there is any derangement of the functions of nature, it will cause very singular feelings, but you must not be alarmed; they always disappear in from four days to a week. There is never a bad result from it; on the contrary, when that feeling is gone you will feel yourself like a new person. I heard some of the most extravagant encomiums of it that ever man listened to.

WILL EFFECTUALLY CURE
LIVER COMPLAINT, DYSPEPSIA, JAUNDICE,
Chronic or Nervous Debility, Diseases of the Kidneys, and all diseases arising from a disordered Liver or Stomach.

Such as Constipation, Inward Piles, or Fullness or Blood the Head, Acidity of the Stomach, Nausea, Heartburn, Disgust for Food, Fullness or Weight in the Stomach, Sour Eructations, Sinking or Fluttering at the Pit of the Stomach, Swimming in the Head, Hurried and difficult Breathing, Fluttering at the Heart, Choking or Suffocating sensations when in a lying posture, Dimness of Vision, Dots or webs before the Sight, Fever and Dull pain in the Head, Deficiency of Perspiration, Yellowness of the Skin, and Eyes, Pain in the Side, Back, Chest, Limbs, etc., Sudden Flushes of Heat, Burning in the Flesh, Constant Imaginings of Evil and great Depression of Spirits.
The proprietor, in calling the attention of the public to this preparation, does so with a feeling of the utmost confidence in its virtues and adaptation to the diseases for which it is recommended.
It is no new and untried article, but one that has stood the test of a ten years' trial before the American people, and its reputation and sales unrivaled by any similar preparations extant. The testimony in its favor given by the most prominent and well known Physicians and in the public in all parts of the country is immense, and a careful perusal of the Almanac published annually by the proprietor, and to be had gratis of any of his Agents, cannot but satisfy the fairest skeptic that this remedy is really deserving the great celebrity it has obtained.

Methodist General Conference.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

WEDNESDAY, May 26.

Conference met at three o'clock, pursuant to adjournment—Bishop Early in the chair.

J. B. McFerrin conducted the usual devotions.

T. Maddin presented a report from the Committee on Temperance. It concludes with the following resolutions:

Resolved, 1st. That no further legislation is needed on the subject of the liquor traffic, believing that the trade is demoralizing, and that offenders should be dealt with as in other cases of immorality.

Resolved, 2d. That we are, as a Church, as much as ever in favor of the temperance reform, and recommend to our members a strict adherence to the temperance pledge involved in our general rules.

W. A. Smith opposed the resolutions, alleging that it was unconstitutional to interpert by resolution an article of the constitution.

O. R. Blue and J. G. Bruce argued the opposite opinion.

T. Maddin said he did not think of the constitution when he framed the resolution. Dr. Smith saw nothing but constitution. He believed we should have to locate the Supreme Court in that gentleman. He hoped that so important a matter was not to be arrested on an abstract question of constitutional law. It was a plain matter of morality, on which we were competent to act.

E. Wadsworth sustained this view. We sometimes did the same thing in an Annual Conference.

Bishop Pierce said we once had a section in the Discipline allowing our members to sell liquor, provided they did not keep a disorderly house. At the last General Conference it was expunged, and by that act we expressed our opinion of the sense of the General Rule.

After some further discussion, and several attempts to amend, the resolutions were adopted.

The order of the day was now brought up, the consideration of the latter part of the report of the committee on Books and Periodicals, the remaining items of which were amended and adopted.

The third item, proposing the appointment of a Financial Secretary of the Publishing House, which had been laid on the table this morning, was called up, discussed by L. Pearce, E. H. Myers, A. L. P. Green, D. R. McAnally, and several others; and, after being amended, was adopted.

On motion of J. E. Evans, the report was adopted as a whole.

E. H. Myers and J. B. McFerrin offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the Book Agent be instructed to put the Quarterly Review at $3 a year, cash in advance, without discount, after January 2, 1859; and that the Agent be instructed not to issue the first number of the next volume until subscribers enough are obtained to support the publication.

Report of the Committee on Books and Periodicals, No. 4.

ADOPTED WEDNESDAY, May 20.

Your committee to whom was referred the interests of the Southern Methodist Publishing House, report that they have maturely considered the Exhibit and Address of the General Agents, and the various papers, documents, plans, and suggestions submitted to them, and offer the following as the result of their deliberations:

At the General Conference of 1854, it was determined to locate a Publishing House in the city of Nashville, Tennessee. The Agents, Revs. E. Stevenson and F. A. Owen, entered immediately upon the arduous work to which they had been appointed; but not until about the beginning of the year 1855 were they able to commence operations so as to meet the demands of the Church, and supply the wants of those looking to the Southern Methodists for a sound and healthy religious literature.

Your committee are satisfied that the Agents have exercised their best skill and ability in performing the task laid upon them. The result of their labors has been presented in their quadrennial report, which we need not repeat. Of their success the General Conference must make up their own judgment. We feel it due, however, to all concerned that, in this connection, we should set forth a few of the difficulties they have encountered in conducting the important interests committed to their care.

And, 1st. The General Conference created the expectation that the publications of the House would be furnished at low rates. For several reasons this sentiment obtained currency. It was affirmed that the institution should not be a money-making concern; that, like Methodist preaching, Methodist books and papers should be furnished on very reasonable terms, and that we must put down the prices at rates so low as to be able to compete with other old and well-established institutions, many of which are mainly supported by gratuitous contributions. Hence we find incorporated in the Discipline, section viii., item 2, the following: "The object of this institution shall be to advance the cause of Protestant Christianity, by disseminating religious knowledge and useful literary and scientific information, in the form of cheap books, tracts, and periodicals."

This was all very commendable and praiseworthy, provided the institution had the means of publishing at very low rates, and provided the impression was not made that books and tracts would be furnished on terms that could not be afforded consistent with the interests of the institution; yet no one acquainted with business operations could suppose that a new concern, located in any quarter of the country, North or South, could compete with institutions long and well-established, and that had contributed to them an extra amount annually of from $100,000 to $200,000, in the way of donations, bequests, etc.

2. The amount of available funds—we mean funds that could be turned into actual cash at the beginning—was strangely magnified in the minds of brethren. By the time the Book Agents met the liabilities of the former Agents, paid the expenses of the lawsuit, and met the drafts ordered in favor of the commissioners, their ready cash was well-nigh exhausted. And then came a depreciation of bonds having long time to run, and they could not be sold without a heavy discount. Add to all this, that the salaries and traveling expenses of all the Bishops were to be paid out of the funds in the hands of the Agents. Now, who will not perceive at once, by this single view, that this policy would likely cripple the institution in the beginning? The expenses of the suit, the lawyers' fees, the appropriations to the commissioners, and the expenses and salaries of the Bishops, meagre as they are, have taken out of the Concern, which there is no return in dollars and cents, in the space of four years, not less than fifty thousand dollars. This, by the policy adopted, is a clear decrease of the original capital of the Publishing House. To this must be added the interest on this large sum. The Agents, disbursing these funds in a direction that brought no cash in return, were compelled to negotiate for cash to create an active capital for the purpose of carrying forward the enterprise. Thus they lost to the Concern the interest accruing on the sums paid out, which in four years is no small item.

3. It should be borne in mind that most of the heavy expenditures in putting a large establishment into operation must be made at the outset. The buildings, machinery, materials, including type, presses, stereotype plates, etc., constitute the principal outlay in a Publishing House. These were all to be provided, before any efficient measures could be taken to meet the plans of the General Conference, or the demands of the public. And all these required either the ready cash, or paper on short time.

4. Another serious embarrassment grew out of a want of harmony in sustaining the institution at the beginning. Some brethren at first honestly doubted the propriety of establishing a Publishing House; others were disappointed at the location. These, however, were very temporary feelings, and soon subsided. But the General Conference created the expectation that depositories would be established at different important points, and because the Agents could not meet the wishes and actual demands of these places, brethren became dissatisfied, and for a season either looked in a different direction, or became indifferent, and put forth but little effort to circulate the books after they were manufactured by the Agents.

Another sad disappointment was realized at several points. The Agents could not, without great injury to the Concern, advance the money for the relief of some of the weekly papers; hence the idea prevailed that an attempt was made to concentrate all the means of the Church, and cut off the supplies of the posts farther out. Brethren therefore were tempted, to provide for themselves, and let the centre manage its own affairs. Thus the necessary sympathy to sustain a great Church institution was wanting for a season, and the Agents were left to struggle without the universal co-operation of the brethren.

5. Another embarrassment grew out of the fact that soon after the Agents commenced operations every thing—labor, materials, provisions, rents, etc., etc.—appreciated from fifty to one hundred per cent.; yet the Agents could not advance upon the prices of the books without materially injuring their sales. Thus, with high rates of expenditures, and low rates of sales, the Agents have labored against the usual course of trade. Books are not, like land and other valuable property, most in demand when prices rule high; or, like provisions and other absolute necessaries of life, must be bought at any price; but men can and will do without literature when it costs too much. Here the Agents found serious embarrassments.

6. Several of the periodicals ordered by the General Conference, and published by the Concern, have failed to meet their expenses—their patronage being too limited to cover the cost. Still, for the honor of the Church, and the good of the Connection, they have been kept going, notwithstanding the continued drain on the House.

7. We mention the derangement of the currency and the great money panic which shook the commercial world to its centre. Out of this derangement of the financial condition of the country grew the difficulty of collecting debts, and the depreciation of funds.

8. The difficulty in the transportation of the books of the Publishing House to many points remote from the seat of its operations, has embarrassed the Agents, and discouraged many of our brethren.

Now, in view of all these facts, the wonder is that the Southern Methodist Publishing House has been able to sustain itself. While such establishments as that of Harper & Brothers, and other large houses of long standing, have suspended, it is almost miraculous that this new institution, considered by many an experiment, has not failed and suspended operations. Thus far, however, it has kept its head above the waves, and still continues to send forth its streams of pure literature and evangelical truth.

Your committee are frank in stating, however, that the Publishing House is now passing a crisis. They have analyzed the financial exhibit of the Agents with some care and thought. It reports a balance in favor of the House of $358,885 58; yet they find its present liabilities to be very serious. The whole amount of liabilities may be set down at $100,866 38. These consist—

1. In a Bank Debt to be provided for every sixty days, of say	$28,000 00
2. In Bills Payable, due in six months, or less	38,127 38
3. In Book Accounts, due in six months or less	24,739 00
4. Due to Individuals, on loans which run twelve months or beyond, say	10,000 00
These added make the above stated sum,	$100,866 38

To meet these pressing liabilities, the House, we think, may rely upon the following resources:

1. Avails of New York and Cincinnati Bonds,	$ 7,000
2. Collections on Bills Receivable	10,000
3. From the Richmond Depository	4,000
5. From the Charleston Depository	2,000
6. From the New Orleans Depository	3,000
7. From cash on hand	7,000
	$53,000

Leaving a balance to be provided for, of say $47,866 38

This amount must be raised from—

1. The debt due the House by the Tract Society, the aggregate of which is, say nearly $30,000.
2. From sales of the stock now on hand and ready for the market, which amounts to about $70,000.

From the above statements the Conference will perceive that much skill and energy will be required to sustain the institution until it shall relieve itself of its heavy liabilities. Indeed, your committee are of opinion that to sustain the Publishing House it must be released in future from all outside liabilities, and that it must secure the concentrated energies and zealous and harmonious patronage of the whole Church. Sectional or local feelings would be fatal to this great enterprise of the Southern Church. And failure would be a sad disaster to the interests of common Zion.

Yet your committee hope and believe that, by the adoption of a proper and well-digested plan, all the embarrassments may be removed, and the Southern Methodist Publishing House long stand as a monument of Southern wisdom and Southern enterprise.

PERIODICALS.

Your committee have inquired into the condition of the periodicals authorized by the General Conference. The result of this investigation is very unsatisfactory with respect to some of these publications; while others exhibit a healthy and prosperous state.

The Quarterly Review—This work, though ably-conducted, has failed by some eight thousand dollars, in the last four years, to meet the expenses of its publication. With a list of less than fifteen hundred paying subscribers, it has been a constant drain upon the funds of the Church. Reluctant, however, to abandon the enterprise, your committee recommend its continuance upon a plan which may possibly greatly diminish its cost. This plan is set forth in the preceding part of this report, to which your committee invite the attention of the Conference.

The Home Circle—This monthly is generally approved, and is, so far as it has extended its circulation, a popular work. Yet your committee regret that it has not been more highly appreciated by the Church generally. It should have at least twenty thousand subscribers.—Being the only periodical especially designed for the female members and friends of our Church in the South, it should find a broad and untrammelled circulation. Your committee recommend its continuance, with the hope it will in future be more highly appreciated.

The Sunday-school Visitor—This excellent child's paper should have fifty thousand subscribers. Your committee regret, however, that many Methodist families and communities do not extend to it a more liberal patronage.—Your committee regard it as an indispensable publication, and recommend its continuance.

The Nashville Christian Advocate—The Conference is aware that this weekly has been reduced in its terms to $1 50 per annum. Its circulation varies from eight to twelve thousand copies. It has amply sustained itself, and at present is in a growing and prosperous condition. It has been, and still continues to be, a source of revenue to the Church.

Southern Christian Advocate—This old and well established organ of the Church has enjoyed a prosperous career. With a list of subscribers of ten to eleven thousand, it has, besides meeting all its expenses, made profits for the General Conference funds within the last four years of some fifteen thousand dollars.

The Richmond Christian Advocate—This long established paper has fallen in arrears several thousand dollars within the last quadrennial term, but its friends believe, with a subscription list of over seven thousand, it will soon reinstate itself and in future pay its way.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate—This member of the Advocate family is located at a very important point in the bounds of the Southern Church. Its fiscal condition is sound and an open door for usefulness stands before it. With a subscription list of about seven thousand, it promises to sustain itself and enlarge its sphere of healthful operation.

The St. Louis Christian Advocate—Located in the immense and rapidly-growing city of St. Louis, and on the border of a great and widely-extending country, reaching for hundreds of miles towards the far West, this paper occupies a very important position. And your committee are pleased to report that it has been able to sustain itself, and, with a patronage of some seven thousand subscribers, is continually enlarging its circulation.

The Texas Christian Advocate—After years of struggle, this paper promises to rise above all embarrassments. It has a circulation of four thousand copies. It is refreshing to know that over the vast plains of the land of beauty and of flowers, where, a few years since, ignorance and superstition held undisputed sway, Methodism has a weekly organ to disseminate and defend the doctrines of Christianity.

The Memphis, Arkansas, and Wachita Christian Advocate—The exhibit of this paper shows it to be growing and increasing in its circulation, and strengthening in its financial condition.—The subscription list extends to over five thousand. The friends of this weekly journal are confident of its final and triumphant success.

The Holston Christian Advocate—After the death of the editor of this weekly, it was merged into the Nashville Christian Advocate. While its old patrons deplore the loss of that excellent man of God, who long stood in the front ranks of our Israel, they generally lend a generous support to other organs of the Church, generously yielding their former Conference organ.

The North Carolina Christian Advocate, published at Raleigh, N. C., by the request of the delegates from the North Carolina Conference, seeks a place among the papers of the Church. Your committee recommend its adoption upon the condition hereinafter described.

DEPOSITORIES AND TRACTS.

Your committee have considered the various memorials and petitions in favor of depositories and the circulation of tracts. They have incorporated in this report a plan for the establishment of Conference depositories, and the distribution of books and tracts of the Southern Methodist Publishing House, which the Conference will review, and adopt or amend, at pleasure.

Your committee recommended to the General Conference the adoption of the following resolution, viz.:

Resolved, That sec. viii., beginning on page 251, of the Discipline, be amended so as to read as follows:

SECTION VIII.—OF THE PUBLICATION OF BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

I. The Publishing House—1. There shall be a book establishment in the city of Nashville, Tenn., for the purpose of manufacturing and publishing books, to be called the Publishing House—of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and to be under the control of a General Book Agent, and a committee, to be called the Book committee.

2. The object of this institution shall be to advance the cause of Protestant Christianity, by disseminating religious knowledge and useful literary and scientific information, in the form of books, tracts, and periodicals.

II. Duties of the General Book Agent.—The General Book Agent shall have charge of the funds, stock, fixtures, and real estate, and all other property of the Publishing House, and of the depositories and periodicals belonging to the General Conference; and he shall be responsible to said Conference for the prudent use and safe management of the same, under the general direction of the Conference. He shall make a yearly exhibit to the several Annual Conferences, and give a full account of the state and progress of the business to the General Conference. He shall publish only such books and tracts as are approved by the Book Editor, and place the imprint of the Publishing House, or of the Agent, only on such books as reflect views accordant with Discipline and acknowledged standards. He shall supply, as far as practicable, the demand of the Church for books, tracts, and periodicals, availing himself of all the facilities of other establishments for their publication at the cheapest rates; and in all investments for the manufacturing of books, and in the manufacture of books, he is required to govern himself strictly by the principles of economy, in view of the ultimate permanent interest of the Publishing House. He shall sell the books for cash, or for negotiable paper, at no more than six months' credit, and at the lowest rates that security against failure may allow. He shall make no investments in grounds, houses and permanent fixtures, without the authority of the Book committee.

III. Financial Secretary—There shall be a Financial Secretary of the Publishing House, elected by the General Conference, whose duty it shall be to visit the Conferences for the purpose of collecting the debts due the House, and of encouraging and aiding in the establishment of depositors, and the circulation of books, tracts, and periodicals throughout the Church. He shall also travel through the Church generally, to raise a fund to constitute a free cash capital, that the operations of the Publishing House may be conducted without embarrassment, and upon a scale commensurate with the wants of the Church, and the magnitude of the interests involved. His official relation shall entitle him to a seat and vote with the Book committee; and when not travelling abroad, he shall give his time and services to the promotion of the interests of the House.

IV. The Book Committee—There shall be a Book committee, consisting of five, three of whom shall be resident at Nashville. They shall, whenever consulted, give advice to the General Book Agent on all matters connected with the Publishing House. They shall fix the salaries of the Agent, Financial Secretary, and Editors at Nashville; and, during the intervals of the General Conference, they and the Bishops together shall have the power to fill vacancies in their own body, in the Agency, or in the editorial corps, resident in Nashville.

V. General Conference Periodicals and Editors—The General Book Agent shall publish a Quarterly Review, to be called the "Quarterly Review of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South;" a monthly magazine, to be called "The Home Circle;" a child's paper, to be called the "Sunday-school Visitor;" and a weekly newspaper, to be called "The Christian Advocate." There shall be an editor of books and tracts, who shall also be editor of the Quarterly Review; an editor of the Home Circle, who shall also be editor of the Sunday-school Visitor; and an editor of the Christian Advocate, all of whom shall be elected by the General Conference.

VI. Newspapers and Editors. (1) The General Conference shall also elect, quadrennially, an Editor for each of the following weekly papers, to wit; the Richmond Christian Advocate, published at Richmond; the Southern Christian Advocate published at Charleston; the St. Louis Christian Advocate, published at St. Louis; the Memphis and Arkansas Christian Advocate, published at Memphis; the New Orleans Christian Advocate, published at New Orleans; the Texas Christian Advocate, published at Galveston, and the Evangelical Apologist, published at the same place; the Pacific Methodist, published at San Francisco, California; and the North Carolina Christian Advocate, published at Raleigh; and in case of vacancy in the Editorship of any of these papers, its Publishing committee may fill the vacancy, with the approval of one of the Bishops.

(2.) The Annual Conferences may, at their next session, choose such of the above named papers as they may adopt, for the organ of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, within their respective bounds, and appoint publishing committees for these papers, to whom the General Book Agent, as soon as convenient after the organization of the committees, and on being secured against any past or future independence of said papers, shall release, in behalf of the Conferences so electing, all right and title in such papers, their subscription list, and their office fixtures, and also all claims of the Publishing House against them for advances made heretofore in their behalf. Provided, however, that these papers shall in future devolve no expense upon the Publishing House, nor involve the funds of the General Church in any liabilities for their debts, nor shall it have a claim upon their profits, which shall be used for the support of Conference Depositories. Provided, further, that if any one of these papers, now the property of the Church, shall not be thus adopted and received by any Conference, the Agent shall dispose of it at the close of the next volume. These papers shall be published under the style, "Published by a committee of Ministers for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South;" and the Publishing committee shall report, every year, the fiscal condition of these papers to the Annual Conference, and quadrennially to the General Conference.

VII. Conference Depositories.—(1.) Any Conference, or two or more Conferences united, may establish an Agency or Depository for the sale of our publications; provided the business with the Publishing House be conducted upon strictly business principles, and that the General Book Agent require a settlement promptly every six months; and he is hereby authorized to suspend operations with any Agency or Depository that does not meet its payments promptly. Our publications shall be sold by the General Book Agent to such Conference agency or depository, at no material advance upon their cost, so that the profits of sales, if any, may accrue ultimately to the agency or depository. Provided, however, that this privilege shall not be extended to an agency or depository that undertakes to publish books for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for which work the Publishing House has been established.

(2.) It is recommended to the Annual Conference or Conferences establishing an agency or depository, to appoint an Agent and a Book Committee, of at least three, to superintend the circulation of books and tracts. It shall be the duty of the Conference Book Committees, upon consultation with the Conference Agent, to fix the prices at which our books shall be sold within their bounds; the per cent. to be allowed to wholesale purchasers; and they shall determine whether said purchasers may return the books not sold; also, what proportion to the amount sold, if any, shall be gratuitously distributed; they shall fix the salary of the agent, to be paid out of the business; and in all respects direct the operations of the Agent subject to the control of the Conference or Conferences appointing him. It shall be the duty of the Conference Agent to superintend the circulation of books and tracts within the bounds of those Conferences appointing him; enlisting all the itinerant and local preachers, and other suitable persons, as the work may demand, that all the people may be supplied with our publications. To this end, he should circulate among the people, as much as possible, making collections, and in every way possible promoting the cause. It shall be his duty to conduct the business with the General Agent at Nashville as nearly as may be for cash; and in no case to allow his indebtedness to extend beyond six months; except the agent for the Pacific Conference, who shall be allowed twelve months on his first purchases; the General Book Agent nevertheless shall always determine, in view of all the circumstances, what amount of credit shall be extended to a Conference agency or depository.

(3.) It is also recommended that a collection be taken up, by the preacher in charge, at each preaching-place, at such time as the Conference or Book committee may direct, to aid in the circulation of books and tracts among the destitute; and that the money so collected be remitted to the Conference Agent for the purpose. It is also recommended that the Presiding Elders inquire, at each Quarterly Conference, whether the preachers have been faithful in supplying the people with our books, tracts, and periodicals, and that all our preachers increase their efforts to circulate our publications.

(4.) The depositories now under the control of the General Book Agent may be disposed of to the Conferences now patronizing them, that they may hereafter be conducted agreeably to the foregoing provisions, or be discontinued, as in the judgment of the Agent shall best subserve the general cause. And all real estate obtained for Conference depositories shall, where the State law allows it, be deeded to trustees or to the General Book Agent, to be held in trust for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for the purpose of depositories, within the bounds of the Conference or Conferences making the purchase. The Conferences are requested to take active measures for the circulation of our books and periodicals, and to hold their members to a strict accountability on this subject.

VIII. Conference Relations of Agents and Editors—Each of the officers elected by the General Conference shall be a member of such Annual Conference as he may select with the approbation of the Bishops.

J. B. McFERRIN, Chairman.

THURSDAY, May 27.

The Conference met at half-past eight o'clock, Bishop Early in the chair—the preliminary services by Rev. H. N. McTyeire—the journal of yesterday having been read at the close of the session of yesterday afternoon.

Bishop Kavanaugh was now called to the chair.

On motion, it was ordered that Mr. Hughes, the Daguerrean Artist, be permitted to repeat his camera sketch of the Conference in session, at half-past eleven o'clock.

BARNHILL AND CARROLL BEQUESTS.

J. B. McFerrin, from the committee on Books and Periodicals, to whom the subject had been referred, reported a resolution to the effect that the Book Agent be requested to receive the bequest of William Barnhill, of Lagrange College, and appropriate the same—one-half to Missions, and one-half to Sunday-schools; and that he receive the bequest of James C. Carroll, and appropriate the same according to the will of the testator.

G. W. Bruse—Is this Barnhill of Lagrange, Ky., or Lagrange, Ala.?

L. Rosser—From the communication before the committee, it appears simply Lagrange.

G. W. Bruse—There was a bequest from Oldham county, Ky., by Barnhill, but he is not of Lagrange College.

A. L. P. Green—The committee have not accomplished exactly what is desirable. If they know the persons authorized to receive these bequests, they had better mention the names of these officers in the report, so that when these gentlemen who are to pay over see the report, they may know who are authorized to receipt for the bequests.

J. B. McFerrin asked and obtained leave to withdraw the report for amendment.

HYMN AND TUNE BOOK.

J. B. McFerrin, from the same committee, submitted their report, No. 13, on the resolution of R. J. Harp and J. A. Ivey, with reference to the preparation of the Tune and Hymn Book, embracing a resolution to the following effect:

Resolved, That the whole subject of a Tune and Hymn Book be referred to the Book Agent, Book Editor, and Book Committee, with instructions to take such steps as they may deem advisable.

R. J. Harp proposed to amend by substituting the words, "be instructed to adopt the measures necessary to bring out the Tune and Hymn Book."

E. Stevenson was opposed to the amendment. He was satisfied that there were now in the hands of the Agents no sufficient means to do this work. As the resolution stands, the work will be done as soon as it can be done consistently with the ability of the Publishing House.

J. E. Evans—The report looks to that well enough.

The amendment was rejected, and then the report was adopted.

J. B. McFerrin, from the same committee, to whom had been referred the resolution of J. E. Evans and L. D. Huston, submitted their report (No. 14) on the claim of the Memphis and Arkansas Advocate, authorizing the Book Agent to pay to the publisher of said paper $4400.

The report was laid on the table for the present.

THE TRACT SOCIETY.

J. B. McFerrin, from the same committee, now returned their report (No. 10,) reconsidered and amended so as to embrace these two subjects of recommendation:

1. That the Tract Society be continued until its business shall be wound up by its own act. Then, if it be found expedient, the Society may be dissolved.

2. That Dr. Hamilton be continued in his present position until he shall have adjusted the financial affairs of the Society.

H. A. C. Walker—I wish to strike out that part which refers the settlement to the Tract Agent, and put that business into the hands of the Financial Secretary.

L. M. Lee—What arrangements have been made to substitute the present organization of the Tract Society?

J. B. McFerrin—It is understood that there is to be a Tract organization under the direction of the Annual Conferences, in connection with the Tract Depositories and Conference Agents.

J. E. Evans—No man can arrange and settle up that matter in the place of the Tract Secretary. His financial relation to the Society must continue till they wind up and dissolve. Nobody else can do that business. If you transfer it to other hands outside, and charged with other business, the thing must inevitably get tangled. Besides, it is now about the middle of the year, and it may be that Dr. Hamilton will have no other work to fall into for the present.

A voice—We may elect Dr. Hamilton to be the Financial Secretary.

H. A. C. Walker—Then I ask that the report be changed, so as to let Dr. Hamilton work in this business till the close of the year, or till his Conference shall come on. With this change I have no objection to the report. Fix the termination of his labors by time—not by event.

J. B. McFerrin—The committee, in their former report, did fix the time; but that was excepted to.

J. W. Wimple—I move that the time be fixed, and limited to the first of January.

J. Straw—I move to substitute for all that part which refers to the continuance of the Tract Agency the following words:

"The Tract Agency shall be discontinued, and the unfinished business thereof shall be placed in the hands of the Financial Secretary; who shall make all possible effort to collect the dues of the Society, and the means and avails thereof shall be used for the liquidation of the claims of the Tract Agency."

I think the Financial Secretary will be able to wind up this business. I have a better opinion of Dr. Hamilton's skill than to think he has so conducted the business that no other man can wind it up. I am opposed to sinecures. If the Financial Secretary can do it, I hope the work will be placed in his hands.

E. Stevenson—I am as well acquainted with the state of Dr. Hamilton's business as any man here, himself excepted; and I know that he alone is prepared to do that thing. It will require several months to put his accounts in proper shape.

T. W. Dorman—The committee looked into this. Dr. Hamilton was opposed to the proposition that he should wind up this business; but the committee would have him to be quiet. He does not stand before the Conference asking a place for the remainder of the year.

Under the force of the previous question, demanded by H. A. C. Walker, the substitute was now rejected—affirmative, 47, negative, 60; and then the amendment of J. W. Wimple was agreed to, and the report, as thus amended, was adopted.

CONSTITUTION OF THE MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

On motion by J. H. Linn, the Conference now took up the consideration of the report, No. 6, of the Committee on Missions, proposing a substitute for the present Constitution of the Missionary Society, submitted on the 24th inst.

The report was read by the Secretary, as printed in these reports in the Daily Advocate of Tuesday, May 25.

W. A. Smith—I would call the attention of the chairman to one feature of the report.—There seems to be an ambiguity. The report says, in one place, "Those Annual Conferences that have not money enough to pay for their own missionary work shall be styled Mission Conferences;" then, again it says, "The Board of each Mission Conference, and of those Annual Conferences which are not able to meet the wants of their own domestic missions, and have a surplus"—I do not see how a Mission Conference, according to the definition of the report, could have a surplus.

J. Boring—The committee are apprised of that ambiguity. It occurred in this way: a part of the report was adopted at one time, and a part at another time. It will of course be corrected as we advance in the consideration of the report. I suggest that it will only consume time to attempt explanations of this sort.

The Chair—There is no motion before the House.

L. Pearce—I move then to adopt the report, to enable me to ask whether the proposed change of this Missionary constitution will require a two-thirds vote.

Several voices—Yes.

A. Hunter—I move to take up the subject item by item.

S. Kelley—I move to substitute the Missionary constitution as found in the Discipline. We understand that, and it works well.

The Chair—The substitute is out of order. The question is on brother Hunter's motion.

On motion of G. W. Langhorne, it was ordered that the Rev. Dr. Sehon, Secretary of the Missionary Society, be now heard by the Conference on this whole question.

Dr. Sehon then came forward to the forum and addressed the Conference at length against the adoption of the report, alleging that the first article was a violation of the Society's Charter, because it proposed a change of name to that of a Board of Missions, under the control of the General Conference. There was danger of too much legislation in all bodies, especially where vested rights were concerned. He argued the legal question involved, and showed that even the removal of the Society from Louisville, Kentucky, to Nashville, had given rise to litigation as to the right of legacies. This change of name would hazard the Society's right to property in the several States and Territories, vested under this old constitution and charter. He made some further general remarks in opposition to other features in the report. Some conversation followed as to certain questions recently sprung in the North Carolina and Alabama Conferences, with reference to the right of the Annual Conferences to the control of their missionary funds, respectively, in which T. W. Dorman, J. J. Hutchinson, D. B. Nicholson, W. Closs, Bishop Pierce, and Dr. Sehon participated.

F. E. Pitts said: I have no idea that the General Conference will adopt the new plan proposed; but I give timely notice that, if there is any probability of its adoption, I shall bring in a minority report, embracing a plan heretofore submitted. I believe the plan of the minority, of which I speak, will be adopted ultimately; but I suppose the plan of the book will be followed for the present.

L. Pearce considered the substitute of S. Kelly; and would go for it with certain modifications as to the appropriations for the Annual Conferences.

Bishop Paine: Sir, the old plan is the old law of the Church now. You have not to adopt that. You cannot introduce the existing law as a substitute.

L. Pierce desired the adoption of that item in the new plan securing the more general and direct representation of the Annual Conferences in the matter of the annual appropriations.—But he knew not how this result was to be obtained.

J. B. McFerrin made a point of order, which arrested the remarks of L. Pierce, as not applicable to the motion.

The motion to consider the report by items was then adopted.

C. F. Deems still hoped to hear from the Chairman of the committee of the Whole subject.

J. Boring—I had hoped, sir, until this morning, that this report would be passed without much discussion; and now it is not my purpose to multiply words upon it. Very unexpectedly, however, difficulties have arisen. It was proper that the first article in the report should be read, as it just has been, because that really involves the whole question. That being adopted, we have adopted the fundamental principle of the report; but that being rejected, the whole is vitiated and destroyed.

With regard to the constitutional question which has been raised, I wish to make a remark or two. It is true, sir, that this report proposes to substitute the present Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. I announce in my place, as Chairman of the committee on Missions, that this report was adopted after a great deal of discussion on the part of the committee—after the most free, full, deliberate and repeated discussion.

We had, in that body as in this, great diversity of opinions; and we have all yielded, to a greater or less extent, opinions which we honestly entertained. We have all yielded and compromised. Not one of them has all he desired. We have, in a spirit of harmony as I conceive, and under the promptings of a desire to adopt a better plan, yielded our particular views. But as to the constitutional question, I confess my surprise at the views expressed by Dr. Sehon. Dr. Sehon must know—he must have learned experimentally long since—that a mere change of name can never violate the rights of property. Would any court of law or equity suffer the violation of the rights of property because the name of the party may have been changed? That is strange, new doctrine to me; and I am not prepared to believe, for one moment, that such a suggestion will embarrass the action of this Conference. The Doctor has himself alluded to a change of this character. He has alluded to the fact that the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was at first located in the city of Louisville, Ky.; that it was chartered there, and held real estate and other property under that charter. We dared to remove that Society to Nashville, Tennessee; and who ever supposed that such removal could endanger the rights of our missionary property! I put this question: Does Dr. Sehon believe that property held by

I wish to be permitted to remark, sir, that whilst I am clear in the conviction that this change ought to be made, and can be made for the better, I am no advocate for any, even the slightest, innovation, either upon the spirit or the polity of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South—not I. Were it in my power, I would not change a single feature.

But we are not proposing to revolutionize Methodism. All we are proposing to do is to provide for the legitimate action of Methodism as it is. We believe that the old system, although it has wrought great good, and if continued will do more, is not the best system; and we believe that the fundamental principles of Methodism do not interdict improvement.—Primitive, old-fashioned Methodism is a phrase which, time and again, I have heard used with power, and I approve of its use in a proper sense; but I abhor it in any appropriated sense. I claim that Methodism is the child of Providence—is an elastic, self-adjusting, fundamental, vital principle, adapted to exigencies, and not stiffened by forms. And if we are capable of devising a better missionary system than the present, although the change should endanger our right to a few thousand dollars, what is the value of such a consideration against the results of our missionary labors for ages to come? I insist that if we know to-day that the act proposed would vitiate the whole of our title to every vestige of property we possess, wisdom would vindicate its adoption.

I wish to call attention to the article before us—to remind the Conference particularly of the constituency of this Board. It is to consist of the Bishops, twelve itinerants, six members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, residing in Nashville, and one minister from each Annual and Mission Conference—thirteen members to constitute a quorum. One member may be chosen from each Annual and Mission Conference. Under our present organization, we are absolutely confined to the administration of a purely local Board of Missions. By whom are our Mission Board elected? The answer of the law is: They shall be elected by the members of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Who are the members of the Missionary Society? The law answers: The payment of two dollars annually, or of twenty dollars at any one time, shall constitute a member. The man, woman, or child, doing this, is a member according to the Discipline. I ask then, Who come up here to Nashville, annually, to the election of these officers and managers? Those who reside in Nashville, a few of them. You all know how these things are done. It is reduced to an unquestionable certainty, that the officers and managers of the Missionary Society of our Church are all elected by a few persons residing in the city of Nashville—not by the General Conference, nor by the Church South. This is not the fault of Nashville. They but do their duty. The fault is in the system.

What, then, is the result? The manifest fact is this: that, under the operation of the present system, all the missions, domestic and foreign, of our whole Church—the entire mission work, foreign and domestic—are absolutely under the direction and control of a very few persons residing in the city of Nashville, while it is called the work of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South! And I go farther, and say, that these very managers and officers elected are themselves the voters as well as the actors in laying out the missions; and that they have the power to say how much you shall draw or not draw for the domestic fields.

Now, is not that an objection to the system, its being reduced to the government of a few persons here? We, Mr. President, are a Mission Church—a mission organization—all engaged in a mission work, from yourself down to the humblest layman in our Church; and yet we leave all the interests of this mighty work to the management of a few laymen of the city of Nashville. But it is our fault—the fault of the law.

What we ask is, that the whole Board of Managers may be there, on the Board of Missions. We ask next, that twelve itinerant elders may be there. We ask that six resident members of Nashville may be there. We ask more, that the Annual and Mission Conferences may be—compelled? no—permitted to have a representation in that Board, by their annual election, of one member each. We propose these terms, because the old system has produced a separation between the missionary and the people. We want to reach the people—the highest to the lowest—we want the whole lump." We propose therefore that the Annual and Mission Conferences have the right of representation, and so insure a Board which can look over the whole field of operation, catch the spirit of missions, and diffuse it among the people.

Finally, it has been objected that laymen will not come to the Board-meetings. I answer, if we cannot expect all the laymen to attend, or even half of them at any one time, still they will prize the privilege they have to come, and then some of them will come. I could select one hundred laymen of noble hearts and souls full of Christian philanthropy, from the State of Georgia, who would be glad to come and overlook this work, and who would come and drink here into the true spirit of missions, and, returning, diffuse the same spirit amongst their brethren at home.

C. F. Deems said that he thought the brethren would endeavor to turn the action of the General Conference upon the constitutional difficulty raised by Dr. Sehon and reproduced by brother Hughes. It had been represented that if we adopted the report we should surrender our charter as a Missionary Society. This was certainly an imaginary difficulty. He called attention to the resolution with which the report closed. That resolution specially provided for the incorporation of the new Board to be inaugurated by this report. The present Board would conduct the affairs of the Society until the new charter should be obtained; and if that charter be not granted we shall go on as now. He simply wished to call attention to the fact that this legal difficulty was a figment of the imagination. If that were the only objection, the report should be adopted.

F. E. Pitts said the committee were not unanimous in this measure. He fought from the first. The improvement proposed would give us no advantage in reference to the number of representatives. From the necessity of the case, there must be a locality of the effective agencies of this institution. The Bible Society, and other similar institutions, carried on their operations by the agency of men upon the spot. It was the only plan upon which the thing could be done. We had twenty-four Annual Conferences; and if representatives must come up from Kansas, the Rio Grande, etc., it would be very troublesome and expensive. He was dead opposed to the first article of this new constitution.

L. Campbell moved that we now take the vote.

The Chair reminded the Conference that a two-thirds vote would be necessary to pass the measure.

J. Boring said, I submit, Mr. President, whether it is a change or a substitution.

The Chair replied, it occurs to me that a substitution would be a change.

The vote was now taken whether the question should be put, which was lost.

On motion of N. F. Reid, the whole report was laid on the table.

N. F. Reid offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the last clause of the 10th Art., Sec. 7th, Book of Discipline, page 241, commencing with the words "And also determine," etc., be stricken out; and the following inserted: "And the Bishop shall draw for the domestic missions of those Conferences over which he may preside seventy per cent. of the collections for missions in said Conferences, if judged necessary by them."

He said—So far as we from North Carolina are concerned, we do not want any new plan, any new scheme; but we want the present constitution of the Missionary Society amended. There is a Conference collection in the provisions of that Constitution. In the 2d section of the 16th article, power is given to the Annual Conferences, in conjunction with the President of the Conference, to make what appropriations may be deemed necessary for the support of the domestic missions. In the last clause of the 10th article, this power has a check put upon it which prevents its operation. Now, I propose by my resolution to remove this check, and allow the Conferences to control their own missionary funds, which, I doubt not, will be done wisely and with the true missionary spirit.

W. Closs said there was a diversity of sentiment in the Committee. The representation of one Conference wished one thing, and the representation of another Conference another. I agreed to the measure for the sake of this one article, etc.

Bishop Pierce thought the resolution of Bro. Reid would go farther in its practical operation than he intended. It would be the abolition of the parent Board. The system laid down in the Discipline was probably the best that had been before the body; and, with a few emendations, would be the best they could ever make. He argued that the Bishops, who traveled at large, and knew the necessities of the work, in connection with the parent Board, ought to make the appropriations.

[The business was now suspended to give Mr. Hughes an opportunity to take an ambrotype view of the Conference.]

On motion, it was resolved, That when we adjourn, we adjourn to meet at three o'clock this afternoon.

On motion of T. O. Summers, the rule requiring a matter proposing an alteration of the Discipline to lie on the table for one day was suspended till the subject under consideration should be disposed of.

E. Stevenson asked for a committee in regard to a matter of complaint from Kentucky against the Book Agents.

The Chair subsequently announced J. G. Bruce, W. C. Dandy, and G. W. Brush, as that committee.

H. N. McTyeire offered a paper which, it was insisted by N. F. Reid, was a substitute for the report just laid on the table, and therefore out of order.

The Chair decided that it could not be offered without a reconsideration of the action by which the report was laid upon the table.

L. Pearce moved a reconsideration of that action, which did not prevail.

On motion of J. F. Hughes, N. F. Reid's resolution was laid upon the table.

W. A. Smith submitted another proposition.

J. B. McFerrin opposed. The plan would prostrate our foreign missions.

J. J. Hutchinson offered an amendment, which was accepted by Dr. Smith.

The hour of adjournment came, and, after notices, Bishop Soule pronounced the benediction.

FRIDAY, May 28.

Conference met at the usual hour; Bishop Paine in the chair.

S. A. Williams conducted the devotions of the morning.

T. J. Koger presented the following resolution, signed by himself and O. R. Bluo:

Resolved, That the Board of Managers of the Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South, be instructed to allow only such salary to the Missionary Secretary as shall be equal to that allowed to other General Conference officers.

J. W. Langhorne moved that the resolution be laid on the table for the present, which motion did not prevail.

T. J. Koger desired to know why the Missionary Secretary should be paid $2800 salary. It was larger than the salary of other officers.—All the traveling expenses of the Secretary were paid besides.

Several brethren complained of the unfairness of bringing up this matter when the Missionary Secretary was absent.

S. Kelley said Dr. Sehon wished to make a statement to the Conference, and he hoped the matter would be laid over till he should be present.

J. B. McFerrin said the $2800 had been paid for only little more than twelve months past. Dr. Sehon had appeared before the Board; stated that he could not attend to the duties of the office at home, while he was traveling abroad; an assistant was deemed necessary, to attend to the correspondence, make out reports, etc. The Board examined the matter, and found they had no authority to elect an assistant; but resolved to increase the Secretary's salary, and allow him to employ one himself. He employed an assistant, and was thus enabled to give more attention to the work and render more efficient service to the Church.

T. O. Summers said that J. H. McFerrin's statement was right.

[illegible] with them [illegible] the siren [illegible] C. [illegible] eneca, trees, and in the rea[illegible] was [illegible] hes too far ahead, it will [illegible] ferences and the people [illegible] cannot beg without giving himself. He gives as much in every meeting as other men in his pecuniary circumstances. He sets the example of a noble liberality. It was bad policy to cramp such a man in his labors.

Bishop Soule deeply regretted that the subject should have been brought before the Conference. He feared it was consuming time to no valuable end. He believed the General Conference and all the interests of the Church would be perfectly safe in submitting the matter to the Board of Managers of the Missionary Society.

Dr. Sehon, having entered the hall during this discussion, came forward and made a statement to the Conference.

He did not wish to make these remarks previous to a certain event in the history of this General Conference. The remarks he made yesterday had no reference to his election. He did not intend to present himself as a candidate. He had never sought an office, and would disdain to do so. He was ready to make a statement, and then retire, and throw himself into the hands of the Conference the office they had given him, and fall into any place that might be assigned him in the ministerial ranks.

In 1844, as a representative of one of the Northern Conferences, he had voted with the South. He had come to us of choice and from principle, and had remained up to this time. He had been welcomed and honored. His brethren had confided in him. They had the warmest gratitude of his heart, and of his family. He would not speak of services rendered; whatever they had been, they were due to the Church.

In 1845, living in Cincinnati, blessed with friends and home, and having a large amount of means placed in his hands, a committee waited upon him, and requested him to serve as Missionary Secretary. He declined, because he could not come, and so remained in Cincinnati. In 1846, he was compelled to leave; he had no longer a home there, and then his brethren of the Tennessee Conference received him as a member. They sent him to the General Conference, and the General Conference elected him Missionary Secretary. After holding the office two days, he declined again. In 1850, he was unanimously re-elected, and had now held the office for eight years, having been re-elected in 1854. It was an arduous work, and involved great sacrifice as well as great responsibility.

He would read a recapitulation of every dollar he had ever received from the Missionary Society:

The first year the Board had paid him	$ 745
The second year	826
The third year	1575
The fourth year	1375
The fifth year	1500
The sixth year	1500
The seventh year	2000
The eighth year, for himself and assistant	2800

Why had his salary been raised to $2800? From the nature of the duties, it was necessary that he should have an assistant. The Board voted him $2800 as the salary of himself and his assistant. It was usual in such offices, in the Northern and other Churches, to have such assistant. If the Conference took from the Board the right to appoint his salary, they would afflict the Board, not him. He would venture to say, what he would not for any thing have said before his election, that the salaries of the General Conference officers were too small. He did not believe any editor, or any Bishop, lived upon his salary, except those who lived at their own homes. He had received on an average only $1558 a year, and that embraced the salary of his assistant.

On motion, the resolution was laid on the table.

W. P. Rateliffe submitted the following:

Resolved, That it be the duty of the Missionary Secretary to visit each Annual Conference, except the Pacific, at least once in four years.

He said, We have ministers in our country who have been years in the itinerancy, and have never yet seen a Missionary Secretary; and the Doctor himself says that Methodist preachers ought to go not only where they are needed but where they are most needed.

Dr. Sehon remarked that the duties of the Secretary were defined in the Discipline, and explained his reason to go into Arkansas.

SUPPORT OF MISSIONS.

The Chair now announced the order for the consideration of the unfinished business of yesterday; the question being on the adoption of J. Stacy's substitute for Dr. Smith's paper, submitted by way of amendment to the tenth article of the Constitution of Missionary Society, to be appropriately inserted in said tenth section, on the 241st page of the Discipline, viz:

"Provided, however, that the Annual Conferences shall have authority, under the sanction of the Bishops, to exceed that amount when the necessity of the case, in their judgment, demands it."

W. J. PARKS—I move to lay the whole subject on the table.

W. A. SMITH—There is not only a delicacy, but a most irrepressible interest about this matter; some of our Conferences are on the very verge of taking independent action, and I hope the brother will not press that motion.

The CHAIR—Has the old plan been changed?

W. J. PARKS—It is unfinished.

The motion to lay on the table was rejected.

H. A. C. Walker made an ineffectual demand for the previous question.

E. H. MYERS—I believe that there ought to be such authority as that proposed in this substitute, but I do not think it ought to be in the hands of the presiding Bishop, or in the Annual Conference, under the sanction of the presiding Bishop, because of the collisions that would be likely to ensue. If the thing were left with the Conferences, in a very short time the Board would have nothing to do. I believe, however, that this power ought to be lodged somewhere; and you can have it by striking out a line in the Discipline on this 241st page, and leaving it to the Missionary Board; and, to make the matter sure, provide that the Board shall set apart a sufficient contingent fund from which each Bishop shall be authorized to draw to a certain definite extent—so that the Board will know what they will have to provide for. If you keep the old system, in my judgement, you must engraft something like this plan upon it.

J. Stacy argued the necessity of his substitute, (which also embodies Bishop Pierce's plan,) by reference to his own experience in the mission field. He alleged, solemnly, that he never would give a vote here by which the missions of the cotton and rice plantations might be made to suffer, especially so long as we have money enough raised within their own bounds to supply their wants. The Bishops were always forward to justify these demands. The contingent fund of Bro. Myers would amount to nothing at all. It was an impossibility for the Parent Board to provide for all the necessities arising in our domestic fields; it was invidious to concede to the Parent Board more love for the cause than that entertained by the Annual Conferences.

W. A. SMITH—I hold that the Domestic Missions are of superior dignity, and have superior claims, and they must be provided for. But there are distinctions between Domestic Missions proper and Domestic Missions so called. If you say the claims of the former shall be incorporated in favor of other Missions, you will positively depreciate the amount of money collected for Missions; or you will restrain the Conferences to set apart money for that purpose, to the actual injury of your foreign work.

The evil to be guarded against was the appropriation by the Domestic Missions, so called; and his amendment was intended to meet that difficulty.

[illegible] ...ing from the chair, said: Brethren talk about the Annual Conferences having something to do with the appropriation of their funds. I think I express the mind of my colleagues, when I say it is our wish that the work of every Conference shall be sustained to the full amount of their work, by the funds raised there; and we have never been restrained, as we were last fall, by the occurrence of a money panic. Should a panic [illegible] you lose confidence in this great connectional system? I think there is nothing but loyalty here, and I do not want to see a man leave this Conference with any other than a full, hearty connectional sympathy. You want to have your Domestic Missions taken care of; and I want them taken care of.

Several Voices—We do not doubt the Episcopacy.

H. N. McTyeire seconded by L. Pearce moved to strike out Nashville, Tennessee, in the Constitution of the Missionary Society, and insert New Orleans, La. He said the plain object of this motion is to transfer the Parent Board; and for reasons, I am not local, but connectional in this purpose. Formerly it was identified with New Orleans—at present with Nashville. I think though it would be well [illegible] the [illegible] city, and well for both places, and Cradle approved, to do this; and, not changing my opinion with my skies, I think so still. It was a wise saying of Poor Richard, "Put not your eggs in different baskets." The Church should distribute her Boards. The Board of Publication is here—let that of Missions go yonder. No place in our bounds so suitable as New Orleans. It is convenient to your mission field and new Conferences—connected by regular trade and vessels with Mexico and Central America; where you propose to establish missions. The Board should be convenient to the work it supervises. Drafts on your treasury located in New Orleans are everywhere available to missionaries—often worth a premium. This cannot be said of Nashville or any other point, equally. A missionary society, though a purely benevolent association, must consult commercial facilities, and take advantage of exchanges. These are best, not in an inland city, however prosperous and suitable for manufacturing books, but in the chief commercial emporium. Put the Board and treasury there, and you may dispense with the assistant treasuries, which are now necessary but embarrassing. In justice to the donors and the beneficiaries and the great work concerned in this society, we must allow no local attachments to lessen its usefulness or cramp its facilities.

This Society is a pecuniary responsibility—a tax on the time and means of friends. The Publishing House is as much as Nashville can say grace over. Accommodations and endorsements are sometimes wanted. Our brethren and friends have done nobly and generously in this. To attend committees and called meetings and anniversaries—to extend credit—they have borne these burdens well, and are entitled to our thanks. Better fiscal officers we shall not find anywhere than they have furnished—I have no complaints on this score.

New Orleans can be more useful to the Society than Nashville, and needs more than Nashville its accessory benefits. The appropriation meetings bring the Bishops together for a week or two every year. Here you are all in the Church, or nearly. Methodism is established. You are overrun with preachers and agents. Preaching is a drug. Even a Bishop hardly gets a congregation—people have no interest in your special sessions—attention flags. While one part of the Connection complains that they can't see a Bishop, you are overrun with them. In New Orleans they are needed, and can work to advantage. Their powerful pulpit labors would be always in demand, and their influence would be felt through the valley of the Mississippi. I grudge the waste of men and talent that could be put to so great account. The presence and labors, in pulpit and platform, of the eloquent Secretary would be very desirable, and greatly conduce to the success of his special cause and the Church.

Finally, I beg brethren in Nashville not to set themselves against this. I speak as one of you. This move will benefit Nashville. Give away the Society for its own good and yours. It will harmonize different sections and develop them; it will call out resources that slumber in others, while you have enough to do. It will remove any jealousy of concentration—which feeling is more general and strong than is good for us. The Book Concern is here, and the Missionary Society and the central paper and the Central University—and Nashville, in the eyes of some sections, is grasping every thing. Consent to this, and you give away a care, to receive in turn cheerful co-operation and good will. I want our publishing operations disembarrassed. They are in no way connected with the missionary. They are of no mutual help. Let them stand out alone, supported by friends in every part of the Church. To promote this consummation much to be desired, mainly and heartily I come here. This motion looks in the same direction, and I trust it will not meet with any serious opposition.

J. B. McFerrin said he never felt so much inclined to gratify a brother in his life as he did this morning to gratify Brother McTyeire. Brother McTyeire had been voted away from New Orleans, and we ought to give New Orleans a fair compensation. We had gained a great deal, and he was inclined to compensate what New Orleans had lost. But he was not quite ready to do it in this way. When the difficulties should be removed, then he would be ready. If it could be made plain that New Orleans was the better place, then the Missionary Society ought to be sent there. But he believed there was no advantage to be gained by the removal. It was important that the Missionary Society and the Publishing House should be together. Remove to New Orleans, and perhaps when the time comes for a meeting, you may have cholera and yellow fever, and you can't get a Bishop or anybody else to go there; or, if they should go, they would find neither Missionary Board nor anybody else in the city. Continue it here, and there was no such difficulty; but it would not do to locate the Missionary Society in the alligator swamps of Louisiana.

H. N. McTyeire remarked that Nashville was also liable to cholera, and that the yellow fever never occurred in April—the time of the Bishops' annual meeting for appropriations. In reply to a question put by Dr. Green, he answered that the laws of Louisiana facilitated characters, and that one could be obtained in ten days after application.

On motion of A. Monroe, the question was now put, and the amendment was lost, seventy-four voting for, and fifty-six against.

J. Hamilton proposed to amend the second article of the constitution by adding those words:

"And the missionary collections shall be so taken as to enable each contributor to give such direction to his donation as he may desire, whether to domestic or foreign missions; and it shall be so distinguished in the reports of the Treasurer."

The amendment was adopted.

F. G. Ferguson described three classes of givers to this cause. Those who would [illegible] give [illegible] preaching to [illegible] people [illegible] those who were willing [illegible] to [illegible] the wishes of the Church for the distribution of their money; and a third, who would give their money only for preaching to their own people. The thing was to [illegible] all these classes, and to get the largest possible [illegible] for the cause. He [illegible] the [illegible] by saying, that if we will [illegible] arrange it so as to put our colored [illegible] with the white [illegible] they are [illegible], it were better [illegible] back on the old constitution.

If we can agree with Dr. Smith, I approve of the doctrine of the substitute. The Annual Conferences would take their own ground. He described the interesting characters of those mission fields on the plantations, where the negroes are shut up, and see no white face except the overseer and the missionary; which would be as dark and a class of beings as live on the face of the earth but for the exertions of our Annual Conferences. He was unwilling for this interest to be left without specific means of support. He desired the adoption of some rule by which the rights of the Board and the Bishops might be guarded, and the needy party served. Dr. Smith's resolution was not sufficiently explicit. Our domestic missions must be provided for. There were efficient laborers in Alabama preaching to negroes—preaching on circuits not yet Methodized—who have no support but that provided by the Missionary Society; and he would have the Alabama Conference to provide for her missionaries out of her own funds—not only for quarterage, but for table expenses also. If he made a kind of swap of substitutes with brother Stacy, he would have it read in this way: "Provided that seventy per cent. of the amount collected shall be reserved for domestic missions within the bounds of the Annual Conference," etc. The Alabama had put in more money than any other Conference within our bounds.

G. W. D. Harris, seeing nothing exceptionable in the law as it now stands, moved to lay the subject on the table.

The motion was agreed to—affirmative 63, negative 48.

E. H. Myers now proposed to amend the said 10th section, by striking out the first clause, which rehearses the Eastern, South-western, and North-western Missionary Districts.

The motion was agreed to—two-thirds voting in the affirmative.

E. H. Myers proposed further to amend, by striking out the word "autumnal" from the next line of the said 10th article, page 241, so as to read, "There shall be an annual meeting of the Bishops, etc.

The CHAIR—The Bishops find it more convenient to meet in the spring.

And, two-thirds voting in the affirmative on this motion, the word "autumnal" was also stricken out.

E. H. Myers proposed further to amend, by striking out about a line and a half of the same section, at the bottom of page 241, and inserting his contingent fund proposition, in a modified form. Considering what had been laid upon the table, he regarded that as the best thing that could be done now.

C. F. Deems saw in this proposition no adequate protection for the Conferences, and gave examples.

E. H. Myers replied.

LEVI PEARCE—Brother Myers proposes a contingent fund; how will he provide against the Conferences first meeting, after the fund shall be set apart, from engrossing the whole fund? Bishop Pierce's plan was the only feasible one; and he would now offer that as a substitute, in these words: "Unless an exigency shall arise, in which case the Bishop may, if he judge proper, exceed the amount appropriated."

E. H. MYERS—I could not accept that.

J. HAMILTON—The Conferences are divided into two classes—those who furnish the money, and those who get it. Those who furnish the money are asking here, by the representatives, for this modification; but it seems there are votes enough from other quarters to overrule them. Sir, you cannot legislate against the reasonable request of so many reasonable brethren; or, if you do, collections will be taken up with specific directions. I want a modification here. I am in favor of Dr. Myers's suggestion. Suppose $10,000 were set apart for this fund. The Bishops might keep each other advised of the amount they draw. There need be no difficulty on that account. The amount might be half withdrawn, or they might not withdraw a dollar. The Board will not set apart more than they can spare. Where is the objection? We ask for a little more relief—a little more control as to the disposition of the funds raised by our own efforts, by our own people.

F. G. FERGUSON—Something must be done to meet the wishes of the Conferences raising this money.

A. L. P. Green gave his views.

W. Closs—The amendment provided no relief, and gave no protection to our funds at home.

N. Talley was in favor of striking out. The South Carolina Conference had come up with her contributions to $25,000 and to $27,000 a year, and of that they had appropriated $5000 to $7000 a year to Foreign Missions. Still they felt that Home Missions were the glory of the missionary cause. He made reference to the field among the blacks on the plantations. He had experience in that field as a Presiding Elder, and was still in the work. He was in favor of what had been presented by Bro. Pearce.

A. H. Mitchell demanded the previous question, which was sustained by the house; and then the substitute of L. Pearce was adopted—affirmative 89, negative 34—two-thirds voting in the affirmative.

L. Pearce now submitted the following:

Amend Article 3, page 234, by inserting after the word "managers," these words: "And one member from each Annual or Mission Conference, who shall be elected by said Conference to represent its interest in said Board, either in person or by letter," [shall form a Board for the transaction of business,] etc. He stated, that if this proposition involved debate, he would withdraw it.

Several other amendments were proposed, none of which were adopted.

Isaac Litton, Esq., was elected Treasurer of the Missionary Society.

E. H. Myers, Assistant Treasurer at Charleston; J. C. Keener at New Orleans, and D. R. McAnally at St. Louis.

Leave of absence was granted to J. B. Brooks and L. Campbell.

On motion of A. M. Shipp, amended by H. A. Walker and T. W. Dorman, next Tuesday, the 1st of June, was fixed upon as the day of adjournment.

The committee on the account of the Book Agents with Mrs. Bascom, reported, approving of the conduct of the Book Agents in the case.

The report was adopted, and a copy ordered to be sent to Mrs. Bascom.

Conference now adjourned, to meet at three o'clock this afternoon.

Benediction by the Chair.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Conference met at three o'clock pursuant to adjournment, Bishop Pnine in the chair.

G. Jones led the devotions of the body.

The minutes of the morning were read and approved.

Bishop Pierce took the chair, and advised that the Conference proceed with their business as rapidly as convenient, as it was very doubtful whether there would be a quorum on Monday.

CHANGE OF NAME.

C. K. Marshall presented a resolution proposing the change of the name of the Church, by dropping the word "South."

It lies on the table one day, under the rule.

SUPPORT OF THE BISHOPS.

The committee on Episcopacy presented again their report touching the support of the Bishops.

A minority of the same committee presented a counter report.

Jas. Stacy presented a substitute.

A. L. P. Green presented another substitute.

The two reports and the substitute of Stacy were laid on the table.

A. L. P. Green's plan, consisting of resolutions, was then taken up and considered item by item.

The first item was read to this effect: That the amount necessary for the support of the Bishops be devided between the Annual Conferences and the Missionary Society, as follows: the Annual Conferences raising seventy per cent., and the Missionary Society thirty per cent.

H. N. McTyeire proposed eighty per cent. for the Conferences, and twenty per cent. to the Missionary Society.

The amendment was rejected.

G. W. Langhorne proposed that the seventy per cent be paid by the Book Agent.

Which was laid on the table.

A. H. Mitchell proposed to exclude the Mission and Pacific Conferences, which was accepted.

T. Maddin proposed, ineffectually, to [illegible] the support equally between the Conferences, the Society, and the Book concern; and the

This item was adopted.

The second item—Let the seventy per cent be divided between the Annual Conferences according to their ability to pay—

Was considered and adopted.

The third item—The Book Agent shall be authorized to draw on the Chairman of the Board of Stewards of the Annual Conference for the Annual appropriation, which shall be paid during the session of the Annual Conference—

Was considered and adopted.

The fourth item—The Annual Conferences shall be allowed to take their own plan of raising said fund; but should any fail to raise the money, in that case the Chairman of the Board of Stewards shall levy a per cent. on the Conference fund sufficient to pay said draft.

J. E. Evans objected to the levy on the Conference fund, and, on motion of J. H. Atkins, was stricken out.

And then, as thus amended, it was adopted.

The fifth item—The Bishops shall draw seventy per cent. of their allowance, and draw for the same on the Book Agent, quarterly—

Was considered and adopted.

SATURDAY, May 29.

The Conference met at 8½ o'clock—the preliminary exercises by Rev. Thomas Stringfield. Bishop Pierce in the chair.

The journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Bishop Early was now called to the chair.

JOURNALS OF THE ANNUAL CONFERENCES.

L. M. Lee, from the committee on Itinerancy, submitted their report (No. 10) on the errors and defects in the Journals of the Annual Conferences—giving specifications, and recommending that the Secretary of this General Conference be instructed to have this report, together with resolutions Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 8, 9, reported from the committee on Itinerancy to the General Conference of 1854, instructing the Bishops and Annual Conferences with reference to this matter, printed and communicated to the proper officers of each Annual Conference.

The report was considered and adopted.

SECURITIES OF THE PUBLISHING HOUSE.

J. B. McFerrin, from the committee on Book and Periodicals, returned their report (No. 9) with reference to the securities of the Publishing House, recommending, as before, that the whole matter of the securities of the Publishing House be referred to the Book-Agent, Book committee, etc.; which was considered and adopted.

THE CARROLL AND SMIZER BEQUESTS.

J. B. McFerrin, from the same committee, submitted their report (No. 15) on the subject of the communication of William Barbhill, Lagrange, Ky., recommending that the Book Agent be requested to receive and appropriate the bequest of Michael Smizer and James Carroll, deceased.

Which was also adopted.

DUTIES OF BOOK AGENT AND BOOK EDITOR.

J. B. McFerrin, from the same committee, submitted their report, (No. 16,) embracing an additional item for their report No. 4, with respect to the duties of the Book Agent, [illegible] ing appropriately in the Discipline those [illegible] "No book of our Catalogue shall be published without the joint concurrence of the Book Editor and the Book Agent; and in case of difference and disagreement between them, the matter shall be referred to the Book committee."

He said this makes a slight alteration in an item already adopted. Some seemed to be dissatisfied with the manner in which it had been reported.

The report was adopted.

VAN HORTON DONATION.

J. B. McFerrin, from the same committee, submitted their report (No. 17) on the paper presented by R. Abbey and Levi Pearce with regard to the Van Houton donation, recommending that these trustees be continued in charge of said fund—to be paid to the Missionary Treasurer and Book Agent.

The report was adopted.

COMPENDIUM OF THE HISTORY, POLITY, DOCTRINES, AND ORDINANCES OF THE CHURCH.

J. B. McFerrin, from the same committee, having reconsidered the subject of the resolution of C. D. Oliver and G. W. Carter, to which was referred—the getting up of a Church Catechism—now submitted a report, (No. 18,) recommending that the Book Editor be requested to prepare, or cause to be prepared, a Catechism or Compendium of the History, Polity, Doctrines, and Ordinances of the Methodist copal Church, South, which shall be submitted to the Bishops for approval, and, when approved, printed at the convenience of the Book Agent.

J. Hamilton—To what particular class of readers is this work to be addressed?

J. B. McFerrin—We conclude to report in this indefinite manner, and leave the character of the work entirely to the Book Editor and the Bishops.

Bishop Paine—It is not mandatory, only discretionary.

J. E. Edwards objected to this indefiniteness. Catechisms were addressed to children. He understood that this work was to embrace all that relates to our Sabbath-school interests. It was assured to get up a Catechism for older persons. He did not object to the work. It would fall into good hands. But he desired the Conference to indicate clearly what the work was to be.

J. B. McFerrin—The resolution of Bros. Oliver and Carter specified the kind of work they desired; and the report was based on that resolution.

J. E. Edwards—Does the resolution contemplate a Catechism, or a Sunday-school work?

J. B. McFerrin—It contemplates a Catechism for youth just brought into the Church, and for Sabbath-schools.

J. E. Edwards—Then why call it a Catechism?

J. B. McFerrin—The child is not named yet. When it shall be born, it will be time enough to name and baptize it.

G. W. Langhorne did not see the point of the objection. We needed a book embodying portions of the history and the doctrines of the Church. On these points those of mature years need indoctrinating as well as the children. Many adult members of the Church have very imperfect ideas of our doctrines and usages. He once heard a Presiding Elder affirm that he saw very little difference between the doctrines of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Episcopal Church. Whatever the Bishops would endorse, he was willing to receive.

M. J. Blackwell—I would like to substitute the ward "compendium" for "Catechism."

J. B. McFerrin—Both words are in there.

The report was adopted.

AGENTS OF THE PUBLISHING HOUSE.

J. B. McFerrin, from the same committee, submitted their report, (No. 18,) embracing a resolution of thanks to the Agents of the Publishing House for the ability and fidelity with which they have managed the affairs of the Concern."

SUPPORT OF THE BISHOPS.

W. A. Smith, from the Committee on Episcopacy, to whom was referred the duty of estimating the amount that shall be paid by each Annual Conference towards the support of the Bishops for the next four years, submitted the following:

That the amount to be raised each year by the several Annual Conferences is $6580. We recommend that this amount be distributed for payment as follows:

Alabama Conference	$ 700
Arkansas	125
Florida	150
Georgia	675
Louisiana	250
Mississippi	400
Missouri	225
St. Louis	200
Kentucky	225
Louisville	225
Western Virginia	100
Virginia	650
North Carolina	300
Holston	150
South Carolina	650
Texas	225
East Texas	175
Wachita	200
Tennessee	650
Memphis	500
	$6775

H. N. McTyeire had sympathized with our beloved Superintendents, in view of the manner in which this subject had been sometimes discussed. He expressed surprise at the small figure reported for Louisiana—only $250 falling to her share. He was really sorry that any part of this fund had been taxed upon the Missionary Society, and wished that the salaries of the Bishops had been raised, and that one or two more had been elected to help them in their work. Louisiana (said he) accepts her portion as a privilege; and if you want more, you may double it; and, if you want it in advance, you may draw now. Sir, I am astonished at the relative cost of the Episcopacy. Why, sir, we have in Louisiana a handful of Episcopalians, whose Bishop does not do more work than one of ours, and he receives from $3000 to $4000 annually. The number of their membership there is not one-fourth as large as ours, and they pay $4000, where we pay only $250. Sir, we accept it as no burden, but as a privilege. It is a burden, just as the wings of a bird or the sails of a ship may be regarded in that sense—helping us to go along.

B. M. Drake demanded the previous question, which was sustained, and then the report was adopted.

EDUCATIONAL INTERESTS OF THE CHURCH.

B. M. Drake, from the committee on Education, submitted a report, in writing, setting forth in detail the several schools, academies and colleges under the patronage of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South—the number of the pupils, extent of libraries, etc.; showing that the amount of property held and used for educational purposes, upon a reasonable estimate, must be in the neighborhood of two millions of dollars. The report closes with recommending the passage of resolutions to the following effect:

1st. Expressive of the devout gratitude of the delegates of the General Conference for the general prosperity of our literary institutions.

2d. Setting apart the second Friday in October, of each year, as a day of fasting, prayer and thanksgiving to Almighty God, for the abundant outpouring of his Spirit upon these and every department of the Church work.

3d. Recommending an increase of effort to sustain these institutions.

4th. Recommending the Bible as a text-book.

5th. Recommending the introduction of sacred music, as far as possible.

6th. That we receive the charter of the Central University of the General Conference of the M. E. Church, South, but defer final action thereon until the next General Conference.

7th. That while we approve the great object of the erection of a General University, we recommend that —— be appointed a Board of Commissioners to prepare a charter and plan of operations, procure information as the best location, means of endowment, etc.; and report to the General Conference meeting in 1862 their action in the premises.

On motion of J. E. Evans, it was ordered that these resolutions be considered and acted upon as independent propositions, and the first five were adopted without debate.

W. J. Sasnett opposed the sixth resolution. He was opposed in the reception of this charter, because if we accept it, even with the qualifications expressed, we would be committed to it and to Nashville for its locality. He was in favor of a Central University, but opposed to dwarfing the idea by adopting this resolution.

A. L. P. Green stated his connection with the pronouncement of this charter, which he represented as of the most favorable character—unlimited. There was but one other charter as liberal as this. If the Conference refused this charter, they would do themselves and the Church an immense damage.

J. Hamilton desired to take it out of the category of competition with our other institutions. A diploma should be required in order to the admission of students.

Bishop Paine said a word as Agent of the Greensboro' University. An effort to establish a real University had been initiated within the limits of the Alabama Conference before this matter was agitated here. They had gone on there and raised a subscription of nearly three hundred thousand dollars—at the last accounts there were two hundred and sixty-eight thousand dollars, and an efficient Agent in the field. These subscriptions were heavy and paying interest. One man subscribed $25,000. Another, who himself and his family had subscribed $35,000, had said to us, "My part is in the bank now, and I would rather you would draw for it than to pay interest." We intend to build. Arrangements are made for a University complete, with the exception of a Medical Department. We intend to teach Christianity as Methodists. We intend to teach biblical literature and religion. Is it right in the Conference to prejudge this matter? We expect to come up here four years from this time and present you, in this institution, a noble specimen of the liberality of the Southern Church—quite beyond the contingency of failure—a permanent thing so far as money can make it so. I propose to insert the word "decline" for the word "defer," and to insert at the end of the resolution these words: "It is therefore understood that the action of this body shall not be regarded as giving this institution the preference over any other which may present equal or superior claims to the next General Conference."

H. S. Doggett was opposed to the resolution and amendment. The time had not arrived for the Church to legislate a University proper into existence. Then, this was not the place. The charter would commit us to Nashville, and could be of no use if Nashville, Tenn., were not the place. He was not prepared to decide in favor of any place. He was in favor of the idea of a Great Central University. There was a fascination about it, etc. But our idea of a University should not be restricted to a Medical School.

C. F. Deems moved to strike out the resolution, for the reasons assigned by Dr. Doggett, and added the consideration submitted by Bishop Paine—Alabama was preparing to offer something tangible for a start; while Tennessee only offered a charter. He did not like the manner in which the thing had come up. It reminded him of the old saying, familiar to childhood:

"Won't you walk into my parlor"
Said the spider to the fly."

He objected, also, because it was a proposition to set up an independent Medical School, independent of the Church.

J. B. McFerrin, in connection with other brethren, was appointed a committee to procure this charter. The idea of this Central University did not originate in Nashville.

G. Jones—It originated in Georgia, North Carolina, Mississippi and Louisiana.

J. B. McFerrin—The idea of location did not originate here. I believe Brother Gillespie claims its paternity in an article not long since published in the Texas Advocate—the idea of a great Central University, to be located at Nashville. Another brother here says it was originated by a Kentuckian, in 1855. All I know about it is, that a meeting of brethren, called together in Nashville, appointed a committee, and authorized them to apply for a charter. The idea was, that we had the Book Concern here, that this was a healthy point, and therefore it was offered to us; and we would have been the most ungallant men in the world not to have accepted it. Brother Sasnett, and other brethren from the sand-hills and piney-woods came up here, and, seeing the blue grass and fat cattle, thought this the very place to send their boys to school. They wanted their boys to grow up to be men weighing two hundred pounds, or more, and, Nashville being the very place for that, they offered us the location; and we went on and procured the charter—one of the most liberal charters in the world, upon which they may engraft any thing they want.

Now, our brethren and friends here got up the idea of a medical department. Did you ever know a University without a Medical School? I understand a University to be an institution connecting Law, Medicine, and Theology with General Science. This is a kind of subcharter, as I understand it, and all these gentlemen ask is to be under the great Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. They take all the financial responsibility of building up the Medical Department. They have already $50,000 to $100,000 to begin upon. Are you going to reject that? We are not voting against Greensboro'. If we live at the centre, it is no argument against our right of competition for this institution. The brethren came here and made the offer, and we accepted it. They asked us to do nothing but procure the charter. That we have done; and now, brethren, if we do not bring up something worthy of your notice for years to come, just drop us, and go anywhere you please, and we will go with you.

J. E. Evans doubted whether we might not injure parties by accepting this charter. It was obvious to his mind that the Conference did not mean to commit themselves either to the project or this charter, and it was not necessary to its validity or vitality that the General Conference should receive it. All that was necessary was for the corporators to organize and save their charter, and hold those harmless who had acted in good faith. He moved the previous question, which was sustained by the House.

The Chair—The first question is on striking out the sixth resolution.

The resolution was stricken out.

W. A. Smith remarked generally that we were not ready to enter upon such a work; and would not be for the next four years.

Bishop Soule—I hold in my hand the charter, and it is the first time I ever saw it. I see my name in this charter, with others. I never knew till this hour, sir, that my name was in this charter. I never heard of it. When the resolution just rejected came up before the Conference in the report of the committee, I felt myself like a mariner at sea, out of sight of land, and without the necessary instruments to determine his latitude and longitude—precisely in that situation. I did not know, sir, what was meant by receiving this charter. I did not know what was meant by conferming this Board of Trustees, and consequently felt myself perfectly at sea. I did not know how to act, nor hardly how to talk. But the Conference has settled the matter by striking out the resolution. Still I am not yet clear in my apprehension with respect to what the Conference means to do precisely. There is now before us a resolution providing for the appointment of a committe of this Conference to have this whole subject of a Great Central University under investigation, and report the result of their inquiries and examinations to the next session of the General Conference. Am I correct, sir?

The Chair—A Board of Commissioners is to be appointed.

Bishop Soule—Well, sir, I certainly have no objection to that. I feel no disposition whatever to make any further observations.

A. H. Mitchell—Are these commissioners to procure a charter?

B. M. Drake—To prepare a charter.

G. Jones—This subject has been under consideration before the committee for nearly four weeks. We have labored much and long upon it. Some of the best minds in the Conference have been at work in that committee. They have matured this thing as well as they could, and the report comes before us as a sort of compromise. We did not intend to endorse these corporators, nor commit the Conference to the University now, and the resolution laid on the table was designed to be uncommittal. The resolution now before us proposes to survey the whole ground, and to take action just where we want action, as indicated by every speaker on this floor.

J. Hamilton did not expect the action of the

SATURDAY, JUNE 26, 1858.

Sewing Machines.—By referring to the card of E. L. Nimmo, in another column, or by calling at No. 7 Camp street, our readers will be made acquainted with a superior article in this line.

NEW ORLEANS, AS A CENTRE FOR MISSIONARY OPERATIONS.

In the reports of the General Conference our readers will not overlook the motion of Rev. H. N. McTyeire, for transferring the Missionary Society from Nashville to New Orleans and the terse and cogent reasons given by the mover for the proposed change—reasons that were felt; for, on dividing the house, there were 78 votes for the removal and 56 against. This was a considerable majority, under the circumstances. But the rule required a two-third vote, for change, and therefore the motion was lost. Lost only for the present, however. It is a question of time. It is to be regretted that the friends of Nashville, seeing so clear an expression of the General Conference in favor of removal, did not give up the advantage of a technical majority and assent.

About the same time, a similar motion was pending in the Presbyterian General Assembly, in session here. We extract from the minutes as reported:

The Overture from the Synods of Mississippi and Texas, for the establishment of a Local Committee of the Board of Domestic Missions at New Orleans, was taken up. On the motion to adopt the minute,

Dr. Palmer spoke, in substance, as follows:

He desired to make two preliminary remarks—1st, that the measure now proposed did not originate in any feeling of dissatisfaction or any want of confidence in the integrity and usefulness of the Board of Domestic Missions—2nd, that the friends of the measure have no desire to take what is termed a snap judgment, but that they are perfectly willing to refer it to the next General Assembly.

He supposed that the Presbyterian Church was entirely united in the principles upon which her operations are conducted; but that it might be necessary from time to time to review her policy, and improve her method of applying those principles.

He would lay down the proposition that the Church should come as near as possible to the particular field she desires to overtake and evangelize. It was but lately that the Alleghany mountain range frowned upon the Atlantic, and was the boundary beyond which we scarce looked. But yesterday, as it were, the Rocky Mountains were the ne plus ultra of all enterprise, and seemed the eternal limit to further progress; when suddenly, from causes which no human forecast would have conjectured, and which I need not now recite, by one tremendous bound, we planted our feet upon the farthest verge of our continent, and California was added to the galaxy of States. The American Eagle, with one wing in the Pacific and the other wing in the Atlantic, now soars supreme over the whole continent.

In the Apostolic age, the great work of the Church was about its very cradle. Soon the mission of St. Paul to the Gentiles had its center at Antioch. In the third part of the 1st century, the Patriarch, Apostle John, established his seat at Ephesus, where he could oversee the young plantations of the Church; and it is needless to recite how soon the city of Rome and the city of Constantinople were made similar centres.

Mr. Moderator, I ask you to look at the city of New-Orleans, in reference to its relations to the whole region of the Great Gulf of Mexico. Who can tell how soon, (by some of the operations of natural causes, or by the irresistable current of events,) the whole of that Gulf and its surroundings shall be ours? Look at the relations of New Orleans to Texas, that vast commonwealth, out of which five new States will soon be formed. Look at its relations to that country which of late has occupied the attention of so many of our citizens—Central America. Sir, we may regard the Mississippi as a vast speaking trumpet, and New Orleans its mouth-piece, where the least whisper is propagated to the farthest regions watered by it, in tones that reverberate to every part of our continent. Then think how important is this position for aggressive movements. I but throw out these suggestions, and will not enlarge upon them.

I wonder at the sagacity of the early traders—at the unerring instinct with which they seem to have been guided in the location of settlements which afterwards expanded into such cities as Pittsburg, St. Louis in the far West, and New Orleans. When Bienville selected the site of this city, he would seem to have been guided by such a prophetic instinct that were he permitted to rise and appear among us, this day, he would not even be surprised.

We ask the General Assembly to take possession of this city, to plant their banner here, and to make it one of the grand centers of their operations, as it is already one of the grandest centers of commercial, social, and (we will hope) of Christian influence.

The Church of Jesus Christ is one. She undertakes, as a unit, to spread the Gospel all over the world, and preach it to every creature. That, I take it to be her great, her imperative duty and her unchangeable purpose. If that be the doctrine, I desire, here and now, to say that if the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church intends to occupy this particular ground to accomplish this work, she must, in some important particulars, change or modify her plans.

In all our Domestic Missionary fields there is a growing tendency to work outside, and if this Board does not modify the plans, it will be left behind, or will become merely a local Board. [The speaker here referred to the amounts of local contributions in different years, to illustrate his position, and to the sending of moneys to Louisville and Philadelphia, which the Reporter did not catch.] At this moment the Synod of Mississippi employs Dr. James Smith at a salary of $2000, which alone is more than all they are credited for as having contributed to Domestic Missions. Very lately, in response to an appeal in this city, they gave, at one time to this Board $500. A few days later, we were obliged, in a sudden emergency, to raise $500 more, and it was done.

The discrepancy between the sum total of what is raised for Domestic Missions and our contributions as reported by the Board, is no evidence of disloyality to the Board, but that our own local necessities are the most urgent. If the Board is unable to act more for this region we shall be compelled to look first to God and secondly to ourselves.

It may, by some, be thought that this measure will prove an entering wedge to wide spread changes; but it is not so. Grant that a Committee is established here, and another at St. Louis, and others at other points. The unity of the Church's operations will be strengthened rather than impaired, if they be made subordinate to the parent Board, and by the establishment of these various agencies, we shall concentrate energies upon those points which could never otherwise be called in action.

Mr. Moderator, I thank God that I was born in the Presbyterian Church! I rejoice that there is a church which is equal to the wants of the age—an age for large plans and great purposes; an age when there is no time to sit down, fold our hands, and let red tape rule. To Christ the Lord is given the heathen for an inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for a possession. It is this kingdom, and we must gird up our loins, arm for the right, and go forth to win it to the Savior.

The whole matter was, on motion, referred to the next General Assembly.

THE NEW CHURCH AT BOULIGNY.

It was our fortune to be present at the dedication on Sunday last. The house was filled with an intelligent, inspiring congregation.—Many from the city were present, and they brought their purses with them. They know what a dedication means, but it does not keep them away. The building is pleasantly situated, in what will soon be one the most populous and respectable of our suburbs. Just now it is in the green fields, but handsome residences are rapidly rising around in every direction. We have not the measurement of the house but it will seat upward of four hundred in the main audience room. This is tastefully frescoed, and otherwise neatly finished and furnished. Beneath is a commodious basement with class rooms, office for pastor, and a main room for Sunday School, lecture and prayer meetings. The Church has a portico in front, which improves the appearance, and protects the ascent and entrance. Then there is a graceful spire which can be seen from all parts of the surrounding country, and a bell which gave our ears a pleasant salutation as we approached. The total cost including the amount paid before the first house was blown down in January, is about $5000. The amount of debt remaining at the opening was $2250. Two thousand of this was raised on the spot and the balance has since been made up. Thus this beautiful place of worship was first paid for, and in entire completeness given to Almighty God. We record this as another illustration of the liberality of our people and of the substantial progress which Methodism in New-Orleans is making.

NEW ORLEANS DEPOSITORY.

We take pleasure in announcing to the public that the establishment of the Methodist Book Depository in New Orleans begins to assume the appearance of a tangible reality. The building is secured: the Trustees have purchased, and the Depository is now permanently located at, 112 Camp street.

To enable the Trustees to meet the terms of their contract and make payments on the house as they fall due, it is necessary that our friends who have subscribed to the Depository fund make as speedy payments as possible.

Let us have your earliest remittances through your merchants here, or remit to me direct.

Sabbath School Books.—Capers' Catechism, Nos. 1 and 2; Questions on Genesis—120 dozen Longking's Questions; 30 sets Longking's Notes.

All at Nashville prices.

HOME CIRCLE.

This very attractive and deservedly popular periodical is published monthly by Stevenson & Owen, Ag'ts, Nashville, Tenn., L. D. Huston, D. D., Editor, at $2 per annum, strictly in advance. Each number contains 64 pages royal octavo, embellished with one or more beautiful steel-plate engravings. The matter is mainly original, and of the most important and interesting character.

To ministers of the gospel, and all others who may be disposed to act as agents in procuring subscribers, a discount of 20 per cent. will be allowed on the subscription price.

As the patronage of this admirable issue has not yet been sufficient to meet the cost of its publication, it is therefore respectfully proposed that a prompt, energetic, and continuous effort be made in all the Conferences to increase the list of its patrons to at least twelve thousand!—Come brethren, you have but to submit the claims of the "Circle" to the Church and her friends, and this desirable object will be more than realized at an early day.

COMMERCIAL.

The Picayune of Thursday morning says:

COTTON. The demand has been confined to a few parties to-day, and but few desirable lots are offering, but we have noticed sales of about 4,500 bales at full prices for the better qualities, with no easy market for the inferior descriptions. We still quote

SUGAR. About 1100 hhds. have been sold at steady prices. Fair to fully fair 6¾ @ 7¼c ₱ lb.

MOLASSES. 100 bbls. fermenting and thin reboiled have been disposed of at 25 @ 26c. ₱ gallon.

FLOUR. The market continues quiet and the principle sales have been 500 bbls. St. Louis superfine at $4 50; and 100 extra Illinois at $5 25 ₱ bbl.

WHEAT.—Prices have declined with sales of 235 sacks red at 80c., and 1,500 prime red at 85c. ₱ bush.

CORN. With a very light stock the rates have again advanced, and prime white on the levee is held at 90c. The only sales reported are 125 sacks mixed at 85c., and 495 ordinary white in store at 75c. ₱ bush.

OATS.—400 to 500 sacks St. Louis sold in two or three lots at 58c. ₱ bushel.

BRAN.—Sales of 1,100 sacks at 65c., and 500 in store at 67½c. ₱ 100 lb—a further advance.

PORK.—A lot of 75 bbls.—heavy Mess sold $16 25 ₱ barrel.

BACON.—We notice only retail transactions.

LARD.—We hear of nothing doing.

MONETARY AND FINANCIAL.

The market has worn a very tame appearance to-day, and but little business of consequence was transacted. Conversation at the various corners on Carondelet street was, however, pretty active, the chief topic being the overflow and the probable losses it may engender. On the subject opinions are very wide apart, and are likely to continue so until the becoming of the crop shall determine the real amount of injury. With regard to Sugar, it seems to be generally conceded that the crop will eventually sum up 60,000 to 70,000 hhds., probably the latter. So far as Cotton is concerned, the damage cannot be arrived at with the same degree of accuracy. Some go so far as to assert that the injury will scarcely attain a per centage on the crop. But this is mere assertion. Others, whose sources of information are credible and trustworthy, estimate the harm at 200,000 bales as a minimum, while others again, possessing the same advantage, put it down at 300,000 bales, and even more.

The Money market is unchanged. There is but a moderate amount of paper offering, and good names are readily taken at 8 @ 9. The banks are absorbing pretty much all that is tendered.

Stocks meet with some inquiry, but there are no transactions on account of the bill rates claimed.

DR. T. McGOWN'S
SARSAPARILLA
AND IODINE OF POTASI,
THE GREAT
BLOOD PURIFIER AND HEALTH RESTORER,

Prepared from fresh root, the only kind worthy the confidence of physicians or the public. Old, imported root is inert and worthless, have too much overlooked by the profession. According to many, this compound is nearly a PANACEA or CATHOLICON in use; and its components have been highly extolled by some of the most distinguished physicians of Europe and America, viz: Sir Wm. Fordyce, Brodie, Lugol, Cundet, Baron, Barkley, Munson, Ricord, Gerdrin, Bell, Harrison, Channing, Hildreth, etc.—for the cure of Scrofula or King's Evil, White Swelling, Gout, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Dropsy; diseases of the Kidneys, Liver, Lungs, Skin; Eruptions; Bites, Ulcers, and scaldheads. Sores (McGown's Ointment should also be used, applied locally;) Blotches; Pimples on the face; Ringworm, Tetter, Chronic Sore Eyes, Scald Head, Leprosy, Goiter; Pains of the Bones, Joints; Spinal Complaints Lumbago, Chronic Bronchitis, Tonsilitis, Hooping Cough, Bleeding from the Lungs, Typhoid Pneumonia, Scarlet Fever, Erysipelas; Dyspepsia, Jaundice; Glandular Tubercles, especially of the neck; Calculus, Palsy, Tumors, Goitre, Gleet; Enlargements of the Liver, Spleen, Testes; Syphilis, in all its forms. Sir Wm. Fordyce says of Sarsaparilla, when exhibited in constitutions enfeebled and emaciated by long attacks of the venereal, or by the abuse of mercury, "it is the great restorer of the appetite, flesh, color, strength and vigor." Professor Bell, lecturing on the Venereal, says of Iodine of Potash, it is a "powerful, safe and benign remedy, and its salutary operation is aided by preparation of Sarsaparilla."

Female Complaints.—Amenorrhea, Dysmenorrhea, Irregularities, Suppression, Diseases of the Womb, Leucorrhea, Tumors, Enlargement of the Uterus, Breasts; Chorea; etc.; Impurities of the Blood or System, and all diseases dependent thereon. Makes the skin clear and smooth—an object of interest with the ladies. It should be used in the spring to purify the blood and prevent sickness.

McGOWN'S ESSENCE TAR.—A certain cure for Bowel Complaints, as Diarrhea, Dysentery, Flux, etc.

McGOWN'S DOGWOOD AND IRON.—A permanent cure for Chills, Ague Cake, Night Sweats, Debility, Dyspepsia, etc.

McGOWN'S GOLDEN PECTORAL.—For the relief of Coughs, Colds, Consumption, etc.

McGOWN'S STOMACH BITTERS.—A pleasant invigorating Tonic, to be used before meals in Dyspepsia, Debility, etc.

McGOWN'S OINTMENT.—Never known to fail curing old Sores, Cancers, Chronic Sore Eyes, etc.

The above prepared and sold in Memphis by H. S. HUGHES, Druggist, No. 343 Main st.

WINER'S CANADIAN VERMIFUGE.—Locusts are not more destructive to vegetation than internal worms are to the health of children. Most of the medicines prescribed for them, are however nearly as bad as the disease; the mercury, antimony, etc., with which they are impregnated being corrosive poisons; not so WINER'S CANADIAN VERMIFUGE, an innocious, purely vegetable curative, which never fails to remove the disease, and invigorate the general health of the sufferer.

☞ Be particular and remember the name "Winer's Canadian Vermifuge." This is the only article that can be depended on. Remember this. For sale by J. WRIGHT & CO., 21 and 191 Chartres st.

THE SHADOWS.

[illegible]—the beautiful shadows,
[illegible] the hills away;
[illegible]
The light clouds fly;
[illegible] wander they!
O the shadows!—the beautiful shadows,
Sweeping out on the meadows green;
Fair are the flowers
And bright bowers,
But fairer the flowers these shadows between.

O shadows!—the beautiful shadows,
Dancing light on the cousin's spray;
Chasing each wave
From gay to grave,
Like the frowning smiles of the child at play.

O the shadows!—The beautiful shadows,
Resting deep in the moon-lit lake,
Where the mountains soon
As viewed in a dream,
And a world of purer beauty make!

O the shadows!—the beautiful shadows,
In the world without and the world within:
For joy may borrow
A charm from sorrow,
And Charity smiles on repentant sin!

And there are shadows—merciful shadows,
Creeping like balm on the bleeding heart,
When first it knows
That love's fame glows
Stronger and purer when joys depart!

Then bless the shadows the beautiful shadows
And take this thought as thou goest abroad,
That in heaven and earth
Shades owe their birth
To light and LIGHT IS THE SHADOW OF GOD.

WOMAN.

Not she with traitorous kiss her Savior stung,
Not she denied him with unholy tongue;
She, while apostles shrank, could danger brave,
Last at his cross, and earliest at his grave.

"HONOR THY FATHER AND THY MOTHER."

"Don't speak so, my son! Don't speak in that tone to your grandfather; it is not respectful," said Mrs. Hale to her son George, who was in the yard, talking in a loud voice.

"I did not know that I was saying anything wrong, mother," said George.

"Perhaps the words were not wrong, but the tone was. You should speak to people older than yourself in a respectful manner, as well as with proper words," replied Mrs. Hale. "I wish you to remember that the text I have so often repeated, 'Honor thy father and thy mother,' is meant to apply to your grandparents, and other aged people, in some respects, as well as to your own parents."

The evening after this conversation, George was sitting near to his mother, looking very thoughtful.

"What are you thinking about, my son?" asked Mrs. Hale.

"About the text you spoke of this afternoon, mother. I don't know as I understand it very well."

"Repeat the whole verse, my son, and then we will talk more about it."

George repeated, very slowly and distinctly, "Honor thy father and thy mother; that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee." "Will God let people live longer who honor their parents?" asked George.

"That is God's promise," said Mrs. Hale. "We know that his promises are all true, and will all be fulfilled in the best time, and in the best way. He will surely bless those who obey his commands. If long life will not be a blessing to any of his children, he will take them, before they are old; but if they can glorify him by living long upon the land, he will preserve them many years."

"Mother," said George, "you once told me that honor means to obey; but I know now, that is not all it means; will you explain it to me more?"

"Honor means to obey first; and then, in every way you can, to add to the comfort and happiness of your parents," said Mrs. Hale. "They that honor me, I will honor," is a promise of which never fails. You honor God by keeping his commandment, 'Honor thy father and thy mother.'"—Little Pilgrim.

A BOY THAT OBEYED GOD.

In a town in one of the midland counties of England lived a poor boy; his clothes were almost threadbare, and his daily allowance of food was often very scanty. He was an orphan, and having no one to provide for him, he supported himself by working in a factory, where he earned five shillings a week. He was a very good boy, and loved to read his Bible, and to go to the house of God on the Sabbath day.—But he had an ungodly master, who, knowing his wish to go to church on Sunday, ordered him to go to work on that day. However, Jem thought it his duty not to obey, and accordingly spent that sacred day in his usual peaceful manner.

The next morning, when he presented himself at the factory, the master inquired, "Where were you yesterday?" The boy answered, "I went to church, sir." "Then you may go to church again to-day!" replied the master, angrily, and paying him what was due him, he instantly dismissed him. Jem was now without any means of earning a livelihood, but he knew it was useless to despair, so he began to look out for another situation.

On one of his applications, a gentleman asked him the reason of his dismissal from his former place. The boy replied, "Because I did not wish to work on Sunday, sir." The merchant was much pleased with this answer, and immediately engaged him at the increased wages of ten shillings a week. "Godliness has the promises of the life that now is, as well as of that which is to come."

A CHILD'S IDEA.

Children ask some funny questions. A little boy came home from Sabbath school one day, and meeting his mother, the following dialogue took place:

"Mamma!"

"Well, my dear."

"The teacher says people are all made of dust."

"Yes, my dear, so the Bible says."

"Are white people made of dust, too?"

"Yes."

"Then, I suppose colored people are made of coal dust, ain't they?"

GOD'S CHILD.

"Do you [illegible] are one of God's children?" [illegible] Sabbath school scholar. "I [illegible] know; I only know [illegible] a great way off, and [illegible] see him. Now he is near, and I love [illegible] and love me to do things, for [illegible] for my Father's or my mother's [illegible] was that sweet spirit of [illegible] the root of all true piety in [illegible]

[illegible] all the evils of his fate by pointing [illegible]

Sin has many [illegible] but a lie is the handle which fits them all.

OBITUARIES.

PLANTING.

"Father, what crop had I better plant for God?" asked a little boy whose father had given him a bit of the garden ground to raise something to turn into missionary money; will beans or onions fetch most?"

"I can tell you," said aunty, who sat by.—"What?" asked the little boy. "I would lay out four beds in your garden. Plant the seeds of love in one, the seeds of obedience in another, truth in the third, and humility in the fourth. These will raise a beautiful crop for God." "Oh, aunty," said the little boy, "I am trying to raise those seeds every day in my own heart; but my mother says the weeds grow fastest. Oh, I have to dig so."

THE GREATEST
Medical Discovery
OF THE AGE.
MR. KENNEDY, of Roxbury, has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures
EVERY KIND OF HUMOR
From the worst Scrofula down to a Common Pimple.
He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases, both thunder humor. He has now in his possession over one hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.
Two bottles are warranted to cure a nursing sore mouth.
One to three bottles will cure the worst kind of pimples on the face.
Two or three bottles will clear the system of blues.
Two bottles are warranted to cure the worst canker in the mouth and stomach.
Three to five bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Erysipelas.
One or two bottles are warranted to cure all humor in the eyes.
Two bottles are warranted to cure running of the ears and blotches among the hair.
Four to six bottles are warranted to cure corns and running ulcers.
One bottle will cure scaly eruptions of the skin.
Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of ringworm.
Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the most desperate case of rheumatism.
Three to four bottles are warranted to cure the rheum.
Five or eight bottles will cure the worst case of scrofula.
A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the above quantity is taken.
Nothing looks so improbable to those who have in vain tried all the wonderful medicines of the day, as that a common weed growing on the pastures, and among old stone walls, should cure every humor in the system; yet it is a fixed fact. If you have a humor it has to start. There are no IFS nor ANDS, buns nor ha's about it selling some cases, but not yours. I peddled over a thousand bottles of it in the vicinity of Boston. I know the effects of it in every case. It has already done some of the greatest cures ever done in Massachusetts. I give it to children a year old, to old people of sixty. I have seen poor, puny, wormy-looking children, whose flesh was soft and flabby, restored to a perfect state of health by one bottle.
To those who are subject to a sick head ache, one bottle will always cure it. It gives great relief in catarrh and dizziness. Some who have taken it had been costive for years, and have been regulated by it. Where the body is sound it works quite easy, but where there is any derangement of the functions of nature, it will cause very singular feelings, but you must not be alarmed; they always disappear in from four days to a week. There is never a bad result from it; on the contrary, when that feeling is gone, you will feel yourself like a new person. I heard some of the most extravagant encomiums of it that ever man listened to.
Manufactured by DONALD KENNEDY, No. 120 Warren street, Roxbury, Mass. Price $1 per bottle.

DOCTOR HOOFLAND'S
CELEBRATED
GERMAN BITTERS,
PREPARED BY
Dr. C. M. JACKSON, Philad'a, Pa.
WILL EFFECTUALLY CURE
LIVER COMPLAINT, DYSPEPSIA, JAUNDICE,
Chronic or Nervous Debility, Diseases of the Kidneys, and all diseases arising from a disordered Liver or Stomach.
Such as Constipation, Inward Piles, Fullness or Blood to the Head, Acidity on the Stomach, Nausea, Heartburn, Disgust for Food, Fullness or Weight in the Stomach, Sour Eructations, Sinking or Fluttering at the Pit of the Stomach, Swimming of the Head, Hurried and difficult Breathing, Fluttering at the Heart, Choking or Suffocating Sensations when in a lying posture, Dimness of Vision, Dots or webs before the Sight, Fever and Dull pain in the Head, Deficiency of Perspiration, Yellowness of the Skin, and Eyes, Pain in the Side, Back, Chest, Limbs, etc., Sudden Flushes of Heat, Burning in the Flesh, Constant Imaginings of Evil and great Depression of Spirits.
The proprietor, in calling the attention of the public to this preparation, does so with a feeling of the utmost confidence in its virtues and adaptation to the diseases for which it is recommended.
It is no new and untried article, but one that has stood the test of a ten years' trial before the American people, and its reputation and sale is unrivalled by any similar preparations extant. The testimony in its favor given by the most prominent and well-known Physicians and individuals in all parts of the country is immense, and a careful perusal of the Almanac, published annually by the proprietor, and to be had gratis of any of his Agents, cannot but satisfy the most skeptical that this remedy is really deserving the great celebrity it has obtained.
Principal Office and Manufactory, No. 418 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Methodist General Conference.

Hamilton did not expect the action of the ence would go to the extent it has. If labama Institution were not accepted, he his colleagues would have no heart-burn- about it.

S. Riggs demanded the previous question; the force of which the seventh resolution rejected.

On motion by J. E. Evans, the report was adopted as a whole.

W. D. Harris asked and obtained leave of ence for W. McMahon, who had received af- ive intelligence from his family.

K. Marshall presented the following reso- n, which was, after several ineffectual ef- to amend, adopted:

olved, That we earnestly exhort all our people to sus- and patronize our own institutions of learning, and onsider the painful consequences that have befallen who have most unwisely allowed their children to ucated in Roman Catholic and kindred schools.

J. Hutchinson complained that his speech yesterday was not reported in the Daily Ad- ate.

O. R. Blue said he had been slandered by reporter, and set down for a fool.

This reporter replied: The statement is not rect, and I protest against such misrepre- tations of a man who has no right to speak e.

The question on the bonndary line between North Carolina and Virginia Conferences s came up; and L. M. Lee and R. T. Heflin oke at length on the subject.

The hour for adjournment having come, no- wers given out, and the Chair prononnced benediction.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Conference met at three o'clock, pursuant to journment—Bishop Kavanaugh in the chair.

W. P. Ratcliffe opened the session with ayer.

The business before the Conference at the ur of adjournment was resumed.

After some miscellaneous discussion, and a peech of fifteen minutes by G. W. Carter,

On motion of T. W. Dorman, the question was ow put.

The substitute was rejected, and the original port was adopted.

TEXAS AND RIO GRANDE MISSION CONFERENCES.

Bishop Paine submitted the following:

Resolved, That if within the next four years the Texas nference should deem it best to divide and organize a Conference within their bounds, and the Presiding- hop shall concur, they do so.

After some conversation,

J. E. Evans moved to substitute the resolution y a motion to reconsider the vote fixing the ne between the Texas and Rio Grande Mission nferences.

J. W. Whipple—It was desirable to remove e line a little farther east.

J. Boring had no question about the wisdom f the erection of the Rio Grande Mission Con- rence, but thought it best to remove the east- n boundary eastward to the Guadalonpe er.

Bishop Paine—I have no doubt but the Guad- loupe would be better for the present; but if u postpone it a year or two, it might do very ell as it is.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

H. N. McTyeire—I move now that the line brought east to the Guadaloupe river, run- ing from its mouth up to where the road from n Antonio to Fredericksburg crosses said ver; then as already described and fixed.

Bishop Paine—How far up the river does at road cross?

J. B. Whipple—One hundred and ten miles. want to amend the motion, so as to include redericksburg in the Rio Grande Mission Con- rence.

The amendment was accepted, and so the tion was adopted, and the boundary changed cordingly.

GEORGIA AND HOLSTON CONFERENCE

L. Pierce, from the committee on Boundaries, bmitted a report, changing the line between Georgia and Holston Conferences, so as to clude Dade county, in the State of Georgia, the Holston Conference, etc.

H. H. Sevier proposed to substitute the re- rt by these words: "That the line between Georgia and Holston Conferences be defined follows: beginning at the Tennessee river d the Alabama State line; thence south with id Alabama line to the eastern base of the ookout Mountain; thence north with the ase of said mountain to the Tennessee and eorgia State line; theuce with the Georgia tate line to where it meete the line running etwesn the South Carolina and Holston Con- rences."

The substitute was accepted, and so the re- ort was adopted.

MISSOURI CONFERENCE.

W. G. Caples (the rules being suspended for he purpose) moved to take out of the descrip- ion of the boundary of the Missouri Confer- nce [page 200 of the Discipline] these words: "And also the city of Quincy, Ill."

The motion was agreed to, and the words were stricken out.

THE CHURCH EVANGELIST: A WEEKLY TRACT.

On motion by C. K. Marshall, the Conference now took up the consideration of the report of the special committee for the establishment of the weekly newspaper suggested by his memo- rial submitted at an early day of the session.

The report recommends the establishment of a weekly newspaper for general and gratuitous circulation, to be "of the highest order known to Christian literature," and prescribes a plan for getting up the same, embracing seven items, heretofore described.

C. K. Marshall spoke fifteen minutes on the objects of the paper, and the methods by which it is proposed to be put into circulation.

The several propositions were then adopted, upon separate consideration.

On motion by C. K. Marshall, it was ordered, that "The Church Evangelist: a weekly Tract," be the name and style of said weekly news- paper.

J. E. Evans submitted the following:

Resolved, That the Book Committee be authorized to employ an Agent of said paper, if they deem it expedient.

Several members proposed to amend, by ap- pointing C. K. Marshall to that Agency.

H. H. Montgomery submitted a resolution to that effect.

J. E. Evans withdrew his resolution.

The hour of adjournment having now ar- rived—

On the motion of E. H. Myers, this subject was laid on the table for the present.

B. M. Drake made an ineffectual motion for a recess till eight o'clock.

F. E. Pitts moved to go now into the election of the Book Committee.

And then, after some desultory conversation with reference to unfinished business of the General Conference, such as the place of holding the next General Conference, and a change of the ratio of representation in the General Con- ference,

The Conference adjourned till Monday morn- ing, half-past 8 o'clock.

Benediction by Bishop Soule.

MONDAY, May 31.

The Conference met at half-past 8 o'clock—the opening exercises by the Rev. Dr. Joseph Boyle—Bishop Kavanaugh in the chair.

The journal of Saturday was read and authen- ticated.

Bishop Andrew was called to the chair.

The action of the Conference was had upon several points in the Discipline with respect to Conference boundaries, to make the Discipline conform to previous action of the body, and adding to the Kentucky Conference "Liberty," etc.

RATIO OF REPRESENTATION.

On motion of A. L. P. Green, the Conference took up the consideration of the report, No. 4, from the committee on Revisals, namely, that proposing a change of the Discipline, pages 36 and 37, with respect to the ratio of representa- tion in the General Conference, so that there shall be one member returned for every twenty- one members of the Annual Conferences, and changing "two" to "three," so as to read, "no Conference shall be restricted to less than three representatives."

On motion by H. A. C. Walker, the latter proposition was laid on the table.

G. W. Langhorne moved to indefinitely post- pone the remainder of the report; which was not entertained.

P. P. Smith advocated the change.

L. M. Lee opposed; for the reason we have no lay representation in the Church at all. The safety of the interests of the whole Church, in his judgment, would be far better secured and subserved in a large representation. The pre- sent ratio would not return too large a body in the next four years. He looked not so much to the size of the General Conference, nor the length of the sessions, as to the constantly in- creasing amount of business to be done, which evidently required a representation from the various sections of the Church.

Bishop Soule—With all due respect to the statement of Dr. Lee, I beg leave to say that I have ever supposed that the whole Methodist Episcopal Church—ministers and laity—were represented in this General Conference. Such has been my conviction from the beginning.

L. M. Lee—In the sense to which the Bishop refers, I suppose I should agree with him.

D. B. Nicholson—I subscribe to the view of Dr. Lee; and to meet the expense complained of by brother Smith, I propose to amend the Discipline in another place, so as to prescribe that the General Conference shall meet only once in eight years.

The Chair—That cannot be entertained.

A. L. P. Green had noticed among the Annual Conference delegations, that a number of the old and moderate men are returned as the very last in the lists; and if the ratio had been as low as one to twenty-one, he feared the old, moderate, safe men would have been left at home. He would prefer a medium between this proposition and the present ratio. He moved to amend the resolution by striking out 21 and inserting 17.

The motion was agreed to on a division—affirmative 65, negative 55.

The resolution reported, as thus amended, was now adopted.

ADMISSION OF CHURCH MEMBERS.

On motion by A. H. Mitchell, that part of the same report which proposes to modify or do away with the principle of probation was laid on the table for the present.

J. Stacy desired to offer a substitute for that part of the report.

The Chair—It cannot come in now.

S. Anthony proposed the following, by way of substitute for the balance of the Report No. 4 of the committee on Revisals:

Whereas, many changes of the Discipline have been proposed; therefore,

Resolved, that no further change of our present Disci- pline be made by this General Conference, except such as shall be necessary to make the same conform to the changes already made.

On motion by C. F. Deems, the substitute was laid on the table.

CLASS MEETINGS.

On motion by C. F. Deems, that part of the same report changing the section relating to class meetings was laid on the table.

LOVE FEASTS.

The Chair now directed the reading and con- sideration of that part of this report from the committee on Revisals, proposing a change of the discipline, by inserting matter to follow sec. 2, chapter iii.

D. B. Nicholson—Does the report propose to restrict reception to the love-feast to those who are in full fellowship?

T. O. Summers—No.

G. W. Langhorne would strike out the words, "candidates may be received," because the dis- cretion of reception of members was altogether with the preachers. But he did not press the motion.

R. T. Heflin—It strikes me that a proposi- tion similar to that has already been laid on the table.

The Chair—No, sir; it was not the same.

B. M. Drake moved to strike out the love- feast restriction to one hour and a half.

Levi Pearce and E. Wadsworth never saw that restriction violated.

J. Boyle—I am very glad to meet with one man in my life who has never seen that rule violated. I have often felt that I would be do- ing injury to the cause of God by closing the meeting at the end of one hour and a half; and I trust now that this discretion will be left to those managing the meeting.

P. S. Doggett—I differ very materially with Bro. Boyle. I have observed the operation of this hour and a half rule, and I am decidedly of the opinion that it is founded in the maturest wisdom. I think there is a deep sagacity in it. I think the love-feast will accomplish all its legitimate objects, if conducted properly, in an hour and a half. Such is the result of my own observation; and I should deprecate any change of the rule. There is some discretion, which the rule itself allows.

A. L. P. Green—I concur with Dr. Doggett. The rule is especially adapted to meetings in the country, where men, women and children come to worship. The love-feast begins at 9 o'clock, say, in the winter. It is very comfort- able to those inside; but persons outside may be suffering with cold. I want them to be com- pelled to open the doors.

C. K. Marshall—The difficulty is in the long, tedious openings of the love-feast. A love-feast is a love-feast, brethren—that is exordium enough.

E. Wadsworth—It has been my custom in holding love-feast, to hold the love-feast proper one hour and a half. If there happen to be an outpouring of the Spirit of God, and it is desir- able to continue, I close the love-feast, and open a prayer-meeting.

S. P. Richardson—Mr. President, I do not want to stay here longer than to-day. I move that the question be now put.

This motion being seconded by a majority of the House, the motion to strike out was re- jected.

And then this part of the report was adopt- ed. It is in the following words:

Question 1. How shall the love-feasts be held?

Answer—After singing and prayer, the minis- ter may make a short address, setting forth the nature and design of this institution. Every one present shall then partake of a little bread and water in token of brotherly love, and a col- lection shall be taken up for the poor of the church whenever it is deemed necessary; candi- dates for the church-fellowship may then be re- ceived into the church; after which the mem- bers shall give brief details of their religious experience; and the meeting shall close with singing and prayer.

Question 2. Who shall attend the love-feasts?

Answer—All the members of the church, and other serious persons who may be admitted by the preacher in charge.

Question 3. How often shall the love-feasts be held?

Answer—At every quarterly meeting, and at such other times as the preacher in charge may consider expedient; and they shall not be con- tinued longer than an hour and a half.

INSTRUCTION OF CHILDREN.

The Chair now directed the reading and con- sideration of that part of the same report pro- posing a change in sec. iii., chap. 3, page 99 of the Discipline, striking out cumbrous language, and the same was adopted in the following terms:

5. Let the minister diligently instruct and exhort all parents to dedicate their children to the Lord in baptism as early as convenient; and in his pastoral visitations let him pay special attention to the children; speak to them personally and kindly on experimental and practical godliness, according to their capacity; pray earnestly for them; cause them to be faithfully instructed in the nature, design, privileges, and obligations of their baptism; and as soon as they comprehend the responsi- bilities involved in a public profession of faith in Christ, and give evidence of a sincere and earnest determination to discharge the same, see that they be duly recognized as members of the Church, agreeably to the provisions of the Discipline, chapter iii., section i.

Let the second paragraph of section iv., page 103, be stricken out.

PUBLIC WORSHIP.

The Chair now directed the reading of that part of the same report proposing changes in sec. vi., chap. 3, pages 104 and 105 of the Dis- cipline; and the same was considered and adopted in the following words:

Question 1. Omit "among us, on the Lord's day."

Omit answer 6 to question 1: "Let the so- ciety be met," etc.

DRESS.

The chair now directed the reading and con- sideration of that part of the same report pro- posing to change the Discipline by striking out section viii., chapter 3, of Dress.

J. Stacy proposed a substitute for this part of said report, embracing a proposition to the effect, that preachers in charge shall earnestly and frequently direct attention to the General Rule, and the Holy Scriptures regarding the same, and mildly urge the observance of the same. When this subject was up before, the matter was disposed of in a rather hasty way. He thought it was eminently proper for the church to retain something in the place of this rule.

J. E. Evans—This matter was heretofore indefinitely postponed, with a view to let the book remain as it is.

A. L. P. Green—When that matter was first before us, I stated that the committee on Revi- sals had two or three papers on the subject before them, and were acting upon them. If I had thought the General Conference intended to act finally on the question, the committee would not have acted, and this part of the report would not have been submitted.

C. F. Deems here made an ineffectual motion to lay the subject on the table.

F. E. Pitts was in favor of the substitute.

Levi Pearce—I propose to brother Stacy to allow the section to be amended by dropping all after the words "superfluity of apparel."

L. M. Lee—Between what is in the Discipline and brother Stacy's proposition, I think I should prefer the latter. But I am opposed to both. We intend to protest against the world, the flesh, and the devil, and we should put our pro- test in language that the world, the flesh, and the devil shall understand. I confess that I do not understand what is intended by superfluity of apparel. I think it better to rid the Disci- pline of the whole subject.

W. G. Caples—The rule is simply against putting on gold and costly apparel.

C. K. Marshall said he was opposed to the rules on dress, and all such propositions for the suppression of specific vices, fashions or follies. The gospel should be faithfully declared as the remedy for every such thing. He said he meant to be consistent, and he hoped that principle would be the rule of our future conduct. If so, there was another and a greater evil in the Church than the evil of wearing costly apparel. He doubted not that the use of tobacco by ministers of the gospel was more detrimental to the cause of christianity, more injurious to health and happiness, and more offensive to God, a thousand-fold, than all the errors into which christian women have fallen, or are likely to fall, with reference to dress, and against which so much is said.

W. Closs—Does brother Marshall propose a prohibition of the use of tobacco as an amend- ment?

J. Hamilton—I am not in favor of striking all out. That would look too much as if the Church were encumbing to the world. Let us have the section as proposed to be modified by brother Stacy. That seems to me about as near to the point as any thing we can agree upon. It calls attention to the Scripture testimony.

Here, under the force of the previous ques- tion, L. Pearce's amendment was rejected, and the substitute adopted. It is in the following words:

Question—Shall we insist on the rule concern- ing dress?

Answer—By all means. This is no time to give encouragement to superfluity of apparel. Therefore let each preacher in charge direct the attention of those committed to his care to the general rule on this subject, and to the Holy Scriptures on which it is based; mildly yet earnestly urging them to keep the same.

ADMINISTRATION RESPECTING MEMBERS OF THE CHURCH.

The chair now directed the reading of that part of the same report proposing a change in the arrangement of section iii., chapter iv., page 123, of Discipline; which was considered and adopted in the following words:

In section iii., page 123, insert before the first paragraph:

Question 2. What shall be done in the case of disputes, insolvencies, and non-payment of debts?

Number the paragraphs in the answer, and change the 2 to 3 in the next question, p. 126.

BAPTISM.

The chair now directed the reading of that part of the same report proposing a change on page 143 of the Discipline, section ii., chapter v.; which was considered and adopted in the following words:

Omit "sanctify this water for this holy sacra- ment," in the ministration of baptism to infants, page 143.

BURIAL OF THE DEAD.

The chair now directed the reading of that part of the report of the same committee pro- posing changes of the Discipline in section iv., chapter v., p. 157, etc.

T. O. Summers proposed to strike out the rubric at the beginning.

Bishop Soule—I have regretted the existence of that rubric. There is a latitude taken under it that I deeply regret, and the service is often reduced to—I do not know what. Every man has his peculiar mode, departing from our stan- dards, which I regard as scriptural and spirit- ual, and rejoice to read on every occasion. I should be glad if the Conference would remove that provision, and not leave it for every man, young or old, to change the form to suit himself.

The rubric was stricken out.

And then, under the force of the previous question, demanded by J. G. Bruce, the proposed change was adopted. It is as follows:

In section 4, chapter v., page 157, "The Or- der of the Burial of the Dead,"

After the sentences, pp. 157, 158, insert:

"Then shall be read Psalm xc.;" and insert the Psalm from the version in the English Bible.

Then insert:

"Then shall follow the lesson taken out of the fifteenth chapter of the first epistle of St. Paul to the Corinthians," and insert the portion from our version of the Bible.

Then insert:

"Here may follow a suitable hymn, a sermon or exhortation, and an extempore prayer."

At the grave, etc.,

After the words, "fall from thee," p. 159, insert:

"Then the minister may say,

"Forasmuch as it hath pleased the Almighty God, in his wise providence, to take out of this world the soul of our deceased brother, we therefore commit his body to the ground, earth to earth, ashes to ashes, dust to dust; looking for the general resurrection in the last day, and the life of the world to come, through our Lord Jesus Christ; at whose second coming in glo- rious majesty to judge the world, the earth and the sea shall give up their dead; and the cor- ruptible bodies of those who sleep in him shall be changed, and made like unto his own glori- ous body; according to the mighty working whereby he is able to subdue all things unto himself."

After "rest from their labors," insert:

"Then may be sung a suitable hymn; then shall the minister say:"

Omit "Lord have mercy," etc., "Christ have mercy," etc., "Lord have mercy," etc.

ORDINATION OF BISHOPS.

The chair now directed the reading of that part of the same report proposing a change in section 3, chapter vi., of the Discipline—amen- datory of the rubric—proposing these words: "Then shall the Lord's Supper be administered;" and making other amendments of the Lord's supper and baptismal rubrics, pp. 103, 144, 152, etc.

H. A. C. Walker—As the supper is not at- tended to on occasions of ordination, why have the rubric there at all? I move to strike out this rubric wherever it occurs in connection with the ordination service.

The Chair—It is not often attended to.

The motion was agreed to, and it was further ordered to strike out all the rubrics with refer- ence to the ministration of the Lord's Supper on ordination occasions.

TRUSTEES AND STEWARDS.

The Chair now directed the reading and con- sideration of the part of the same report proposing changes of the Discipline in sections 4 and 5, of part ii., pp. 217, 222, etc.

H. A. C. Walker proposed to amend, by striking out that part of the report which would give a presiding elder or a preacher in charge the casting vote.

The motion was agreed to.

J. E. Evans—Does each church have a sepa- rate Board of Trustees, according to the re- port?

A. L. P. Green—Yes.

J. W. Whipple—There is a good deal of con- fusion in the Church on this subject.

J. C. Harrison—Diversity is not confusion.

On motion by J. E. Evans, the 6th and 7th items were amended by inserting appropriately the words: "of Boards."

This part of the report was then adopted. It is as follows:

Instead of sec. iv, Part II, "Of Trustees," Discipline, pp. 217–222, insert the following:

Of the Trustees.

1. (The paragraph marked 1, Discipline, page 217.)

2. No person shall be eligible as a trustee of any of our parsonages or churches who is not a member of our Church, and at least twenty- one years of age.

3. In the appointment of trusstees—except where the laws of the State or Territory pro- vide differently—the preacher in charge, or, in his absence, the presiding elder, shall have the right of nomination, subject to the confirma- tion or rejection of the Quarterly Conference. All vacancies in the Board of Trustees, occa- sioned by death, separation from our Church, or otherwise, shall be filled without delay.

4. (The paragraph marked 6, inserting "or boards," after "board," Discipline, page 221.)

5. (The paragraph marked 7, inserting "or boards," after "board," Discipline, page 221. Instead of "circuit or station" and "station or circuit," in the foregoing two answers, say "circuit, station or mission.")

6. (The paragraph marked 8, Discipline, pages 221, 222.)

7. If the said trustees or any of them, or their successors, have advanced, or shall ad- vance, any sum or sums of money, or are, or shall be responsible for any sum or sums of of money on account of Church property, and they, the said trustees, or their successors, be obliged to pay the said sum or sums of money, they, or a majority of them, shall be authorized to raise the said sum or sums of money by a mortgage on the said property, or by selling the said property, after notice given to the preacher in charge, or the Presiding Elder of the district, if the money due be not paid to the said trustees, or their successors, within one year after such notice has been given; and if such sale take place, the said trustees, or their successors, after paying the debt and other expenses which are due from the money arising from such sale, shall pay over the re- maindor of the money produced by the said sale to the steward, or stewards, of the circuit, station, or mission; which surplus of the pro- duce of said sale shall be forwarded by the said steward, or stewards, to the Quarterly Confer- ence within whose bounds it is situated, at its next session; which said Quarterly Conference shall dispose of the said money, by a vote of the majority, for the use of the said circuit, station, or mission.

8. (The paragraph marked 5, Discipline, page 220.)

Instead of section v., Part II., pp. 222 to 224, insert:

Of the Stewards.

1. In every circuit and station, and also, wherever practicable, in every mission, there shall be not less than three nor more than seven stewards elected annually, one of whom shall be the recording steward.

2. In the appointment of stewards, the preach- er in charge shall have the right of nomina- tion, subject to the confirmation or rejection of the Quarterly Conference.

3. Let the stewards be men of solid piety, who both know and love the Methodist doctrine and discipline, and of good natural and acquired abilities to transact the temporal business of the church.

4. It shall be the duty of the stewards to take an exact account, etc., (as answer to Ques- tion 3, down to "arbitration;" then,) to provide elements for the Lord's Supper; to appoint some one in every class to receive contributions from the members for the support of the min- istry and other purposes, and to obtain from each collector thus appointed the money re- ceived by him, that it may be reported at the Quarterly Conference; to take up collections quarterly in every congregation, if it be ne- cessary; to write circular letters to the classes to be more liberal, if need be; as also to let them know, when occasion requires, the finan- cial state of the circuit, station, or mission, as reported at the Quarterly Conference.

Omit the last clause, "and to be subject," etc.

5. The stewards shall be accountable for the faithful performance of their duties to the Quar- terly Conference, which shall have the power to remove them from office.

APPEALS.

The chair now directed the reading and con- sideration of that part of the report of the same committee having reference to this subject—chapter iv., sections 2, 3, of the Discipline—proposing, amongst other things, to strike out the words, "in the interval of the General Con- ference."

R. T. Heflin—Will not that take away the jurisdiction of the General Conference?

J. G. Bruce—Not at all.

J. Hamilton—The object is, to procure such a form of trial as will give to the accused al- ways the right of appeal.

The Chair—Your Bishops are the only mem- bers of the Church who have not the right of appeal. They have really less protection than any other persons belonging to the Church.

Bishop Soule—The statement of the Chair is certainly true; but, sir, I never looked on the face of the General Conference of the Method- ist E. Church with regard to which I could feel the least reluctance to submit my case to them under any circumstances—and that without appeal, or the right of appeal.

C. F. Deems—I hope the provision will pass.

The amendment was adopted.

W. A. Smith—There is another amendment wanted. I move to amend so that it will read, "serious imprudence or immorality of any kind." There are those who limit it to that form of imprudence that is personal in the sense of minor immoralities.

J. G. Bruce—I hope it will not prevail. It is inquisitorial.

R. T. Heflin—The effect of that would be to make the Bishops responsible to the General Conference in their appointments, which would be the same as to take away their Episcopal power.

The amendment was rejected.

GILDAS SALVIANUS.

The Secretary read from the same report a propoeition to amend the Discipline on page 82, by striking out the words, "Gildas Salvianus," and inserting in lieu thereof the words, "Re- formed Pastor."

The amendment was agreed to.

The entire report, No. 4, of the committee on Revisals, as thus amended, was adopted.

W. A. Smith desired to enter a motion to re- consider the vote of the Conference adopting an unfavorable report in regard to a change of venue.

The Chair—Let us get through with the re- ports on revisals.

LOCAL PREACHERS AND EXHORTERS.

The Secretary now took up and read from the report, No. 3, of the committee on Revisals, that part changing the Discipline with respect to exhorters.

F. G. Ferguson—We find it necessary in our country to make exhorters of our colored breth- ren, who feel called to exercise themselves in a public way. Would not that make them members of the Quarterly Conference?

The Chair—Not at all.

The report was adopted. It is as follows:

Instead of ch. ii., sec. xix., pp. 94—96, insert:

SECTION XVII.

Of Local Preachers.

Question—What directions shall be given con- cerning local preachers?

Answer 1. Any one who professes to be called to preach may exercise the functions of a preacher in a local sphere, provided he receive a license from the Quarterly Conference of the circuit, station, or mission to which he belongs, agreeably to the provisions of the Discipline, chap. ii., sec. iv.

2. A licensed local preacher—(same as 1, p. 94.)

3. A local deacon—(same as 2, p. 95.)

4. It shall also be the duty of local preach- ers to aid the preacher in charge of the circuit, station, or mission to which they belong, in supplying the people with the ministry of the word. They shall accordingly be applied to by the preacher in charge, as soon as he enters on his work, to state what amount of service they are able and willing to perform; he may then draw up a plan by which their labors shall be regulated; and they shall be authorized to form new congregations, to take a list of the names of all candidates for Church membership, and, if expedient, receive them on probation; provided, that all such congregations, candi- dates and probationers be reported, as soon as possible, to the preacher in charge, in order that they may be placed immediately under his pastoral care.

5. Every local elder, deacon, and licentiate shall—(same as 3, p. 95; only omit, "if the distance, etc., be not too great," and say, "if it judge proper," instead of, "if they judge it proper.")

6. Whenever any local elder, deacon, or licentiate shall remove—(same as 4, p. 95.)

After sec. xvii., pp. 94—96, "Of Local Preachers," insert:

SECTION XIX.

Of Exhorters.

Question—What directions shall be given con- cerning the exhorters?

Answer 1. Any person wishing to exercise the functions of an exhorter may do so, provid- ed he receive a license from the Quarterly Con- ference of the circuit, station, or mission to which he belongs, agreeably to the provisions of the Discipline, chap. ii., sec. iv.

2. Let every exhorter diligently exercise the functions of his office, without assuming those of a preacher.

3. Every exhorter, by virtue of his office, shall be a member of the Quarterly Conference of the circuit, station, or mission to which he belongs; but in all other respects he shall be dealt with as a private member of the Church.

4. When an exhorter removes from one cir- cuit, station or mission to another, he shall not be recognized as such unless he obtain a certifi- cate of his official character from the Presiding Elder of the district, or the preacher to whose charge he belongs at the time of his removal.

DUTY OF BISHOPS.

The chair now directed the reading and con- sideration of that part of the same report changing sec. v., chap. 2, of the Discipline, "Of the election of Bishops, and their duty."

C. F. Deems here made an ineffectual motion to reconsider the vote refusing to strike out the New Orleans Restriction. He then moved to lay this report upon the table.

The motion was lost, and then this part of the report was adopted. It is as follows:

In chapter v., sec. 2, p. 47, "Of the Election and Consecration of Bishops, and their Duty," let Answer 6, Question 3, read:

Answer 1. To preside in the General and An- nual Conferences.

2. To fix the appointments of the preachers in the Annual Conferences; provided he shall not allow any preacher to remain in the same circuit or station more than two years succes- sively, etc. (The remainder of the answer to be as it now stands, except that the words, "and worn out," 6th line, p. 48, be omitted.)

The Secretary then read the remainder of the same report.

W. A. Smith—There is a report of the com- mittee on Episcopacy that ought to be taken up in connection with this; and he made an ineffectual motion to lay on the table.

W. G. Caples desired to provide that the Annual Conferences might hold ten days.

A. L. P. Green—We made only a base line, below which the Bishop shall not bring them. We made no upper line at all.

This part of the report was adopted in the following terms:

3. To choose the Presiding Elders, fix their stations, and change them when he judges it necessary; provided he shall not allow any Elder to preside in the same district more than four years successively.

4. To change, receive, and suspend preachers in the intervals of the Conferences, as necessity may require, and as the Discipline directs.

5. To appoint the times of holding the sessions of the Annual Conferences; provided every Con- ference shall have the right to sit a week at least, if it think proper.

6. To ordain bishops, elders, and deacons; and to see that the names of the persons or- dained by them be entered on the journals of the Conferences.

7. To decide all questions of law coming be- fore him in the regular business of an Annual Conference; provided such questions be pre- sented in writing, and with his decisions be re- corded on the journals of the Conference.—When, etc. (The remainder of the answer to be as now, except that on p. 50 6th line, the first word ["either"] be stricken out, and the last word ["or"] be changed to "and.")

8. To hear and decide appeals of the Quar- terly Conferences on questions of law, when he shall be presiding in any Annual Conference, and the question contained in the appeal, to- gether with the Bishop's decision, shall be re- corded on the journal of the Annual Confer- ence.

9. To see that the districts be formed accord- ing to his judgment; provided that no district shall contain more than fourteen appointments.

10. To unite two or more circuits, stations or missions together, when he judges it necessary, provided the financial interests and pastoral duties of each may remain separate and inde- pendent.

12. To travel through the Connection at large, in order to preach and to oversee the spiritual and temporal affairs of the Church.

Omit answer 15, section, v., page 52, "In case there be no Bishop," etc., this provision being found elsewhere.

DUTIES OF PREACHERS IN CHARGE.

The Chair now directed the reading and con- sidering of that part of the same report having respect to changes in sec. vii., chap. 2 of the Discipline, pages 55 to 61.

A. Monroe moved to strike out that part which relates to the quarterly renewal of tickets to the love-feast.

A. L. P. Green explained.

D. B. Nicholson—In many places we have no quarterly love-feasts.

L. Rosser—I think that, as a General Con- ference, we are proceeding too much upon the prin- ciple that because an institution or a regu- has become obsolete by neglect, therefore it should be removed from the Discipline.

J. E. Edwards—Instances are exceedingly rare where that rule is observed at all. I see no propriety at all in keeping it there. We have no use for it.

J. Hamilton stated something of the value of the ticket system in Mobile. Before we adopted it, it was a hard thing to get fifty people to love-feast; since we put the ticket system in operation the room had been thronged, some- times with four hundred people. I believe if the rule were observed it would change the character of our love-feasts in almost every place.

W. W. Bennett—We have found that to be the case in Alexandria.

The motion to strike out was lost.

This item of the report was then adopted. It is as follows:

Instead of sec. vii., ch. ii., pp. 55–61, insert the following:

SECTION VII.

Of the Duties of Preachers in charge of a Circuit, Stations, or Missions.

Question 1. What are the duties of the pre- cher who has the charge of a circuit, station or mission?

1. To receive, try, and expel members ac- cording to the provisions of the Discipline.

2. To appoint all the leaders, and change them, when he sees it necessary.

3. To see that all the ordinances and institu- tions of the church be duly observed, and the general rules be read at least once a year in every congregation.

4. To see that a fast be held in every con- gregation within his charge on the Friday pre- ceding every quarterly meeting, and that a memorandum of it be written in all the class books.

5. To hold quarterly meetings in the absence of the Presiding Elder.

6. To renew the tickets for the [illegible] members into love-feast quarterly.

TRADE.

...ited a resolution to the ...g in our forthcoming Disci... construed as to authorize any ...gent, or periodical editor to pub... for the Methodist Episcopal ...urch, South—that authority being committed wholly to our General Book Agent, Book Editor and Book committee, at Nashville.

2. That our said Book Agent be instructed ... to sell our publications within the bounds of such Conferences as may establish depositories, to other dealers, so as to enable them to sell at such rates as to compete with the depositories in the wholesale trade with the preachers.

J. B. McFerrin would like to understand this. Suppose our brethren establish a depository at Louisville, and one of our preachers in the lower part of Kentucky—all our preachers are dealers in books—should send up to Nashville for a bill of books to the amount of a hundred dollars; would your Agent here be authorized, under this resolution, to sell to him at the same rates he sells to the agent?

E. H. Myers—This thing is exceedingly plain. We have adopted a new plan, by which we are endeavoring to encourage the establishment of depositories. No Conference will establish a depository, unless it can feel secured of the trade with the preachers. But if any other trader can come in here, and buy books at the ... rate with the depository, what advantage ... the depository have to enable it to carry on business? It is intended, by this resolution, to secure that point. While the establishment here is told to sell to all other traders at such ... ten as to prevent competition with the wholesale trade with ... preachers on the part of depositories, it is ordered that the Agent shall sell to the depositories at the slightest advance above cost. It is intended especially to prevent other traders from coming into competition with the depositories for the wholesale trade with the preachers.

J. E. Evans—A preacher might set up in competition with the depository.

J. B. McFerrin—I want the Conference to define the duties of the Book Agent distinctly.

E. H. Myers—If you want to make it more specific, you might say, He shall not sell to the preachers so as to enable them to compete with the depositories.

J. B. McFerrin—You have said that the Agent shall sell to the depositories at very little above prime cost; and now you propose to instruct him to sell to everybody else so high that they cannot come to Nashville to buy.—Now, I ask you how you expect the institution here to live and meet incidental expenses? How shall they put up a pump, or make any little improvement?

E. H. Myers—When you calculate the cost of a book, you take into the account not only the cost of materials and mechanical labor, but also the salaries of agents, editors, etc., and make each book pay its proportionate share.

J. B. McFerrin—With that latitude of discretion I can do very well.

J. Hamilton—I hope he will never take that liberty. It would be to play a Jesuitical part.

J. B. McFerrin—I am no Jesuit, Mr. President. I am a plain man, and I want to know what you expect me to do; and when you have laid down the line by which I am to walk, I will go by it, if it shall be consistent with the character of a Methodist preacher to do so. I want the thing fairly and squarely understood between me, and I will walk by it, if it breaks me all pecuniarily.

I feel, now, a little more interest in this matter than I ever did before. I am going to sustain a relation to it and to the Church that I never sought, but fought against to the bitter end, and that I would not now sustain, only as I desire to do my duty to God and the brethren. I feel that the next four years will either make or break that Book Concern, and I wish to perform my part in connection with it as becomes a man, a Christian, and a Methodist minister. I do not want the Conference to leave matters in an undefined position, and call me to an account afterwards; and I give notice now, that unless I know what I am to do, I will not do the work at all. Your Agent must have a large discretion in some matters. You cannot put in a man to manage a Concern of that sort, unless he have discretion; he cannot manage it without a large discretion. Hence you have appointed six men to surround him—men of sound judgment, honest hearts, and clean hands, to act with him. I hope, therefore, that my brother Hamilton will withdraw his sophism—Jesuitical. I only stated the principle suggested by Brother Myers—The principle upon which he understood this business was to be conducted.

E. H. Myers showed how the depository system was expected to promote the sale of books beyond what could be expected from an effort to make all the sales and profits here.

B. M. Drake moved to specify that the Agent shall sell ten per cent. cheaper to the depositories than to others.

E. Stevenson—It is the design that the depositories shall make money, so as at the same time the Publishing House shall not be loser. Suppose a merchant or a preacher undertake to make himself a trader in our books, the resolution provides simply that your Agent shall not sell to him as cheap as to the depository established by the Annual Conference in his section of the country.

J. B. McFerrin gave an instance. Suppose Bro. Myers is the depositor at Chattanooga.—He is agent for the Holston Conference. He sends to the Book Agent at Nashville for books. The Agent and Book committee consult together and decided at what rate they can sell, that is, that they can sell at prime cost, adding five or ten per cent. to meet contingencies. Well, when the books go up to Bro. Myers, he has got a house to rent, a clerk to hire, etc.; he incurs expense enough to compel him to charge twenty-five per cent. on the cost of the books as he bought them. Now, do you not see we can sell here cheaper than he can sell there?

E. H. Myers—That is just what we do not want you to do.

J. B. McFerrin—Then you do not allow a preacher to trade with the Nashville Concern at all.

J. E. Evans—There are new views presented here. It has always occurred to me that there would be a catalogue price fixed, at which any preacher would be able to send here and buy. And I understand now that the object of this resolution is to require the Agent to sell to the depositories at prices so much lower than he sells to others, as to enable the depositories to do a safe business—that the Agent must not sell to preachers and others, so as to enable them to come into competition with the depositories.

C. B. Deems—It seems to me that the Book Agent will publish one list of catalogue prices, upon which any Conference agent may buy at the Nashville store; and that he will publish another list of catalogue prices, at which Methodist preachers may purchase here, and those will be regulated by the prices at which books are sold to the depositors. But if a merchant wishes to purchase of the Agent, and compete in the trade with any depositories, the resolution goes upon the presumption that the Agent will defeat his plan.

J. Hamilton—I did not apply the word "Jesuitical" to any person, but to a principle. I certainly did not intend to apply it to Brother McFerrin or Brother Myers. But I am opposed to disguising this matter. I have all confidence in Methodist preachers. They, sir, are the proprietors of this concern. Do an open-handed business with them, and they will give you your profit. When you say you will sell to them at cost, and so much more, I want "cost" to mean, prime cost and profit added to cover expenses of Agents and others. I have not understood, and you have not, from the beginning, that when the report of your committee here says that the Agent shall sell to the depositories at prime cost, that these things would not be provided for. But we have understood that there is to be no material augmentation of capital from this source, from year to year. Nobody thinks these books are to be sold here without this specific profit; but the augmentation of capital here is to come from another source than that of profit on the sale of books. I think it will be difficult to cover the point of difficulty in the resolution.

A. L. P. Green—If you do this—pass this resolution—you will either compel every Annual Conference to have a depository, or cut them off from any source of profit on the sale of books. Then again, you will compel the Agent to put up the prices, so as to enable the Concern here to live. There is still another difficulty. I do not suppose that these depositories can all sell at the same price. The more distant from the manufactory, the greater will be the prices; and thus when the preachers' orders come in, the prices to them will have to be graduated according to the rates at which the depositories can sell in their respective localities. I think you had better leave the resolution alone—put in an honest man for your Agent, and trust him.

E. H. Myers—The object of the resolution is not to affect the present rate of discount in sales to preachers, but to sell to all others so that they shall not be able to compete with the depositories.

E. Stevenson now asked and obtained leave to withdraw the second resolution—the first resolution having been adopted on the first reading. It is in the following language:

Resolved, That nothing contained in section viii., article ii., on Books and Periodicals, of our forthcoming Discipline, shall be so construed as to authorize any Conference Depository, Agent, or Periodical Editor to publish books for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South—this very important and highly responsible trust being exclusively committed to the General Book Agent, Editor, and Book Committee at Nashville.

MONDAY, May 31.

EDUCATION OF THE MINISTRY.

On motion by B. M. Drake, the Conference now took up the report, No. 1, of the Committee on Education, and it was considered and adopted, item by item, in the form and figure following:

Report of the Committee on Education, No. 1.

The Committee to whom was referred the memorial of the Mississippi Conference on the subject of ministerial education, as a branch of the general question of education coming within the purview of the General Conference of the M. E. Church, South, have discharged their duty to the best of their ability in the circumstances in which they were placed, and are ready to report the result of their deliberations.

1. They find the subject embarrassed with grave difficulties, arising from conflicting views amongst many judicious and influential ministers in our Church, as to the necessity, the nature and the degree of ministerial education. This diversity of opinion prevails to so great an extent as to render any measure of concurrence almost hopeless. What enhances these difficulties is the fact that they are either associated with or founded upon the conviction, that a literary education, however modified, is not indispensable to the ministerial function, either as enjoined in the Scriptures or assumed in the economy and usages of our Church.—Again, those who admit the importance and even the necessity of the highest literary attainments in the ministry, provided they are sanctified, differ materially as to the time at which they should be acquired, and the means by which they should be imparted. These aspects of the subject the sub-committee would not undertake to argue at present, because the discussion of them would be necessarily protracted, and because no conclusion of theirs would be likely to secure harmony of opinion or of effort.

2. Of one fact we are fully persuaded, and one of no little significance: the wide-spread demand amongst all our churches for a higher degree of intellectual cultivation in those who minister at their altars than was made in the earlier years of our history. We do not mean that such a degree of cultivation is merely approved and admired, for such it is and must necessarily be; but we mean that in the judgment of our communities it has come to be an exaction—an exaction so deep and controlling that it cannot be waived. It must be met in some form or another. The cry, we might say the clamor, of our people both in town and country is, Send us enlightened, well-informed men, who by their superior intelligence, as well as by their sincere piety, can attract, instruct, and hold our congregations; who can maintain their ground in the estimation of the public against the influence of rival denominations; and who can entrench themselves in the respect and affection of the rising generations. Whatever may be the conflicting theories current amongst us, this is the issue which the times in which we live have made, and which the Church is compelled by her dearest interests to consider. What avails it to say that our fathers were not educated; that we ourselves were not educated; that our Church has prospered without any requisition on the subject? The answer is sufficient, that in the last fifty years the whole intellectual status of society has undergone a revolution, by the diffusion of education, and partly by the very agencies which we as a Church have put into operation. We require, therefore, a new adaptation to the new emergencies of our history; and that adaptation does not involve a compromise of any vital element of our creed or of our economy. As the committee view it, that adaptation may be effected in perfect accordance with both. The only valid objection to this position is, that the progress of education amongst the population of our country, which has just been adduced as an argument for ministerial improvement, carries its own remedy with it; and that educated ministers will always bear a suitable proportion to the admitted condition of society. To this objection the committee would briefly reply, first, that the advance of education has not penetrated all those classes from which many of our ministers come, and many, too, of the most talented by nature; secondly, that the ministers of religion being, by their office, teachers, should, for the most part, be somewhat in advance of their hearers, so as to impart solid instruction to the greatest number in any place in which their services may be required by the wants of the Church.

3. In meeting this reasonable and inexorable demand, the committee do not believe that the Church is prepared to adopt or to establish theological institutions, nor do they think that such institutions are necessary; nor do they suppose that any real infraction of our cherished system is demanded. All that they would urge as at present practicable or desirable, is the expansion and improvement of our existing platform. The wise accomplishment of this end would constitute a happy adjustment between our ecclesiastical principles and our actual necessities. In accordance with them, we propose—

1. An incipient measure, which, properly guarded, could not fail to be in the highest degree salutary; that is, that candidates for admission into the traveling connection should, previously to admission, be required, in their examination before a committee of an Annual Conference, to give satisfactory evidence of a knowledge of the ordinary branches of an English education. This requisition is so reasonable, in the present state of society, so perfectly attainable, and so indispensably necessary, that it appears to us not to admit of a doubt. It is proper in itself, and it accords substantially with our generally received plan of ministerial examination.

We propose, 2, that the course of study be revised, so as to elevate the standard of instruction beyond its present requirements. We need different and better text-books in many instances, corresponding with the advancement of knowledge, and the dignity and weight of the office of a presbyter in the Church of God.

We propose, 3, that each Conference appoint, from amongst its members, at its own option, a faculty or board of examiners, who shall be distributed into five classes, who shall more or less permanently fill their several offices under the sanction of their respective Conferences; thus the better qualifying themselves for their duties, and adopting the best methods of examination.

We propose, 4, that no candidate shall be approved, by vote before his Conference, until he pass a satisfactory examination on the required subjects, unless he be able to assign a valid excuse.

We propose, 5, that there be in all the colleges and universities under our care, a chair of Biblical Literature, accessible to all students without exception as a department of general education, in which the Bible, with collateral branches, shall be the text-book. This arrangement would afford to all students a long-neglected part of a complete education, and especially to those who feel it to be their duty to preach, superior facilities for entering upon the work of the ministry.

In conclusion, the committee would embody the substance of their deliberations in the following resolutions, viz:

1. That the present vastly improved intellectual condition of society calls for at least a corresponding intellectual cultivation in the ministry of our Church.

2. That we do not deem the establishment of theological schools necessary to supply this demand.

3. That this imperative demand may and should be promptly met by adopting, in accordance with our existing economy, the means hereinafter mentioned, or others similar to them:

(1.) All applicants for license to preach shall, before the Quarterly Conference, be strictly examined, not only as to doctrine and discipline as expressed in chap. ii., sec. 4, paragraph 4, but also according to directions contained under question 4, as aforesaid.

(2.) All candidates for orders in the local ministry shall, before receiving such orders, give to the Quarterly Conference satisfactory evidence of an acquaintance with those subjects which shall be prescribed.

(3.) All candidates for admission on trial into the traveling connection shall, in addition to their examination before the Quarterly Conference as required by the present form of Discipline, be examined by a committee of the Annual Conference on the ordinary branches of an English education, of their acquaintance with which they shall give satisfactory evidence previously to admission.

(4.) There shall be in each Annual Conference a Board of Examiners, selected by the Conference, who shall continue at least four years, who shall be distributed into five classes, and who shall be required deliberately and faithfully to discharge their duties.

(5.) In the opinion of the committee, the present course of study for deacons' and elders' orders should be immediately revised so as to elevate the standard for graduation to these orders.

4. In Discipline, chapter ii., section 8, page 63, in answer 2, after the words, "satisfactory evidence to the Conference," insert, "after careful examination by a standing committee appointed by the Conference, who shall hold their office four years."

In chapter ii., section 4 page 45, answer 4, close of answer, add, "has given satisfactory evidence of his knowledge of the ordinary branches of an English education."

Respectfully submitted:

B. M. Drake, Chairman.

THE QUARTERLY REVIEW.

D. R. McAnally—There are two things of importance demanding the consideration of the Conference, and to them I respectfully ask attention. One is simply this: the Quarterly Review costs just one dollar per copy to the publisher, if he publish fifteen hundred copies.—After a conversation with the editor and others, we are satisfied that it can be continued, and will be sustained, if you take off the restriction you have put upon the Agent, in demanding that it shall be published at $3, and permit it to be published at $2, and require all the preachers to pay for it.

The other matter is the reading of the Pastoral Address we have requested the Bishops to prepare. A part of that address will be important to some of us in some parts of the work to which we shall be assigned, and we want those parts read and sanctioned by the Conference at the earliest practicable hour.

W. A. Smith—What do you propose, Bro. McAnally?

D. R. McAnally—I ask some brother who voted in the affirmative, to move a reconsideration of the vote by which you made the price of the Review $3.

S. J. Davies—I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to, and the question recurred on the establishment of the price.

D. R. McAnally—I move now that it be published at Nashville, at $2 a year; and that preachers, as well as others, be required to pay for it.

L. M. Lee—If we adopt this now, does it remove all restriction that it shall not be published until money enough is paid in hand to justify the work?

D. R. McAnally—We will let that remain.

R. T. Heflin—I move to amend the motion, so as to leave the price to be established at the discretion of the Agent. Let him graduate and govern the price according to the subscription.

The amendment was rejected.

J. B. McFerrin—If, as I understand, the price is to be put at $2, provided always it is to be paid in cash, and provided, also, that there is a sufficient subscription to justify it, then I have no objection. And let me say this to the brethren—that from October to the first of January next, within those three months most of the Conferences meet and if the brethren would exert themselves, I think it very probable they can secure subscribers enough to secure the publication.

E. Stevenson—I believe if all would take hold in good earnest, we might bring up the subscription before the first of January.

D. S. Doggett—I move that we all rally to the support of the Review.

Voices—Amen.

The motion of D. R. McAnally was now adopted.

J. B. McFerrin—Mr. President, is it understood that the Book Agent is not to be in any way, directly or indirectly, responsible for any of the debts, past or future, of the weekly papers that have been set off?

The Chair—He is not to be held responsible.

D. R. McAnally—I now respectfully ask for the reading of that part of the Pastoral Address of the Bishops to which I have referred.

On motion by R. Alexander, it was ordered that when the Conference adjourn, it shall be to meet again at 8 o'clock to-night.

EXAMINATIONS ON TRIAL FOR THE TRAVELLING CONNECTION.

Bishop Soule—Mr. President, there is one subject—the examination of candidates for admission on trial into the Travelling Connection, which has been brought forward, I think, by the committee on Itinerancy, which I have regarded as of great importance to the Conference and the Church—one single item. I should be exceedingly glad if that item could be brought forward. I should suppose it would not take long to dispose of it.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee on Itineranoy, to whom was referred the duty of inquiring into the expediency of so altering the Disciplino, section viii., pp. 61-65, as to require the examination of candidates for admission on trial into the Travelling Connection, instead of, as now, when receiving them into full connection, having duly considered the anbject, and believing the change to be desirable, both for the proprieties of the case, and for the sake of its influence in forming the habits and fixing the character of our junior ministers, beg leave to recommend the following alterations of the Discipline for the accomplishment of this object:

1. To amend sec. iii., pp. 39, 40, so as to read: "All the travelling preachers who are in full connection, those who are to be received and continued on trial, and to be received into full connection."

2. To strike out from Ques. 3, p. 64, the words "into full connection," and insert in their place the words, "on trial."

3. To make the third question and answer, thus altered, the second question and answer of the section.

4. That the phraseology of the Discipline in other places, if there be any requiring to be changed, be conformed to this alteration and arrangement of the section.

They furthermore recommend to your body the adoption of the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, That the foregoing alterations and amendments of the Discipline be and the same are hereby adopted.

2. Resolved, That the Committee on Revisals be instructed to incorporate the above-mentioned changes into the Discipline, in their appropriate place, and to mark and number them so as preserve harmony of arrangement, and to secure the end contemplated by the proposed change.

3. Resolved, That the Committee on Revisals be instructed to inquire whether any, and if any, what form is necessary to be observed in receiving preachers into full connection, and if they deem a form to be necessary, that they provide one suitable for the occasion.

L. M. Lee—I propose to strike out the last resolution. The object of the report is to change the present and past practice of the Church, in the matter of receiving young men into the Traveling Connection. Instead of giving them the examination which takes place now when they are received into full connection, the report requires that examination to take place at the time when they are received on trial into the Traveling Connection. The reasons for this change are the following:

First. It restores this examination to its original place, and the purpose for which it was designed. It is the resurrection of an original practice of the Church, and a bringing of the examination back to the period when it was designed to take place.

The second reason for the change is derived from the nature of the examination itself.—Whoever studies the questions that are asked of young men when they are to be received into full connection, will hardly fail to see that they are inappropriate at that period, and that they are particularly appropriate at the commencement of ministerial life.

In the third place, it is important that the change shall be made on account of its influence with respect to the formation of ministerial character. Our junior ministers are sent out to preach without an examination of this kind, and during their two years of trial, their habits are formed—and these may be very bad habits—fatal as it respects their future usefulness in the ministry. It seems to me that a very little reflection might satisfy every one of us, that if this examination takes place when these young men are received on trial into the Traveling Connection, they will receive such impressions of ministerial character, of ministerial duty, and of the obligations of study and of conformity of their entire life to the requirements of the ministerial office, that cannot fail to influence them, and lead them into what may be the good and right way to them.

In the last place, I commend this change from a consideration of the probable effect it will have on the candidates themselves, as well as upon the Quarterly Conferences recommending young men to be received. We all know these bodies are not as particular as they might be, if they did not think they could transfer the responsibility from themselves to the Annual Conferences. And still further, if they find out that the young men they recommend must undergo an examination as to their knowledge of the English language, they will certainly be more particular; and the failure of a young man from any given circuit, would make that circuit, for all time to come, a hundred per cent. worse as to the young men they recommend.

Mr. President, I have thought for years on this subject. It was a favorite proposition with me four years ago, and I intended to bring it forward at the last General Conference, but was hindered by indisposition. I still regard it as one of the best means for the improvement of our young men, and the elevation of the standard of ministerial qualification. But I know Bishop Soule wishes to be heard on this subject.

Bishop Soule took the floor, endorsed the views of Dr. Lee, and went a little into the history of Methodism to show that this course of examination was originally provided for preachers when they are admitted on trial.

F. G. Ferguson said this report would be more appropriately headed, "A bill for the cutting off of supplies," and proceeded to speak of the embarrassments of young preachers as they are beginning to be moved by the Holy Ghost to preach the gospel, and to show that the passage of the bill would be to multiply these "lets and hindrances" to such a degree that many would feel themselves estopped at the very threshold. He objected to requiring the candidate to go to the Annual Conference and appear before the Bishop. The hesitation about being received would increase the embarrassment, which he desired to avoid, and which had induced him uniformly to advise young men to stay at home, until they knew whether they were received. The rule would cut off supplies, and operate against the injunction to pray to the Lord of the harvest to send forth more laborers. Under such a rule one-half of the members of this body would not have been here—though such a thing might have been better for the Church. Did the fathers adopt the present rule without sufficient reason? It had been blessed of God, and he held that the Conference ought to stick closely to that in the observance of which the Methodist Church had been abundantly successful.

Lovick Pierce—It is my settled conviction that, both in regard to receiving members into the Church and men into the ministry, we, as a people, have committed many errors. It is my conviction that we do not impress our young men deeply enough at the outset with what they are about to undertake; and I am, therefore, in favor of adopting this report. It might have soared me off, in 1804, when I was admitted. But however right it might have been once to call and receive men into the Annual Conferences, and send them all unprepared into the work, it is not so now, in my judgment. When we send out men hereafter, let it be done in such a manner as to impart the deepest impression that to be a minister of the gospel is to stand in a most solemn and responsible position.

R. T. Heflin—I think it important that, before these vows are taken, a man should know what he is about.

S. P. Richardson demanded the previous question, which was sustained; and then, the last resolution being stricken out, the report was adopted.

REPORT NO. 1, FROM REVISALS COMMITTEE.

The Chair now directed the reading of the following report, which was considered and adopted in parts:

1. On the prayer of the Quarterly Conference of King and Queen Circuit, Virginia, (marked 1,) the committee recommend the alteration of the Discipline, Part I., chap. ii., sec. vii., Q. 2, Ans. 13, so as to read as follows:

At each Quarterly Conference the preacher in charge shall read the names of those that are exonded therefrom; and shall give a statement of the general condition of his station, circuit or mission.

2. The committee do not recommend the striking out the word, "expressly," on p. 126, line ...

3. The resolution from Prattville, Ala., (marked 4,) is respectfully returned, with the request that it be transferred to the Committee on Itinerancy.

4. The petition from Prattville, Ala., (marked 5,) is respectfully returned, with the request that it be transferred to the Committee on Temperance.

5. The committee recommend that no change be made in the Discipline, on p. 133, 4th line, as prayed for by N. W. Burks and C. K. ..., shall, (marked 6.)

6. The resolution of C. D. Oliver and G. W. Carter, (marked 7,) is respectfully returned, with the request that it be transferred to the Committee on Sunday-schools.

THE CLASSES.

The Chair now directed the reading and consideration of that part of the Report, No. ..., the Committee on Revisals, which was laid on the table this morning upon the motion of C. Deems.

After an ineffectual effort to amend, by Smith, of the Virginia Conference, it was adopted in the following terms:

Instead of chapter iii., section ii., "Of ... Meetings and Love-Feasts, page 97, insert the following:

Of the Classes.

Ques. 1. How shall the classes be constituted?

Ans. Let them be organized by the preacher in charge; and, whenever it is practicable, let him so distribute the membership under the pastoral care that there may be about ... persons in every class, one of whom shall be the leader.

Ques. 2. How shall the class-meeting be conducted?

Ans. Let the leaders address the members individually, inquiring how their souls prosper, giving them an opportunity to speak, and advising, reproving, comforting, and exhorting as occasion may require. Let the exercise begin and end with singing and prayer, and let them not usually occupy more than about an hour.

Ques. 3. How often shall the classes meet?

Ans. Once a week, wherever practicable.

Ques. 4. What are the regulations concerning the leaders?

Ans. 1. Let them be men of sound judgment and truly devoted to God.

2. Let them be appointed by the preacher in charge.

3. Let every one of them be carefully examined by the preacher in charge, at least once a quarter, concerning his method of leading his class.

4. Let them frequently lead each other's classes.

5. Let them meet the ministers and stewards once a week, wherever practicable, to report the names of any who may be sick or need ..., of any who may neglect their duty, or who walk disorderly and will not be reproved.

6. Let improper leaders be removed from office—provided that no leader shall be removed except by the preacher in charge.

FIFTH REPORT OF THE REVISALS COMMITTEE.

The chair now directed the reading of the Fifth Report of the committee on Revisals, and the same was considered and adopted, as follows, item by item, the second item having been laid on the table by the opposition of E. Pitts, D. B. Nicholson, J. B. McFerrin, T. Dorman, and others:

1. In regard to the papers presented by J. Rosser and G. W. Carter, (marked 36,) it will be seen that most of the points submitted have been provided for in other recommendations of this committee, and that the others would involve such changes in our reports already made and probably such labor in carrying them in the practical working of our system, that we respectfully decline recommending them to the Conference.

3. On the paper marked 24, and signed by Messrs. Kelley, Redford, and Langhorne, the committee recommended the following ... cipline, page 256, to the 8th section add the following paragraph:

"13. The editors elected from time to time by the General Conference, shall exclude from the periodicals all anonymous matter reflecting injuriously upon the character of individuals, all editorial and other articles calculated to destroy or weaken the confidence of the people in the doctrines or institutions of our Church."

4. All the points of importance in papers signed by J. Hamilton and A. H. Mitchell, have been provided for in recommendations of preceding reports.

A. L. P. GREEN, Chair.

The Conference then, according to previous order, took a recess till eight o'clock P. M.

Benediction by the Chair.

EVENING SESSION.

Bishop Paine took the chair, and called the Conference to order at 8 o'clock. Religious services by M. J. Blackwell.

The journal of the afternoon was read and authenticated.

CENTRAL UNIVERSITY CHARTER.

S. Watson submitted a preamble and resolution, (signed also by T. O. Summers,) which, under a suspension of the rule, were considered and adopted, as follows:

Whereas, The charter of the Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church was obtained from the Legislature of the State of Tennessee, has been presented to this Conference for its reception; and whereas, this Conference has no organized existence except during its sessions, which occur but once in four years, which is too seldom for the proper management of said institution, and it is therefore expedient that this Conference receive said charter—

Resolved, That the Tennessee Annual Conference at its next session, take into consideration the propriety of receiving said institution under its care and management, and that any other Annual Conference that may choose to do so, join the Tennessee Conference in this matter, and that measures be taken to have the charter so changed as to conform it to such an arrangement.

GENERAL CONFERENCE JOURNAL—DISCIPLINE.

On motion by T. W. Dorman, seconded by J. J. Hutchinson, it was Resolved, That the Book Agent and Book Editor be and hereby are instructed to publish, as soon as convenient, the Journal of this General Conference, and an edition of the Discipline, conformed to the alterations made during the present session.

SECRETARY FOR THE SUNDAY SCHOOL SOCIETY.

Bishop Pierce being now called to the chair, ...ected the reading and consideration of the ...orts of the majority and minority of the ...ding committee on Sunday schools—the ...er against the appointment of an Agent, ...recommending ministerial inquiry into the ...ject of Sunday schools; and the latter in ...of the appointment of an Agent, etc.

...minority report was laid on the table; ...the question reourred on the adoption of ...first resolution, reported by the majority of ...committee, which was again read by the ...clary. It is as follows:

...That we do not recommend the appointment ...nday school Agent.

...G. Gillespie proposed to amend, by striking ...e word "not," in the first line.

...W. D. Harris—I move to lay that motion ...e table.

...he motion was agreed to; and the question ...ured on the adoption of the resolution.

...D. Huston—Mr. President, the hour is late; ...y anxiety to have the General Conference ...ething for the Sunday school cause be- ...the session closes is more than a match for ...unwillingness to be voted a bore. And I ...beseech the Conference to pause before ...give another such vote as the one they ...just cast.

...w, sir, we have to publish the Visitor, and ...ook Agent cannot be taxed with its sup- ...without dangerous embarrassment. The ...ey to sustain it is not within his reach. It ...derstood that the Sunday school Advocate ...heavy tax upon the Northern Book Con- ... The expense of publishing such a paper ...ch a price is necessarily great; and the ...ss the circulation, the greater the loss. If ...have a child's paper, we are obliged to com- ...with similar publications. Some of our ..., mistaking their own interests, have ...plained because the Agents have illustrated ...Visitor with old cuts, which cost comparatively little, instead of original pictures, such ...are used by the Sunday school Advocate—pictures made expressly for that work—drawn ...engraved by the very best artists in the ...ntry. We cannot afford to do that. We ...had sufficient evidence that our people, ...all their admitted patriotism, will not pay ...e that would defray such expense. It is ...n to the Book Agents, to Drs. Summers, ...erin, Green, and to myself, that it is quite ...of the power of the Publishing House to ...e such a drain upon its means; and that, ...s some other arrangement be made, the ...tion will bring the Publishing House in debt; ...it will be supplanted by the cheaper and ...re highly embellished papers for children ...blished at the North. It was never designed ...support itself. No similar publication is ...supporting; and we need the agent asked ...to raise the means of making good to the ...ublishers the difference between the proceeds ...d the expenses of the Visitor.

...We need means not only to sustain the Visi- ...but to cheapen all our Sunday school lite- ...ure, and to place it within convenient reach ...those who need it. The Western Virginia ...legates tell us that it cost, if I recollect correctly, $3 to get $3 50 worth of Sunday school ...ks to their country. Now, if we had but ...means of making deposits of books with ..., we could take advantage of times when ...ights are low, and send them all the books ...y would need for a year, at a cost of transportation scarcely exceeding that of the package alluded to. We want a General Agent, ...o shall raise the means of placing deposi- ...prices of our books in every Conference, if ...ed be.

But, sir, I have heard it hinted that this will ...olve a new tax upon the church, which our ...mbers will not bear. Mr. President, the laity ...ve been here, rebuking us for our want of ...ith in them. But the other day, they came ...to this hall, from South Carolina, from Tennessee, from Georgia, from Alabama—grand old ...Alabama, may her beautiful name be propbetic ...her people's rest in heaven—they came even ...your desk, sir; and did you hear what they ...d? They told us to "ask largely." They ...ged permission to endow our Publishing ...use in the sum of half a million. We shrank ...m the splendid offer, proposing, instead, ...00,000; and they, persisting, compromised on ...00,000. These were, sir, as you know, men ...wealth and character, from four of the most ...werful States in the South.

We all regard the Sunday school cause, as ...t to the preaching of the gospel, the greatest ...terprise of the church. Let us have a first- ...e man to take charge of it. Give him time ...collect his materials, to arrange his appeal, ...make his argument together, to think and ...y over his great theme till his head is clear ...d his heart on fire, and then let him go. Let ...m go and set the church on fire. He will not ...ly produce the funds you need, but also as- ...t the pastors in arranging our Sunday school ...erations into one great harmonious connectional scheme. Nay, he himself will be in ...a sense a connectional bond between the ...ildren of various sections of the church. ...e need such a bond; not for the old men— ...ey are bound together—but for the children ...the church: we want Young Israel to grow ...a unit.

Sir, it was with inexpressible pride that I ...t here the other day with two members of this ...dy, one on either side, who sat with me in ...e same class in Sunday school, twenty years ...go. And, sir, if you will pardon the allusion, ...at same Sunday school class furnished the ...urch with, I believe, thirteen ministers of the ...spel, twelve of whom, I will answer for it, ...ere men of mark.

The expense of employing the Agent asked ...r has been deprecated. The Publishing ...ouse will not pay it. One year ago, sir, Dr. ...mmers and myself met you at Memphis for ...e purpose of holding an Anniversary. The ...ole trip cost less than $90, while the pro- ...eeds were $1100. Now, suppose we had taken ...untsville, Decatur, Tuscumbia, and the other ...owns in our way, as the contemplated Agent ...ould have done, would we not have brought ...ome $3000? The General Agent will support ...himself. There is not upon this floor a man of ...financial discernment who would not take the ...gency at a salary of three per cent. upon his ...collections.

Give us this officer, we beseech you: let him ...o forth among our people, awakening them ...pon this subject, setting the church to work, ...collecting funds from the rich wherewith to ...supply the wants of the destitute, procuring ...the establishment of Sunday schools in the ...neglected places—among the mountains and ...swamps—and by and by, in God's good time, ...the light of life will shine with focal power ...upon the darkest corner of our land.

D. S. Doggett—I should like for the last testimony I offer in this General Conference to be in favor of the Sunday school cause, and I pass immediately to the resolution before us.

That was a noble speech of brother Huston. The Sabbath school cause is the cause of the church itself; and I venture to say that fifty years hence, if there be an agent demanded for any thing, it will be for the Sunday school cause. It is the cause of the rising millions of America; and how much of their future now hangs upon our determination! We want here an established nucleus of influence—a well-directed lever of power. We are certainly standing in the wrong direction just now, induced because the closing hour of the session is at hand. But we ought not to close without sending out this Agent, to wield an influence that shall bind us together upon this subject.

But, sir, I will not occupy the time for action. I beg the brethren to give us a Sabbath school influence that shall insure the circulation of our Sabbath school papers, books, and tracts all over this country for the four years to come.

G. W. D. Harris—It is but seldom that I presume to tax the attention of a body so large and grave as that now surrounding me, and upon no ordinary occasion would I do it. But, as I took it upon myself to move to place the motion last before us on the table, I feel called upon to say a few things.

Brethren become eloquent and impressive in their remarks upon the subject of Sunday schools. But surely upon that question there is no controversy. There is no difference of opinion amongst those ministers as to the importance of Sunday schools, and their bearing upon the country. The question narrows itself down to this single point—the best means of sustaining Sunday schools, and of making them prosperous and a blessing to the country. The speakers last up see no practical way of doing this but by the appointment of an official, whom they are pleased to call a General Agent. Well, sir, if you please, it is my opinion this agency would be entirely too general to be useful. Look at the vastness of the field over which he has to operate. Traveling through twenty Conferences, alike demanding his attentions, he would not leave a trace behind him. His visits would be too few and far between to achieve much.

Mr. President, I think the Sunday school cause is one that occupies the church—it enters into our economy. There is not a Conference held in all our borders, but the question comes up with all gravity. What has been done for the furtherance of this great work? And now we want to be permitted to increase our means of operation, so that, instead of sending out one, we may send out two thousand laborers into this field. But, sir, if you send out this single Sunday school Agent, you will discourage and blight, to a very great extent, the influence of these two thousand preachers. There is something in human nature that will excuse them from the performance of an act confided to other hands. But if no agent be appointed, the very vastness of the enterprise will bring them to the rescue.

The brother (Dr. Doggett) says we have been hurried into the consideration of this report.—But was not the venerable Dr. Pierce on the Committee reporting? Had they not time to deliberate? Have they not glanced over the whole matter? Is their perception defective? I think, myself, the report is well matured—a sensible, judicious bill—and that it will be fully sustained by the final action of this body.

I think, sir, we could advance the cause but little by this appointment of a single Agent. Rather let us go forward as we are wont to do, and do the whole of our work as Methodist preachers.

Lovick Pierce—In as far as the reference to myself is concerned, I take the opportunity to say, that when this subject was discussed before the Committee on Sunday-schools, but a small majority was in favor of this report. We came in with a majority report, and, so far as I was concerned, I was not strongly in favor of it. But since that report has been laid on your table, sir, I have heard enough to satisfy me, that our failure or refusal now to send out a Sunday-school Agent would be one of the most unfortunate of the acts of this body.

The argument against this agency is worth nothing. It is utterly futile. The consideration that this General Agent will be too general, will but invigorate and strengthen the hands of those 2000 subordinate agents; and whilst they will be gleaning here and there, from time to time, this General Agent will be met by a generously inclined people, who will pour their thousands upon thousands into your treasury, to support and strengthen your system. I know how men are apt to wait; but where is the circuit preacher in this land who will rest upon his oars for a General Agent to come along, because his duties cannot be discharged by the preacher on the circuit?

Sir, I have attended, successively, eleven General Conferences—and I never expect to be in another—and in view of my experience and observation, I wish what I say now to be deeply engraven in the mind of our immense membership, that, unless you make yourselves a great people through your Sabbath-schools, you have already reached the climax of your strength and your glory in all the older States. It is a very remarkable fact that three-fourths of the people coming into the Church, South, are from the Sunday-school children; and unless we can have books and tracts and papers and agencies, and show forth to the world that we look upon the Sunday-school, not as an incident, but as an immortal attribute of the Church, we shall not deserve to remain a great people.

I have arisen, sir, to move to lay the majority report on your table, to make way for the adoption of the report of the minority. But the subject is with you, brethren. If there is any cause worthy of your attention, certainly the Sabbath-school cause is such a cause; and if I were a young man again, and of sufficient qualifications to enter upon the work of this agency, I would rather take it—as a means affording a proper opportunity to walk into the public mind for the greatest good to men—I would rather have it than any other office you could give me. I wish it distinctly understood that I am friendly to the appointment of this General Agent.

The debate was continued on the same side by A. L. P. Green, C. C. Gillespie, and J. B. McFerrin; whereupon—

E. H. Myers proposed the following by way of substitute for the first resolution:

Resolved, That it is deemed essential to the advancement of the Sabbath-school cause, that there should be a Corresponding Secretary for the Sunday-school Society, to travel through the Conferences to encourage the formation of Sunday-schools, and to take up collections for the cheapening and distribution of Sunday-school literature.

The substitute was agreed to.

The second resolution reported by the majority of the committee was then read by the Secretary, to the following effect:

Resolved, That we do recommend the adoption of some scheme of inquiry into the attention paid to the Sunday-school cause by each and every pastor in all the Annual Conferences, as an indispensable condition of ministerial faithfulness.

On motion by E. H. Myers, this last resolution was laid on the table; and then the report of the majority of the Committee on Sunday-schools, as thus amended, was adopted.

The Conference proceeded to the election of the Corresponding Secretary of the Sunday-school Society. On the first ballot Charles Taylor received 44 votes, L. M. Lee 26, S. D. Baldwin 18, E. C. Slater 17, E. M. Marvin 2, J. Hamilton 1; total 108—no election. The second balloting gave 108 votes; of which C. Taylor received 51, L. M. Lee 34, P. P. Neely 12, S. D. Baldwin 11—no election. The third balloting gave 109 votes; of which C. Taylor received 55, L. M. Lee 42, P. P. Neely 9, S. D. Baldwin 3. The chair accordingly pronounced C. Taylor duly elected Corresponding Secretary of the Sunday-school Society.

W. W. Bennett—The report of the minority of the committee on Sunday-schools provided for the support of this Secretary from the collections he might make. I suppose if no action is taken, he will come upon the Book Concern for his support.

The Chair—He will come upon the Society.

The following resolutions were then offered, read, and adpoted:

Resolved, That the Managers of the Sunday-school Society be instructed to make provision for the support of the Corresponding Secretary out of the collections for the Society.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, JULY 3, 1858.

Conference Proceedings.—These are nearly finished in the present issue. They have been rather lengthy, but our readers have doubtless found them of interest. In future we shall give a more varied spread, and matters of more general interest. Our new Editor, brother Gillespie, is not yet at his post, but we hope he may be here in a few days.

DEATH OF REV. THOS. STRINGFIELD.

The Nashville Advocate brings the following mournful news. To us it is as unexpected as it is sad. But the righteous hath hope in his death. The deceased lived for a dying hour, and his reward is sure. God help the many bereaved ones who are left to mourn.

Rev. T. K. Munsey, in a letter received a few days since, communicates the sad intelligence that Rev. Thomas Stringfield, of the Holston Conference, died at his residence, at Strawberry Plains, on the 12th inst. Brother Stringfield was at the late General Conference in this city, looking remarkably fresh, and apparently enjoying good health. He remained till the Conference adjourned; and though not a member of that body took much interest in its proceedings. He died of pneumonia, and was buried on Monday, the 14th; a vast crowd of sympathizing friends mingling their tears and sorrows with the bereft family.

Mr. Stringfield had long served the church, and was extensively and favorably known in the Southwest. He was a man of talents, and long occupied a prominent position in the church. He was for four years editor of this paper, then styled the South-western Christian Advocate. He wielded a strong pen, and was a man of sound heart.

A more extensive sketch will be written of our beloved brother, which will be prepared by some one who knew him long and intimately. As our predecessor, we here take pleasure in bearing testimony to the character and fidelity of one who now rests from his labors, and whose works follow him. We tender to his family our heartfelt sympathies.

REV. L. M. LEE, D. D.

The able editor of the Richmond Christian Advocate, upon his return from the General Conference, makes the following brief but handsome allusion to the change in his relation to the paper he has so long conducted with ability:

"The readers of the Advocate are aware of the change in its Editorship; and we hope they will find as much satisfaction in the new Editor, as we do in transferring its management to other hands, and retiring from its cares and burdens to the less public and more quiet pursuits of the pastoral office. The change in the Editorship, however, will not take place immediately. So long a residence as we have had in Richmond has created interests and relations that cannot be broken up suddenly, and will require some months to close safely and satisfactorily. Under these circumstances, the Editor elect very generously agreed to postpone his entrance upon his new official duties until such time as we can complete our arrangements to leave the city, and transfer the pen and scissors to his industrious hands. He can also, in the meantime, the more satisfactorily settle the affairs of his district. The arrangement thus agreed to has a conditional limit; but may, with consent of parties, and for mutual advantage, be extended to the close of the Conference year. We are his debtor for the courtesy and kindness of this arrangement. For the present, then, we remain at our old post; and for a few months, at least, will have the pleasure of holding converse with the readers of the Advocate, for whom, through so many years, we have been the literary and moral caterer.

"It will not be out of place to say, and it will serve to satisfy inquiring friends, that we voluntarily declined a re-nomination, in a meeting of our co-delegates, to the Editorship of this paper. When the time comes, we shall take our position in the itinerant ranks with a profound pleasure."

Dr. Lee has won for himself the reputation of a strong writer and an able journalist. May he, in returning to the active pastoral work, find an effectual door open for great usefulness in the Church of God!

Plan for the Support of the Bishops.

ADOPTED MAY 28TH.

1st. The allowance of the Bishops shall be estimated by the Committee on Episcopacy, and they shall divide the amount between the Annual Conferences and the Missionary Society, as herein provided.

2d. The amount necessary for the support of the Bishops shall be divided between the Annual Conferences and the Missionary Society as follows: The Annual Conferences shall pay seventy per cent. of the whole amount, and the Missionary Society shall pay thirty per cent. of the whole amount.

3d. Let seventy per cent. of the whole amount be divided among the Annual Conferences, according to their ability to pay; provided, that no account shall be taken of the Pacific and the Mission Conferences.

4th. The Book Agent shall be authorized to draw on the Chairman of the Board of Stewards of the Annual Conferences for its annual apportionment, which shall be paid during the session of the Annual Conference.

5th. The Annual Conferences shall be allowed to adopt their own plan for raising said fund; but should no special plan be adopted for the raising of said fund, in that case the chairman of the Board of Stewards of the Annual Conference shall levy a per cent. on the Conference funds sufficient to pay the draft of the Book Agent.

6th. The Bishops shall divide 70 per cent. of their annual allowance into four equal instalments, and shall draw for the amount on the Book Agent quarterly.

7th. The Bishops shall divide 30 per cent. of their annual allowance into two equal instalments, and draw for the same semi-annually, on the Treasurer of the Missionary Society.

8th. The Book Agent shall pay the traveling expenses of the Bishops out of the proceeds of the Publishing House, and the Bishops shall be at liberty, where they deem it necessary, to draw for any amount not exceeding one hundred dollars in advance. They shall keep an account current of their traveling expenses, and make an exhibit of the same once a year to the Book Agent.

Health of the City.—The Advocate, as has been its custom in other seasons, will give faithful and reliable reports. Up to this date there have been five cases of yellow fever in the Charity Hospital. Three of these were fatal. There has been one death in Dr. Stone's Hospital from the same disease. There are no new cases in the Hospitals, and we hear of none in private practice. The fact that the fever does not spread favors the hope that we shall have no epidemic. Our readers can rely upon early and correct information. For the last four days we have had no rain. The weather is pleasant, and wholesome.

NEW ORLEANS DEPOSITORY.

We take pleasure in announcing to the public that the establishment of the Methodist Book Depository in New Orleans begins to assume the appearance of a tangible reality.—The building is secured: the Trustees have purchased, and the Depository is now permanently located at, 112 Camp street.

To enable the Trustees to meet the terms of their contract and make payments on the house as they fall due, it is necessary that our friends who have subscribed to the Depository fund make as speedy payments as possible.

Let us have your earliest remittances through your merchants here, or remit to me direct.

HOME CIRCLE.

This very attractive and deservedly popular periodical is published monthly by Stevenson & Owen, Ag'ts, Nashville, Tenn., L. D. Huston, D. D., Editor, at $2 per annum, strictly in advance. Each number contains 64 pages royal octavo, embellished with one or more beautiful steel-plate engravings. The matter is mainly original, and of the most important and interesting character.

To ministers of the gospel, and all others who may be disposed to act as agents in procuring subscribers, a discount of 20 per cent. will be allowed on the subscription price.

As the patronage of this admirable issue has not yet been sufficient to meet the cost of its publication, it is therefore respectfully proposed that a prompt, energetic, and continuous effort be made in all the Conferences to increase the list of its patrons to at least twelve thousand!—Come brethren, you have but to submit the claims of the "Circle" to the Church and her friends, and this desirable object will be more than realized at an early day.

BACON—The sales include 22 casks ribbed sides at 7½c. ℔ lb.

LARD—We hear of nothing doing.

MONETARY AND FINANCIAL.

Nothing of material moment has transpired this morning. Business generally is getting to be very dull, but in some departments there is more activity than usual at this period of the season. We are now entering upon the most inactive time of the year, but as the crops are pretty well advanced, business will be resumed so much earlier, especially if the health of the city should continue as good as it now is.

The money market is easier and abundantly supplied. Prime paper, however, is scarce, and is picked up eagerly at 7 @ 8 for four to six months, and 9 @ 10 per cent for eight or twelve months date. In banks the offerings are small.

As before noticed, there is a good demand for stocks, but holders decline selling unless at rates which will fully compensate for the approaching dividends. The Canal Bank has declared its semi-annual of five ℔ cent, and the Southern Bank four ℔ cent. last evening.

There was a tolerably good demand for Exchange to-day. Sales of good sterling were made at 108¾ @ 108¾. Bill of lading drafts will bring 107½@107¾. There were no francs offering. Yesterday's business was done chiefly at 5f. 21½. Sixty day bills on New York are in good request at 1½ @ 1⅝ ℔ cent. discount. Sight ¼. Banks and bankers ½ @ ¾.

We have the gratifying intelligence that at last the waters are beginning to recede in the cotton region, but it will take some time yet before the submerged lands are free. Estimates made by reliable parties put the damage done by the overflow at 200,000 to 250,000 bales. Of the correctness of these opinions we entertain as little doubt as that the various other estimates floating about to the effect that the injury only amounts to 50,000 bales, or exceeds 400,000 are mere bosh.

DR. T. McGOWN'S
SARSAPARILLA
AND IODINE OF POTASI,
THE GREAT
BLOOD PURIFIER AND HEALTH RESTORER,

Prepared from fresh roots, the only kind, worthy the confidence of physicians or the public. Old, imported root is inert and worthless, facts too much overlooked by the profession. According to many, this compound is nearer a PANACEA or CATHOLICON than any and its components have been highly extolled by some of the most distinguished physicians of Europe and America, viz: Sir Wm. Fordyce, Brodie, Lugol, Colodet, Baron, Barthley, Munson, Ricord, Gendrin, Bell, Harrison, Channing, Hildreth, etc.—for the cure of Scrofula or King's Evil, White Swelling, Gout, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Dropsy; diseases of the Kidneys, Liver, Lungs; Skin; Eruptions; Piles, Ulcers, old and obstinate Sores. (McGown's Ointment should also be used, applied locally.) Blotches, Pimples on the face, Ringworm, Tetter, Chronic Sore Eyes, Scald Head, Leprosy, Goiter; Pains of the Bones, Joints; Spinal Complaints Lumbago, Chronic Bronchitis, Tonsilitis, Hooping Cough, Bleeding from the Lungs, Typhoid Pneumonia, Scarlet Fever, Dyspepsia; Dyspepsia, Jaundice; Glandular Tubercles, especially of the neck; Cachexy, Palsy, Tumors, Gonorrhea, Gleet; Enlargements of the Liver, Spleen, Testes; Syphilis, in all its forms. Sir Wm. Fordyce says of Sarsaparilla, when exhibited in constitutions enfeebled and enfeebled by long attacks of the venereal, or by the abuse of mercury, it is the great restorer of the appetite, flesh, color, strength and vigor." Professor Bell, lecturing on the Venereal, says of Iodine of Potash, it is a "powerful, safe and benign remedy, and its salutary operation is aided by preparations of Sarsaparilla."

Female Complaints.—Amenorrhea, Dysmenorrhea, Irregularities, Suppression, Diseases of the Womb, Leucorrhea, Tumors, Enlargement of the Uterus, Scrofula; Chorea, etc.; Impurities of the Blood or System; and all diseases dependent thereon. Makes the skin clear and smooth—an object of interest with the ladies. It should be used in the spring to purify the blood and prevent sickness.

McGOWN'S ESSENCE TAR—A certain cure for Bowel Complaints, as Diarrhea, Dysentery, Flux etc.

McGOWN'S DOGWOOD AND IRON—A permanent cure for Chills, Ague Cake, Night Sweats, Debility, Dyspepsia, etc.

McGOWN'S GOLDEN PECTORAL—For the relief of Coughs, Colds, Consumption, etc.

McGOWN'S STOMACH BITTERS—A pleasant invigorating Tonic, to be used before meals in Dyspepsia, Debility, etc.

McGOWN'S OINTMENT—Never known to fail curing old Sores, Cancers, Chronic Sore Eyes, etc.

The above prepared and sold in Memphis by H. S. HUGHES, Druggist. No. 340 Main st.

THE OLD MAN.

[illegible] leaned on his [illegible] staff,
[illegible] now,
[illegible] on a Sunday morn,
[illegible] he loved to go,
[illegible], and he scarcely knew
[illegible] as he passed him by;
[illegible] and frail was his memory now,
[illegible] he clouded eye.

[illegible] chair at church,
[illegible] preacher's stand,
[illegible] as if in a pleasant dream,
[illegible] words of a better land.

[illegible] fell on his silver locks,
[illegible] white hair turned to gold—
[illegible] a sunlight shone from heaven
[illegible] heart of that pilgrim old.

OBITUARIES.

[illegible] Franklin, La., on the 13th ult., ROBERT, son [illegible] Anderson, aged 14 years and 9 months.

[illegible] notice was just in the springtime of [illegible], with all that was lovely and enchant- [illegible] before him like a beautiful mirror, and [illegible], no doubt, to his mind that the time was [illegible] when his school-boy dreams and ambitions [illegible] would be consummated—when the fond hopes [illegible] had been centered on him by affectionate parents [illegible] sisters and brothers, were about to be realized. [illegible] that was calculated to make life happy and [illegible] strewed his pathway; kind and loving friends [illegible] expanding beauties of his mind and dwelt with [illegible] admiration upon those amiable qualities which [illegible] his life. Possessing a warm and generous [illegible] and magnanimous spirit, a kind and forgiv- [illegible], it was not strange that he enlisted all in his [illegible] esteem. But their fond hopes and joyful antici- [illegible] of the future were all blighted by the cold and [illegible] blighting hand of death, who, without scarcely a mo- [illegible]'s warning, has removed from our side our beloved friend, who had become endeared to us by many pleasant [illegible]. His loss has not only left a void in the family circle which can scarcely ever be filled, but the Sabbath-school will long regret the occurrence of the unfor- [illegible] accident which has deprived her of so valuable a member. His place in the class, which for many years was graced by his presence—ever punctual and faithful to [illegible] now vacant.

[illegible] is no more; but let us indulge the fond and cheering hope that from the almost blameless life that he lived, and having been blessed with kind and religious parents, their impressions, with those received at the Sab- [illegible]-school, made an early and lasting impression upon his mind; and when the cold shades of death settled upon his pillow, and the world, with all its endeared associations, was receding forever from his view, and the "dark valley of the shadow of death" opened before him, that he re- [illegible] his trust in the Savior, who had led him safely and gently throughout the journey of life, and now, at its close, through the all-atoning merits of that Savior, found joy and peace in believing, and was chosen as another bright, immortal spirit, to join that happy band above, who have made their way from the sorrows, trials and temptations of earth, to that "inheritance which is incor- [illegible], undefiled, and that fadeth not away." And there may we not fancy he mingles his voice with cherubim and seraphim in singing the song of "Moses and the Lamb," in streams of heavenly melody around the throne of God, which shall swell into mighty hosannas through a never ending eternity. May He "who tempereth the wind to the shorn lamb," remember in great mercy the family of the deceased in their deep affliction.

"He [illegible] his pure spirit has winged its swift way,
[illegible] mansions of bliss, to the home of his God;
Unfettered and free, it has left this dull earth,
For a brighter, a better, a fitter abode.

L. T. B.

Franklin, Attakapas, La., June 7th, 1858.

Departed this life on Sunday the 6th inst., in the city of Mobile, Mrs LAVINIA S. CARVER, consort of Mr Thomas J. Carver, in the 33d year of her age.

She was a most exemplary wife, deeply devoted to her husband and family, and made it her constant endeavor to make home the center of all earthly happiness. She had been a great sufferer for many years, but bore her bodily infirmities with surprising fortitude, and even with cheerfulness. So much so that her nearest relatives could not realize her dangerous condition until she had almost fallen into the very arms of death. During the closing hours of her life she expressed her perfect confidence in the Savior, and calmly bid farewell to her weeping kindred who had assembled around her dying couch, to soothe and comfort her in her final struggle with the great enemy.

It would be too feeble an expression to say that the loss of her husband is irreparable. The depth of his bereavement cannot be comprehended even by him; but in humble submission to the behests of Him who is "too wise to err and too good to do wrong" he is willing to acquiesce in that voice which says "be still, know that I am God;" and to pray that this afflictive dispensation may sink deep into the chambers of his own soul, and work out these gracious results, so mercifully designed by the disciplinary hand of his Father in Heaven.

Rest on then, dear one! Sleep quietly in the arms of your common mother until at the voice of Jesus, thou shalt rise in immortal vigor—to participate forever, in all the untold blessedness of the Saints' everlasting rest in heaven.

Our dear left an only daughter for whom providence has graciously provided.

Died—April 26th, Mrs. C. LOVE, of Marion county, Ala., a native of N. Carolina, aged 53 years. A short time after her marriage, she became convicted of sin, sought pardon and was happily converted to God, after which she joined the M. E. Church, of which she lived a consistent member until death. In 1841 her husband died, and she was left in charge of nine children, the most of whom were small. During the year 1845 she removed with her children to Marion county, where her probationary scene was closed.

It may be said of this sister that where she was known, she was loved. She seemed to be apprised that her probation was nearly closed several weeks before her death. She stated to her children several times that the long prayed for time had come; that they had all grown up and were professors of religion, and she trusted that they were in their way to Heaven; and that she was now ready to leave the world. The class-leader of the Church near where she resided stated a few days before her death she was present in class and conversed more freely about her future condition than usual. She stated there that her work was nearly finished, and she felt that she was ready, whenever the good Lord saw fit in his providence to call her away from earth.

The life of this sister has been such that we have no doubt, that in the morning of the resurrection she will compose one of the number that have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb, and will shout redeeming grace and dying love throughout endless [illegible].

BENJAMIN B. NORTON.

Died—May 15, 1858, on Deer Creek, Washington county, Miss., MARY MEDORA, infant daughter of John and Sarah Carraway aged four months and two days.

"Life is a span a fleeting hour,
How soon the vapor flies!
Man is a tender transient flower,
That o'er is blooming dies."

God is too wise to err, and too good to be unkind.—May the mercies and goodness which removed little Medora to a better world, lead the bereaved parents to seek her [illegible].

W. B. H.

J. O. WILSON, was a native of Georgia, and died in Sumter county, Ala., May 4, 1858, aged about 48 years. In all the relations of husband, father and neighbor, his life was truly exemplary. He had been a member of the Methodist Church some twenty years, and had been all the time an orderly and devoted follower of Christ. He was very quiet and unobtrusive in his manners, but altogether a tried and reliable man. His last illness was characterised for remarkable submissiveness and resignation to the divine will. The writer visited him and conversed with him freely upon the subject of death. He seemed to possess a most satisfactory consciousness of his acceptance with God and of his readiness to die. His last moments were both peaceful and triumphant. He leaves a wife and children to mourn his death, but they "sorrow not as others which have no hope."

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

LITTLE PILGRIMS.

Close beside the wicket-gate,
Lo! two little children stand,
Each with grave and earnest brow,
And a pilgrim-staff in hand;
Stand to read that promise free,
"Knock, and it shall opened be."

Well they know beyond the gate
That a toilsome journey lies,
Many dangers must be met,
Ere they hope to reach the prize;
But they pray God's grace to win,
And they knock and enter in.

Children, you are pilgrims too,
Traveling onward day by day;
Some towards the wicket-gate,
Others on a broader way.
All forgetful of the prize
Promised to you in the skies.

O! while yet your pilgrimage
Is but just begun below,
Pray that God will guide your feet
In the way that they should go;
So that when life's journey's done,
Gladly shall your prize be won!

Young Reaper.

HOLD UP YOUR HEAD.

Hold up your head, O, man of grief,
Nor longer to the tempest bend,
Or soon or late must come relief—
The coldest, darkest night will end;
Hope in the true heart never dies!
Trust on—the day star yet shall rise!

Conscious of purity and worth,
You may with calm assurance wait
The tardy recompense of earth,
And, e'en should justice come too late
To soothe the spirit's homeward flight,
Still Heaven, at last, the wrong will right.

"ALWAYS SINGING."

While talking with a neighbor, I heard a sweet plaintive voice singing that beautiful hymn:

"Jesus, lover of my soul!"

The child was up stairs; I knew it was a child's voice, from its silvery softness. I listened awhile, and then said:

"That child has a sweet voice."

"Yes, she has," returned my friend. "She is always singing."

Always singing!

Sweet happy child! Bird of angel wing!—Who would not envy them that gushing flood of happiness within thy soul! A soul strong to will and to do; a soul lighted with the smile of Jesus, and anchored on the surest hope; a soul that with more than child's strength shall part the dark waves as it goes down the surging tide of death.

Always singing!

I pass that way again. Summer was here in her fullness, strewing the earth with flowers, and the sky with stars. The same sweet voice was trilling on the air:

"Oh, had I wings like a dove, I would fly!"

This time the little singer was in the yard. I gazed upon the spiritual softness of her features—the sweet eyes like "brown birds flying to the light," the fine expressive lips, the dark silken curls; I felt that she would soon have her wish answered, and "find a refuge in heaven!"

Always singing!

Autumn came; the wild swan was turning toward the south; the leaves were dropping from the trees, and spears of frost glittered among the grass.

A strip of crape fluttered from the shutter of the house where my little singer lived. Her voice was clothed in death, and trembling hands had bound those truant tresses around her white brow.

By the great white throne, by the river of eternal gladness, she was striking her golden harp, and singing in the gushing fullness of imperishable glory!

COPYING A BLOT.

"Mother, who, of all the big boys, should you like for me to pattern after?" asked a little boy who was looking round for a good example.

"Who should you think?" asked his mother; "you know the big boys better than I do."

The little boy thought. Then he said, "There's Dan Parker, he smokes; there's Bill Parker, he swears; Tom Jones, he's got a horrid temper; Sam Jay, he agrees if; Jim Wood, he hates study; Joe Blake, he's cross; Charlie Doe, he goes fishing on Sunday; Gus Tyng, he tells whappers. Mother, there isn't one, that if I copy, I shouldn't copy a blot from."

O, how the ugly blots in our character stand out. "Well," said his mother "there is one perfect pattern." "Who?" asked the boy, eagerly; "I should love to know him." "The Son of God," answered she, "who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth; and who left us an example that we should follow his steps." O, children, God knew you would need a perfect pattern to copy from. You could not copy God, because he is a Spirit; therefore he sent his Son to become a child in this world, to show you the pattern of a heavenly boy; and he wishes you to begin when a child to grow into his likeness. In his character there is no blot to copy. He is pure.—Evangelist.

I WISH I WERE RICH.

"I wish I were rich—I would buy everything," cried Charlie.

"The sun, moon, and stars?" inquired William.

"No; everything that can be had for money."

"That's not happiness," said William.

"Get your hat, Charlie, and come with me to Mr. Morrison's," said his father.

"O I please not, papa, he is such a disagreeable, miserable old man, with his cross looks and gouty foot, bobbling about and grounting."

"I think you would like to live with him!" said his father.

"I, papa? I would rather live down in a coal-pit!"

"With him you would have all that can be bought with money."

"I recant; I see it won't do," said Charlie. "Health cannot be bought with money."

"Nor good temper, nor friendship, nor life," said William.

"Above all," added their papa, "the favor of God cannot be bought with money. Be content with as much of it as God gives, and seek to use it aright."

"The fear of God and sweet content, Yield riches that will never be spent."

A QUESTION.

"Mamma," said a little child, "my Sabbath-school teacher tells me that this world is only a place in which God lets us live awhile that we may prepare for a better world. But, mother, I do not see my one preparing. I see you preparing to go into the country, and Aunt Ellen is preparing to come here. But I do not see any one preparing to go there. Why don't you try to get ready? You scarce ever speak about going."

Fearful, faint-hearted people are not fit to be employed for God; and among those that are listed under the banner of Christ, there are more such than we think there are.

THE GREATEST
Medical Discovery
OF THE AGE.
MR. KENNEDY, of Roxbury, has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures

EVERY KIND OF HUMOR,
From the worst Scrofulas down to a Common Pimple.
He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases, both thunder humor. He has now in his possession over one hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.
Two bottles are warranted to cure a nursing sore mouth.
One to three bottles will cure the worst kind of pimples on the face.
Two or three bottles will clear the system of biles.
Two bottles are warranted to cure the worst canker in the mouth and stomach.
Three to five bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of ringworms.
One or two bottles are warranted to cure all humor in the eyes.
Two bottles are warranted to cure running of the ears and blotches among the hair.
Four to six bottles are warranted to cure worms and running ulcers.
Half a bottle will cure scaly eruptions of the skin.
Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of ringworm.
Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the most desperate case of rheumatism.
Three to four bottles are warranted to cure the rheum.
Five to eight bottles will cure the worst case of scrofula.
A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the above quantity is taken.
Nothing looks so impossible to those who have in vain tried all the wonderful medicines of the day, to find a common weed growing on the pastures and along the lanes, which will cure every humor in the system; yet it is a fixed fact. If you have a humor, it has to start. There are no IFS nor BUTS, humor he's about it, nothing saves cases, but our yours. I peddled over a thousand bottles of it in the vicinity of Boston. I know the effects of it in every case. It has already done some of the greatest cures ever done in Massachusetts. I give it to children a year old, to old people of sixty. I have seen poor, puny, wormy looking children, whose flesh was sorting flabby, restored to a perfect state of health by one bottle.
In illness who are subject to sick head ache, one bottle will always cure it. It gives great relief to chronic catarrh and dizziness. Some who have taken it had been restive for years, and have been regulated by it. Where the body is sound it works quite easy, but where there is any derangement of the functions of nature, it will cause very slaughter feelings, but you must not be alarmed, they always disappear in from four days to a week. There is never a bad result from it; on the contrary, when that feeling is gone you will feel yourself like a new person. I heard some of the most extraordinary encomiums of it that ever man has heard.

DOCTOR HOOFLAND'S
CELEBRATED
GERMAN BITTERS.
PREPARED BY
Dr. C. M. JACKSON, Phila'a, Pa.
WILL EFFECTUALLY CURE
LIVER COMPLAINT, DYSPEPSIA, JAUNDICE,
Chronic or Nervous Debility, Diseases of the Kidneys, and all diseases arising from a disordered Liver or Stomach,
Such as Constipation, Inward Piles, to Fullness or Blood the Head, Acidity of the Stomach, Nausea, Heartburn, Disgust for Food, Fullness or Weight in the Stomach, Sour Eructations, Sinking or Fluttering at the Pit of the Stomach, Swimming of the Head, Hurried and difficult Breathing, Fluttering at the Heart, Choking or Suffocating Sensations when in a lying posture, Dimness of Vision, Dots or webs before the sight, Fever and Dull pain in the Head, Deficiency of Perspiration, Yellowness of the Skin and Eyes, Pain in the Side, Back, Chest, Limbs, etc., Sudden Flushes of Heat, Burnings in the Flesh, Constant forebodings of Evil, and great Depression of Spirits.
In submitting this remedy to the notice of the public we have prepared it with a feeling of the utmost confidence in its virtues and adaptation to the diseases for which it is recommended.
It is one of a valued ancestry, that can boast the test of a ten years' trial before the American people, and its reputation and sales are unrivalled by any similar preparations extant. The testimony in its favor given by the most prominent and well known Physicians and Statesmen of the country is unanimous, and a careful perusal of the Almanac published annually by the proprietor, and to be had gratis of all of his Agents, cannot but satisfy the most skeptical that this remedy is really deserving the great celebrity it has obtained.

THE HOUR OF PRAYER.

BY CHARLOTTE ELLIOT.

My God! is any hour so sweet,
From blush of morn to evening star,
As that which calls me to thy feet,
The hour of prayer?

Blest is that tranquil hour at morn,
And blest that hour of solemn eve,
When on the wings of prayer upborne,
The world I leave.

For then a dayspring shines on me,
Brighter than morn's ethereal glow;
And richer dews descend from Thee
Than earth can know.

Then is my strength by Thee renewed;
Then are my sins by thee forgiven;
Then dost Thou cheer my solitude
With hope of heaven.

No words can tell what sweet relief,
There for my every want I find,
What strength for warfare, balm for grief,
What peace of mind.

Hushed is each doubt; gone every fear;
My spirit seems in heaven to stay;
And e'en the penitential tear
Is wiped away.

Lord! till I reach yon blissful shore,
No privilege so dear shall be
As thus my inmost soul to pour
In prayer to Thee.

Methodist General Conference.

MULKEY'S ORTHOEPY.

WHEREAS, The Rev. Wm. Mulkey, a local minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has discovered a system of orthoepy, which has been tested and approved by many persons who have examined it; and whereas, it is believed that the introduction of this system into our Mission and Sabbath-schools will be advantageous to teachers and pupils; therefore,

Resolved, That the Book Committee and the Missionary Board be and they are hereby requested to give this ingenious and valuable system a careful examination, and, in case they shall approve it, to publish it in all Church papers a plan which shall insure its early introduction into the Mission and Sabbath-schools of our Church.

E. WADSWORTH.
A. L. P. GREEN.

TENNESSEE COURTESY AND HOSPITALITY.

Resolved, By the delegates of the Annual Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in General Conference assembled, that the thanks of this General Conference be and the same are hereby tendered to the House of Representatives of the General Assembly of the State of Tennessee for the use of their elegant Hall during our session.

Resolved, That we tender our thanks to the pastors and members of the Presbyterian, Baptist, Cumberland Presbyterian, Christian, and Associate Reformed churches in this city and the vicinity, for their Christian courtesy in opening their pulpits to the members of this General Conference.

Resolved, That the thanks of this General Conference be and they are hereby tendered to those families in this city and the vicinity who have generously opened their houses for our accommodation, making our visit to Nashville very pleasant and agreeable.

Resolved, that these resolutions be published in the Nashville Christian Advocate, and other papers of the city.

E. WADSWORTH.
J. G. BRUCE.

THE LEGISLATIVE POWER.

The following resolution was offered, read, and laid on the table:

Resolved, That, when a Bishop makes a decision which the Annual Conference over which he presides believes to transcend his constitutional authority, by interfering with the constitutional rights of Annual Conferences, and the Annual Conference appeals from that decision, and the Bench of Bishops confirms the Episcopal decision below, such decision is not the law of the Church, and is not final, until confirmed by the General Conference.

DIVIDENDS OF THE FUND RECEIVED FROM THE NORTH CHURCH.

The second resolution of Report No 7 of the committee on Books and Periodicals, laid on the table May 21, was taken up, and the following substitute was offered, read, and laid on the table:

WHEREAS, It is the purpose of this Conference to respect and provide for all just claims upon the funds received from the Church, North, and, whereas, some of the claimants, for want of information, failed to avail themselves of the provision in their favor by the General Conference of 1854; therefore,

Resolved, That the provision made by the General Conference of 1854; in favor of claimants for back dividends, be now re-enacted, and remain in force for one year from this date.

E. M. MARVIN.
W. G. CAPLES.

The following substitute was offered, read, and rejected:

Resolved, That those claimants upon the dividends received from the Church, North, who have complied with the resolution of 1854, be paid.

W. C. DANDY.
J. G. BRUCE.

The resolution of the report was adopted; and the entire Report No, 7 of the committee on Books and Periodicals was adopted. The report is as follows:

Your committee to whom were submitted the claims of Jacob Whiteside and others, of Washita and other Conferences, have considered the nature of those claims, and recommend the adoption of the following resolutions, namely:

Resolved, 1. That in the case of the claims of Jacob Whiteside and others, of the Washita Conference, it appears that the claimants have strictly pursued the course prescribed to claimants of dividends by the last General Conference, the Book Agent be authorized to pay those claims in books, it being understood that the agent of the claimants is willing to a settlement in this way.

Resolved, 2. That the other claims submitted to the consideration of your committee be referred to the Book Agent for settlement, under the law of the General Conference of 1854, prescribing the mode by which such claims shall be allowed.

Respectfully submitted:
J. B. MCFERRIN, Chairman.

SOUTHERN AUTHORSHIP.

On motion of F. E. Pitts, it was

Resolved, That our Book Agent be and is hereby instructed, by and with the approval of the Book Committee, to encourage Southern talent, by extending such facilities and offering such inducements to writers and authors, both in enriching the colums of our periodicals and the production of valuable religious and literary works, as in their judgment may best secure the pecuniary interests, and advance the moral and religious objects of the Publishing House.

THE CHURCH EVANGELIST.

C. K. MARSHALL.—Mr. President, I want to move a reconsideration of the report which was passed on Saturday evening, for the promotion of the weekly paper I have the honor to represent. The object I have in view is to reach the third resolution in that report, strike it out, and substitute other matter in its place.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to, and the question recurred on the adoption of the report.

C. K. Marshall then submitted a substitute for the third resolution, which was adopted; and then,

The report, as a whole, was again adopted. It is as follows:

The committee to whom were referred the memorials on the subject of establishing and publishing periodicals on new plans, beg leave to report:

That they have had the matter under consideration, and, after mature deliberation, are prepared to encourage the establishment of a new weekly paper for general circulation amongst all our people, and sincerely hope some such plan may be considered practicable. Such a paper could not fail to meet a great want of our Church and of the age.

That such a paper should be of the highest order as to its matter known to Christian literature; and, leaving all local discussions to the several Conferences and local papers, address its columns to the general interests of the Church and community within the limits of the Church, South.

That there being at present in circulation, amongst a white membership of five hundred thousand, only about thirty-five thousand copies of all the official "Advocates," or but one copy for every fourteen members of the Church; and while the proportion of population attendant on our ministry, and looking to our Church for religious instruction, is five times greater than that of the membership, there is but one "Christian Advocate" for every seventy-five or eighty persons of that general community.

That, in view of the efforts made to engross the public mind with the corrupting and skeptical literature so cheaply sold and so widely diffused over the land; and deploring the want of a cheap weekly paper, capable of conveying to the thousands of our Israel such knowledge and religious instruction as are specially needed by them; and particularly the thousands of families whose circumstances do not allow of the purchase of new books and current religious literature, such organ of communication is deemed of the first importance.

That, in order to the general dissemination of such a paper, it is deemed important that it should rest for its support chiefly on our lay members; and therefore recommend that the several churches, of which there are about six thousand in the South, shall raise periodical committees to conduct the business of collecting funds for the payment of the paper, to keep the registers, and act as the general agents for the Church and publishers; the pastor to act as chairman of the committee.

That the printing and publishing of the first twenty-five thousand copies could be afforded at about twenty-two thousand four hundred and thirty dollars, on paper the size of the present Nashville Advocate; making the cost of each copy to the committees about ninety cents each. But as several hundred thousand copies ought to be issued, at no very remote period, every week, the cost of the paper might be reduced to at least fifty cents per copy, and perhaps less. Costly advertisements might be admitted without detriment, and with great advantage in reducing the price. Besides, liberal christians would be found everywhere disposed to leave legacies and make donations for its perpetuity and benevolent diffusion. And in addition, as it would perform the office of a tract, and be distributed as are tracts, it would not be improper for a portion of the funds held at the disposal of the church for the gratuitous bestowment of cheap religious literature to be given for its maintenance, and especially for all the supply of the mission work where it may be deemed useful. If a smaller sheet be selected than herein indicated, then the cost will be proportionably less.

That where legacies may be left for its endowment, or donations given, in order to extend its circulation and increase its influence, the Annual Conference within whose bounds such donations or legacies may be bestowed shall receive and invest the same in such manner as may best secure the objects of such donors. And finally,

That but one paper be issued weekly, and not more, as prayed for in one of the memorials, bearing in the future development of the philanthropy of the church the enlargement of the plan and the multiplication of the weekly issues.

In conclusion, your committee beg leave to submit the following resolutions:

Resolved, 1. That this Conference approve the plan for the publication of a weekly tract in the form of a newspaper, for general and benevolent distribution, as exhibited in one of the memorials before this Conference.

Resolved, 2. That the Book Agent shall have charge of the printing and publication of such paper, and that he be authorized to commence its regular issues as soon as twenty thousand copies have been ordered.

Resolved, 3. That when the services of an editor may be required for said paper, it shall be the duty of the Agent and Book Committee, by and with the sanction of any one of the Bishops, to employ such editor.

Resolved, 4. That the Bishops be respectfully requested to urge upon the members of the Church generally a ready, hearty and liberal co-operation with this body in this endeavor to spread the knowledge of the truth over our work, in the Pastoral Address which they may prepare, as requested by this body.

Resolved, 5. That it shall be the duty of the pastor in charge of any congregation to appoint such Committee on Periodicals as he may deem best for the successful performance of the agency for said paper, such pastor being chairman thereof, and to be responsible to the Quarterly Meeting Conference for the faithful performance of his duty; and the Presiding Elder shall, at each Quarterly Conference make special inquiry respecting the condition and success of the publication.

All of which is respectfully submitted:
C. K. MARSHALL, Chairman.

C. K. Marshall was elected, by a rising vote, Agent of the Church Evangelist.

On motion by E. Stevenson and J. G. Bruce, it was Resolved, That each Annual Conference may, at any future session, elect a Corresponding Editor, who shall be charged with the representation of the interests of the "Church Evangelist" in said Conference, and to promote as far as practicable its general interests.

LAY REPRESENTATION.

The Report, No. 6, of the committee on Itinerancy was now taken up, and adopted, as follows:

The committee on Itinerancy, to whom was referred the memorial from Prattville, Alabama Conference, against lay representation; and also so much of the Episcopal Address as refers to the subject of lay delegation, having duly considered the same, respectfully represent, that we consider it inexpedient to make any change in the Discipline on the subject of the co-operation of laymen in our Church: that the Annual Conferences are, in our judgment, competent, under the law as it now exists, and is contained in the Discipline, pages 235-6, to institute and adopt such plans as shall secure the counsel and co-operation of laymen. In all the financial interests of the church: that there is neither demand nor occasion for legislation upon the general subject of lay delegation; but, that the system inaugurated by the recommendation of the General Conference of 1850, and now so prolific of good fruits in the several Annual Conferences, may be enlarged in its operations and improved in its capacity for usefulness, we beg leave to recommend to your body the addition to the rule as it now stands in the Discipline, contained in the resolution following:

Resolved, That the words, "and educational" be inserted in the Discipline, on page 236, 4th line from the top, after the word "missionary," so as to read, "as also for missionary and educational purposes." Respectfully submitted. LEROY M. LEE, Chairman.

EXPUNCTION OF THE SLAVERY GENERAL RULE.

On motion by D. R. McAnally, Bishop Pierce now read from the chair that portion of the Pastoral Address of the members of the General Conference (which the Bishops, by resolution of the body, had been requested to prepare) which relates to the matter of the expunction of the General Rule on Slavery.

On motion by T. O. Summers, it was ordered that the said Pastoral Address be printed in the Journal of the General Conference, and in all our church papers.

THE CLASS MEETING SYSTEM.

W. A. SMITH—Mr. President, I do not want to go home without the consciousness of having done my best to redeem our class meeting system. I propose to submit two resolutions, which were read for information this afternoon, and which I hope will now meet with the approbation of the General Conference.

The resolutions are as follows:

1. Resolved, That we hereby adopt the following amendment of the Discipline, p. 122, chap. 4, sec. 3, ques. 1, ans. 2; strike out all after the word "guilty," in the 6th line, to the end of the paragraph, and insert: "Of such willful neglect as satisfies the majority of the members before whom their case is brought, that the accused are so destitute of Christian experience as to be disqualified for Church-membership, the preacher in charge shall excinde them from the communion of the church."

2. Resolved, That the Discipline, p. 55, chap. 2, sec. 7, ques. 1, ans. 3, be amended, by adding to the answer the the following words: "And to meet the class or classes in the country, or to have them met under his immediate personal superintendence by some suitable person, at the close of his regular public services, on each occasion of his filling what he regards his regular pastoral appointments, unless for very grave reasons he may find it necessary to omit for the time, and in the towns or cities to meet the classes of his charge once a quarter.

WM. A. SMITH.
LEO. ROSSEN.

A. M. Shipp and N. Talley proposed the following substitute:

WHEREAS, No official information has been laid before this General Conference of any general dissatisfaction with the institution of Class-meetings as now established in our Church; and whereas, nevertheless, statements have been made by several delegates to the effect that said meetings have been neglected in many portions of the Church; therefore,

Resolved, That the College of Bishops be requested to give the institution of Class-meetings a prominent place in the proposed Pastoral Address to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and to give such advice and counsel on this general subject as in their godly judgment the circumstances of the case may demand; and, also, to keep the institution prominently before the Annual Conferences, by inquiring carefully how far it is fostered, and attendance upon it enforced.

The substitute was agreed to; and, as thus amended, this proposition was adopted.

James E. Evans and J. Hamilton resigned their places as members of the Book committee. Samuel Watson and L. M. Lee were appointed in their places.

L. D. Huston and W. C. Johnson submitted the following, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the cordial thanks of this General Conference be and they are hereby tendered to the Secretary and Assistant Secretary for the prompt, correct and faithful discharge of their laborious and important duties; and that the General Book Agent be and is hereby instructed to present to each of these officers a proper token of the approbation of this body.

On the motion of W. A. Smith, the thanks of the Conference were also tendered to the reporters.

The time of adjournment having arrived—ten minutes after twelve o'clock A. M., June 1st—the minutes having been read and approved—the Conference was led in prayer by the venerable Lovick Pierce, the benediction was pronounced by Bishop Pierce, and the Conference adjourned. Thus closed the fourth General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

MADISON COLLEGE,
Sharon Miss., June 1858.

MR. EDITOR: During the past year (1857) some of the oldest and most distinguished members of the Methodist E. Church, in Madison county, Mississippi, have "slept the sleep of death." By the friends of four of these I was requested to write, for each, an obituary, and for two of them by the Conferences to which they belonged a memoir of each. For the want of the proper data or materials at the time, I could not do it, except in the case of Rev. Lewis Garrett, and I have succeeded, notwithstanding I have not yet received, what I desired chiefly to enable me to prepare suitable memoirs of each, to present to your readers from the materials furnished a short account of these and their triumphant end:

1. Rev. John McCauly, a man of deep and undissembled piety departed this life on 12th of April, 1857, full of peace and in joyful hope of everlasting life. At a Quarterly Conference held for Camden circuit 2d. May, resolutions commemorative of this sad event were unanimously adopted by that body; and is one of them, a request that a special memoir should be written and submitted for publication in the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Mr. McCauly was born February 6th, 1779, in Tyrone county Ireland, and in 1798 he was born of the spirit and joined the Methodists. In 1799 he commenced his career as an ambassador for Christ. May 14, 1803, he was married, and May 14, 1804, left his native land for the United States and landed in the city of Baltimore 14th August following. Thus during the long period of 58 years he was a zealous laborious and useful minister of Christ in his native land, and in the States of Pennsylvania, Maryland, Kentucky, Tennessee and Mississippi. To this last named state he moved in May, 1834, and therein, up to the time of his last illness, was constantly abundant in labors, often at a great distance from home. For the last ten years previous to his death he was Missionary to the negroes in the North part of Madison county; and many, very many, through his instrumentality were brought to know God.

During the last seven months of his life he was the subject of affliction. Often clouds bordering sometimes on darkness would seem to hang over him, and the tempter would thrust at him sorely. But again he would rise superior to every pain of body and thrusts of the adversary. On one occasion, when extremely anxious about his colored charge, he said that he was ready to exclaim, Lord who shall take care of my colored people? But added "It came forcibly to my mind that my sickness and suffering were as much the result of God's will as my healthand labors," and said the pious old man, "that moment I cried out" Lord thy will be done," and in a minute I was full of glory and of God—"Christ was inside and outside of me and all around me." "O brother I was new, altogether new, renovated and filled with the love of my good God, and now I am ready, willing and anxious to depart and be with Christ Jesus my precious Savior."

Then the sun of righteousness arose with healings on his wings and enabled him to behold without a dimming vail the God head reconciled.

On the night of his death, being asked "if he felt the sweets and comforts of this religion still?" He answered, distinctly, I do." I love God, I love his cause. I love his people, Jesus is a present help in time of trouble. O God my heart is fixed I trust in thee. "I will not said he be a stranger when I get to heaven, for I have a large family there and many friends," and on the morning of the 12th April, at half past one o'clock, he closed his eyes in death, in joyous anticipation of an endless rest in heaven.

Brother McCauley was one of the most eloquent men in prayer that I ever heard. The writer knew him for at least forty years, and often witnessed his ardent and patient zeal in the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ.

His ancient partner, the companion of his toil, still lingers on the shores of time, till God shall say, "Thy work is done." The memory of McCauley is fresh and dear to many poor colored people, who through him were taught the way of life, and his services among them were appreciated and honored by many of the most wealthy and respectable people of this State, and among them by none more so than Governor McWillie and his amiable family, who delighted to entertain and honor at their mansion the man of God thus honored of Heaven.

In Pennsylvania and Maryland, he would often walk ten and twelve miles of a Sunday morning, and fill an appointment at the factories, and returning fill another on his way home in the afternoon. "Fervent in spirit, diligent in business serving the Lord." But his work is done we believe, well done, and the savor of his piety is felt by hundreds left behind.

"Servant of Christ well done." Amen.

The Rev. Lewis Garrett was born on the 24th day of April, 1772, in the State of Pennsylvania, and died 28th of April, 1857, near Vernon, Mississippi, in the full assurance of faith, being aged eighty-five years and four days.

Soon after the birth of our brother, his father, Mr. Lewis Garrett, removed to Virginia, but in 1779 sold out his possessions in that State, and removed with his wife and eight children, in quest of a home in what was then called the far West. In some recollections, published by our departed brother, of himself and others, during the year 1848, he refers to the vivid impressions of those days, and the many difficulties this emigrant family had to encounter in its passage over the mountains to seek a home on the rich lands of Kentucky. On the way, his father died at a station on Clinch river, but his mother continued her journey under the protection of her brother, Morris Given, and other emigrant families, and took up her residence at Scott's Station, between Dicks and the Kentucky rivers, in the fall of 1779. There they erected cabins and remained during what was long called "The hard Winter," getting their corn at the hazard of their lives from the Ohio, which, when procured, they had to pound in order to obtain from it their bread, and as all could not get even this, many lived chiefly on wild meat, and a wild pea growing in that country.

In the spring of 1780, the prowling savages commenced their attacks upon the whites. The second son of Mrs. G., named Phineas, about eleven years old, was captured by the Indians, and in 1783 her eldest son, Eli, about sixteen years old, being out on a hunting expedition, was also captured. The former was never heard of, the latter was not recovered until eighteen months. During the year 1782, Mr. Garrett's mother and sister became the subjects of a revival then in progress in that vicinity, but in 1786, a revival far more extensive and powerful, commenced through the instrumentality of James Haw and Benjamin Ogden, both of whom visited the widowed mother of young Garrett, who, although but a boy, was even then accustomed to mark and observe upon the pious and upright walk of these holy men. In 1787, Barnabas McHenry was appointed, in connection with James Haw, to Cumberland circuit, and through the instrumentality of this good young man, who went about daily doing good at the hazard of his life, young Garrett was first impressed with the necessity of religion. At what particular time and place he was converted, we do not find recorded in his recollections of those times. But in 1794, at the meeting of the Western Conference, at Lewis, near the Kentucky river, he, Moses Speer, and William Kavanaugh, were admitted on trial, and brother Garrett appointed with brother Kavanaugh to Green circuit, in what is now called East Tennessee. He, with four other preachers, met at the Crab Orchard, and attended by about sixty men, proceeded on their way to their appointments, in imminent danger almost every hour of loosing their lives, by the Indians constantly prowling about for murder and plunder. The description given by Mr. Garrett of their difficulties and danger, is truly interesting, and displays the courage and deep devotion of the men of that day. In 1795 he was appointed to Russell's circuit; in '96, to Orange; in '97, to Haw river; in '98, to Caswell; in '99, to Portsmouth; in 1800, to Gloucester; in 1801, to Mecklenburg; in 1802, to Lexington, Ky.; in 1803, Danville; in 1804, Presiding Elder on Cumberland District, in what was then called "The Western Conference;" in 1805, the same District. It appears on the general minutes, Mr. Garrett located at the Conference of 1806. Of this act he has the following account: "At this conference (1805) the writer (L. G.) of these sketches, found it necessary to desist from traveling at large. Twelve years' incessant travel and labor upon an extensive scale, had considerably enfeebled a once robust constitution." These, with family considerations, induced him to locate. In connection with the account of his location, he dilates on the happiness he enjoyed in these days of primitive Methodism, in his associations with many of those pioneers of the Gospel, whilst he traveled extensively through Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia and North Carolina, and especially does he mention the ever venerated names of Asbury and McHendry. But in a located condition he was not idle. Ever active when not pressed by family considerations, he was abundant in the work of the ministry; and as evidence of this fact, we need only say, that he was an active and a zealous participant in the extensive revivals in Kentucky and Tennessee, which occurred about the time, and soon after his location. These sketches of himself and others were first published in the "Western Methodist." Afterwards, when collected, they appeared in a small volume, printed at Yazoo city. In 1816 brother Garrett re-entered the traveling connection, and was appointed to Stone's river circuit; in 17, to Dixon; in '18 and '19, to Cumberland; in '20, to Duck river; in '21, missionary to Jackson's purchase; in '22, Duck river District; in '23, Forked Deer District; in '24, to Nashville; in '25, '26, '27, '28, and '29, he held a supernumerary relation. In 1834 and '35 he was at the Book Depository. In 1836 a supernumerary at Nashville Station. In 1837 he located; but in 1840 brother G. appears as a superannuated preacher in the Mississippi Conference, which relation he sustained to that Conference until the time of his death.

Our venerable brother was a man of more than ordinary merit. In our opinion one of deep and undissembled piety. Generally of few words, and remarkable for his industry and zeal, as well as attachment to what he considered the ancient land-marks of Methodism. Having settled near Vernon, Madison county, Miss., he was employed as a missionary among the colored people, among whom he labored zealously as long as able to do so. At last, after having been a preacher at least sixty-three years, it was apparent to all his friends who visited him, that he was sinking apace. It is said that the last time he attended church, he was extremely happy, and he remarked to a brother who called to see and pray with him and his venerable lady, in the language of Wesley, "The best of all, God is with us."

He had but three sons. One of them had already departed, leaving behind an interesting family, that had endeared itself to him by many, very many kind attentions, and who now revere his memory, and recur to him as a model of piety. Another son was distant; but the third, M. Garrett, Esq., seeing the low condition, as to health, of his father, removed him to his own house, where he shortly afterwards died in great peace. When evidently fast sinking to the grave, he was frequently roused up, and asked respecting his feelings in prospect of death. He always answered his kind and attentive son, and other friends who came to see him, that all was well with Lewis Garrett. On one occasion, and just before his death, a local minister called to see him, and addressing him, asked, "Brother Garrett, do you know me? Tell me, and let me know if all is well, and you are ready to die." To which he replied in his own laconic style, "To be sure brother Goodloe, I know you well, and I know the Lord Jesus Christ, too. His blood and righteousness I make my only plea."

These were the last words he spoke. Soon after he became speechless, but with signs gave testimony to the last that God was with him.

We might expatiate on the many virtues of this venerable servant of God, his deep and undissembled piety, his zeal, his usefulness—of which there is abundant evidence—but it would extend this notice to an unreasonable length. He leaves a wife, two sons and several grandchildren to mourn his departure from their midst. It is not saying too much in praise of our departed brother, there have lived but very few such men as Lewis Garrett—habitually pious, and "holy in all manner of conversation and Godliness."

How applicable to such a man and such a cause, the text selected for his funeral, "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand, I have fought the good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the Righteous Judge, shall give at that day, and not to me only, but to all them that love his appearing." AMEN.

Kinsman Divine, Esq., was born in Connecticut 1790. In 1797 his father removed from thence to Albany county, New York, from whence our brother Divine emigrated to Mississippi and settled first in Claiborne county and afterward in Jefferson. On the 22d of May, 1814, he was married to Miss Elizabeth D. Saunders, our present venerable sister Divine, who is now with a large family of children and grand children, left to mourn the death of our departed brother. In September, 1821, he was happily converted to God, joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, and remained from that time till the day of his death, a regular, consistent and, we believe, a faithful member not only of the Church, but a devoted pious and useful Christian. Long was his house the home of Christian ministers, and his means devoted to sustain them in their great work. Whenever money was needed to carry on and carry out the plans of the Church for the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom, brother Divine was ready to give liberally of his substance, and God had blessed him with the means to give. To the poor, the needy, the fatherless, the widow, there are those who know he was ever a willing contributor, and this liberality as the writer well knows, was on the principle "Let not thy right hand know what thy left hand doth." A Methodist in the proper acceptation of the term, as well as a Christian, he loved its institutions and regularly attended on the same. Sickness only prevented him from filling his seat in the house of God. In the class room, at the prayer and night meetings, and love feasts, brother Divine, when able, was a constant attendant. When he had the first attack of paralysis, unexpected as it was, and death seemed suddenly in view, he was ready and willing at once to go. From this he partially recovered so as to go about. During the last year he was thrown from his horse, had an arm broken, and was again dangerously ill.—Again his vigorous constitution survived the shock, and he began his accustomed course of comparative activity and attention to business, when doubtless excessive effort and attention to business, brought on his last attack, and terminated his earthly career on 27th December, 1857, in peace in triumph, and the full assurance of eternal life beyond the grave. On the Sunday evening previous to his death, we witnessed a scene that was enough to move the hardest heart. In and about his chamber were convened several ministers, his physicians, wife, children and grand children, his brother, many neighbors and friends, and most of his servants, and when he and all supposed he was about to leave these mortal shores, and whilst we were all engaged in prayer, there was a power and divine influence so manifest that every heart seemed full of glory and of God. The triumph was complete. During the night he revived again but shortly after began to sink and gradually declined until he could hardly be roused at all; but when aroused, he uniformly testified to the presence of God, the comforts of his love, and his confident expectation of life eternal through Jesus Christ our Lord. Thus lived and thus died one of the best men in our community. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord, yea; saith the spirit for they rest from their labors and their works do follow them." Amen!

EXCUSES.

Reader, there are many excuses made about religion. But there are no excuses so poor and feeble as those which people make for not praying. Beware of these excuses.

Do not say you do not know how to pray. Prayer is the simplest act in religion. It is simply speaking to God. It needs neither learning, nor wisdom, nor book knowledge to begin it. It needs nothing but heart and will. The weakest infant can cry when he is hungry. The poorest beggar can hold out his hands for alms, and does not wait to find fine words. The most ignorant man will find something to say to God, if he has only a will.

Do not say you have no convenient place to pray in. Any man can find a place private enough if he is disposed. Our Lord prayed on a mountain, Peter on the house top, Isaac in the field, Nathaniel under the fig tree, Jonah in the whale's belly. Any place may become a closet, an oratory, and a bethel, and be to us the presence of God.

Do not say you have no time. There is plenty of time if men will only employ it. Time may be short, but time is always long enough for prayer. Daniel had all the affairs of a kingdom on his hands, and yet he prayed three times a day. David was ruler over a mighty nation, and yet he says, "Evening and morning, and at noon will I pray." Psalm lv. 17. When time is really wanted, time can always be found.

Reader, salvation is very near you. Do not lose heaven for want of asking. Go this day and take the first step. Pour out your heart before God. Tell him that you are a poor unworthy sinner, and that you want to be saved. Tell him that you have heard he will hear all who ask in Christ's name, and that in Christ's name you may ask to be saved. But do not put it off. Beware of excuses.—Ryle.

HALF AN HOUR IN BAD COMPANY.

"Separate from sinners and unspotted from the world." BIBLE.

A youth was once unintentionally thrown into the company of some half a dozen young men of very immoral character. Their language, their jests, were of the lowest order. Indecent expressions, vulgar anecdotes, heart-defiling oaths, characterized their conversation. It was evident there was no thought of God in all their hearts.

He left them and went to his room. It was time for retiring to rest. He opened his Bible and attempted to read its sacred pages; but he could not confine his thoughts. The low, vulgar anecdotes of that godless party were continually flitting across his mind. Their hollow mockery of God still rung in his ear; the thought that perhaps there was no God, no heaven, no hell, disturbed his hitherto pleasant evening meditations; but that kind, friendly voice within, the lives and death-beds of parents whom he had loved only to lose, told him too plainly there was a God above of tender and forgiving mercy, there was a heaven of bliss and joy, there was a lake whose waves of fire and brimstone were never quiet. He knelt down to pray; still the profane jests of that God-rejecting company intruded themselves upon his thoughts; he retired to rest; they haunted his slumbers; he awoke in the morning; they still lingered in his mind. Year after year has passed away, but that half an hour in the company of the profane, the wicked, still exerts its injurious influence upon the heart of that young man. It will never leave him. Wherever he goes, whatever he does, it will remain in his mind to the last day of his life. It may be forgotten for a time, but like the serpent concealed in a bed of violets, it will again and again come up to pollute his best and purest thoughts, to poison his sweetest affections.

My dear young friends, particularly boys, write this as your motto upon the fly-leaves of your books—write it on the walls of your room—write it in your copy-books—write it on your hearts—Keep out of bad company.

"Now to Thee, O God! we come,
In our morning's early bloom;
Breathe on us Thy grace divine;
Touch our heart, and make them Thine.

Christ is the voice of God without the man; the Spirit is the voice of God within the man.

Happiness is a bird that owns no cage but the bosom.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, JULY 10, 1858.

Appointed.—The new editor, has arrived; and will at once assume the duties of his office.—His delay has been caused by illness in his family, which prevented earlier preparation for removal, and by the trouble of removal itself.

Health of the City.—The official returns made by the Board of Health, for the week ending July 4, are 142 deaths, of which 8 were of yellow fever. On Thursday morning there were no cases in the Charity Hospital under treatment. During the week ending Thursday the 8th, there had been three deaths in this institution from yellow fever. As no new cases are coming in we judge that the disease is not increasing. The hospital has always been regarded as an accurate health thermometer of the city. In private practice we hear of some fever, but those physicians whom we have consulted think it is not spreading to any great extent. We infer from reports that the disease is mostly confined to shipping. Our weather is rather unfavorable—hot and chilly by spells, and much rain.

Mississippi Intelligence.—On the 29th ult., Gen. Wm. Walker addressed a large crowd of people at Aberdeen, upon the subject of the regeneration of Nicaragua.

The Granada Republican, of Saturday last, says:

On last Sunday we had another very heavy rain in this locality. We have heard some of our planting friends, during the present week, complain of too much rain—others, of not having enough for growing purposes. Though conflicting statements continue to reach us from the country, we cannot but think the final result will be gratifying.

The Holly Springs Herald, of Saturday last, says:

During the present week the weather has been remarkably warm. We have had partial showers of rain in different portions of the county, but, in many neighborhoods rain is much needed. In Holly Springs the dust is becoming intolerable.

Crops and the Harvest.—The Baltimore Sun of the 1st inst. says:

Since the hot weather set in the crops have improved wonderfully. In Maryland it has had a magic effect on the growing corn, and will save much wheat that would otherwise have been rained. We notice from our Southern exchanges that the harvest is now fully under way in many places. In South Carolina, North Carolina, Virginia and Georgia, and that section of country adjoining, it has far advanced, and in Maryland and Pennsylvania, besides several Western States, it will be commenced very generally during the present week.

The Long Island Mastadon.—The Brooklyn Eagle says two more teeth of the mastodon at Bailey's Pond, were dug up a few days ago. One very large one, in a perfect state of preservation, and one small one. The large tooth has the same black color and glossy enamel, as the others. The laborers who found them, still hold on to them, hiding them in their shantles, believing them to possess great value.

Pirates.—Pirates still swarm in the waters of the China seas. The schooner Heather Belle, on her way from Macao to Hong-Kong, was attacked by three pirate junks off Castlepeak, and the master and Manilla crew murdered. One Chinese escaped in a Sampan, and brought the news to Hong-Kong. A British gunboat was sent in search of these pirates and succeeded in capturing seven junks. One hundred pirates made their escape, eighty were drowned and seventy captured. The China Mail makes the following statement:

The United States ship Mississippi, on her passage from Manilla, observed the masts of a vessel above water, about 30 miles southwest of the Ladrone, and reported the same to Admiral Seymour. His Excellency immediately dispatched the Niger in search of the wreck, which she found and described as follows: 115 feet long, white mast heads, fid of topmast of wood, ship rigged, head to the nor'west on starboard tack, perfectly upwright, mizzen topsail yards at masthead, and braced on starboard tack, three mastheads above water. From this description there is reason to fear that the vessel has been taken by pirates, plundered and scuttled.

Snow on the White Mountains.—A gentleman who ascended Mount Willey, from the White Mountain Notch, a few days ago, writes the Boston Transcript that he found patches of snow eighteen inches deep on the top of the mountain. This is quite unusual for that neighborhood so late in June. The mountain streams are reported to be very cold at the present time.

Crops in North Louisiana.—The Madison Journal of Friday last says the cotton crop looks very well. Corn has been suffering considerably for rain, but still promises an average yield.

The Caddo Gazette of Saturday last says:

During the week the weather has been decidedly warm, with the thermometer ranging from 80 to 105 in every twenty-four hours. The crops are very good in this and the adjoining parishes. The rains have been very general, although we have heard of a few localities where the crops are suffering.

Geological Curiosity.—We were shown, while attending the annual examination of Union Academy at Pleasant Ridge, by Dr. E. F. Bouchelle, one of the most interesting geological curiosities we ever saw or read of. It consists of a specimen of rock of the primitive order at formation, and of the pentædral order of crystalization, containing in its centre a globule of water movable and visible. This water is, if there be any truth in geology, one of the oldest drops of water in the universe, far more ancient than the waters of the flood of Noe.—To use the language of Dr. Bouchelle, "it is a drop of the waters that covered in darkness the face of the great deep, when the earth was without form and void—in other words, this little drop is a portion of the first water that was created during the six days of Genesis, and became entangled among the particles of rock during the act or process of crystalization. The rock being primitive, or the first of creation, the water must also be primitive."

MRS. RACHEL KIDD WARD.

A mother in Israel has departed from these mortal shores, to that land from whose borne no traveler returns. Our sister Ward was born in Baltimore county, Maryland, near Belle-Air on the 14th of February, 1783; her maiden name was Kidd. At the early age of fifteen years she married James Ward, and immediately removed to North Carolina, and settled near Guilford Court House, of revolutionary fame. In 1801 she professed religion, and five years after removed to Virginia, where she lived for ten years. During this period she visited her parents for the last time; thence she removed to Tennessee, and resided there for twenty-one years. There two of her sons entered the ministry of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Family considerations induced her to remove to Mississippi, and settling in Sharon she remained a resident of that place to the time of her death which occurred the 5th of November, 1857; though a married woman, she was young when she embraced religion, and in that illness which terminated in death, we heard her relate with unspeakable delight her conversion to God and adoption into his family. "A friend came and told her of the work of God going on in her vicinity; she was so deeply affected at the relation of what others saw and felt, that she forthwith gave up and began to seek the Lord. Whilst relating her conversion to the writer, "she remarked I have often heard you say, the first call you ever had you obeyed and sought the Lord." "O!" said she, "I can say when thou, Lord, said, seek ye my face, my heart said thy face, Lord, will I seek." Sister Ward, was a consistent Christian. In Tennessee she joined the Cumberland Presbyterians, and remained a member of their Church until the want of Church privileges, and the removal of her pastor and brethren induced her to become a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Sharon, and there for many years she was considered an honor to the Church, an example of piety, and a mother in Israel.

After long and extreme suffering that gradually wore her down, this venerable matron, "Dorcas" like in her attention to domestic affairs, and who as "Lois" and "Eunice" of old taught her children and grand children the scriptures and true faith of Christ, saw her end approaching, and triumphed over death and the grave. "O" said she, "I see before me, dear brother, a world of bliss and glory. I know you commit much of the scriptures to memory, repeat for me the 23d. Psalm." And whilst it was being repeated, she exclaimed aloud, "The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want." He maketh me to lie down in green pastures, he leadeth me beside still waters. Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I shall fear no evil, Thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." "Surely," she exclaimed: "goodness and mercy have followed me all the days of my life, and I shall dwell in the house of the Lord forever." Gradually she declined till the last night came. The sun had set for the last time to her, and speechless she lay on the bed of death. But during that gloomy night there were two, who specially watched by her bedside. Her daughter and a son, a minister of our Church. Prayer—ardent, anxious, believing prayer ascended to the God of Heaven. "Lord let my dear—dear mother speak to me once more, and tell the state of her mind in this the trying hour." God heard and answered the prayer of that praying minister. The venerable mother, as if aroused by the voice of that son, spoke for the last time, only to let the children know that "All was well," and then, as one retiring to rest calmly, but triumphantly, fell asleep, as in the arms of Jesus.

"Death is the gate to endless joy,
And shall we dread to enter there?"

LETTER FROM CARROLL, LA.

Carroll Circuit, May 25th 1858.

Dear Advocate: I left Caddo, feeling very much as I did when I left home for my first circuit. It was to me a very severe trial; and even now I sometimes long to meet those dear friends who so often cheered me with their smiles and conversation. Coming thus direct from the company of friends, and a pleasant country, to make the acquaintance of entire strangers and dwell in a swamp, my feelings were gloomy enough. Nothing but the religion of Jesus could have afforded a single beam of joy. I confess I felt inadequate to the task of leading this people to God. I am happy, however, to say that much has been done by the Lord and the people towards my encouragement. Things begin to look better all-around. We are holding prayer meetings at various places, sometimes at one house, sometimes at another. Bro. Winn, besides working diligently at his books, is laboring with considerable success in preaching and visiting. He reminds me of what I have heard of the old-time preachers. In him I find a most useful and beloved assistant.

We are trying to build a Church at Floyd, and also a parsonage. Money is so scarce, however, that I have doubts of our success. The people here are very kind, and seem to be glad to have preaching. They are not generally very wealthy, but some of them are rich in heavenly treasures.

This country affords constant food for thought and imagination. Many preachers have labored here trying to bring sinners home to God. I have been told that Rev. —— Daly (an Irishman known to the Conference) preached his first sermon on this circuit.

On the bank of Bayou Macon, at the present residence of Bro. Adams, tradition says that the famous robber Macon once held his head quarters. It is said that he was the head of an organized band of desperadoes who operated between Texas and Mississippi. He counterfieted upon a large scale and his followers scattered the bogus money over the three States. One of Bro. Adam's men in ploughing turned up a counterfiet half dollar dated 1811.

At this same place there is a remarkable mound evidently not the work of nature. It is the highest I ever saw, and there are remains of what seem to have been a winding road leading to the summit. Four or five hundred yards below there is what appears to have been a breast-work thrown up.

Bro. A. thinks that there was once a large town situated at this place—that the mound was a sentinel's tower and a place of worship—that it was besieged by an enemy who made the breast-work fort as a place into which they might retire for safety. This seems to be not unreasonable, for at a place only a short distance above them are found human skeletons, and just below at Mr. Jackson's, large skeletons are frequently turned up by the plough.

Bro. A. has a number of curious things which he found near the mound. Indeed it is evident that people lived here long, long ago. They seem too, to have been of gigantic statue. One skeleton found was of remarkable dimensions, some of the bones and one of the teeth, very large, are lying on my table now.

The overflow has troubled us a good deal lately. Our work is nearly all on the high side of the Bayou, but yet the water backs up some of the little creeks so that we have to go a long ways round. Over in the swamp times are distressing. A great deal of stock has been drowned, very few planters but have suffered. The water here is on a stand and hopes are entertained that it will soon fall. The crops generally are backward, owing to the late spring. I hope when next I write to be able to report that the work of the Lord prospers much. We need much religion here and are determined to work for it. Brethren pray for us.

F. T. RAWSON.

LETTER FROM CHINA.

Shanghai China, April 4th, 1858.

Dear Brother McTyeire: The mail closes today at 12 o'clock, and I have but a few minutes in which to write.

I and my family are still in good health.—The work of the Lord is still progressing and sinners are being converted unto Him. Missionaries are as actively engaged as ever to plant the standard of Prince Messiah, on the broken and almost demolished walls of Satan, and to spread pure and vital piety throughout this land of images, the strong hold of the power of darkness. Ah where the power of the spirit of Almighty God is felt, the kingdom of Satan quakes and trembles. Wherever is seen the watchman, or wherever is heard his voice of warning, are to be seen the emissaries of the wicked one. But glory be to God, his servants are never forsaken, even in the midst of severe trial, the marks of a loving Savior are there, and when God is for us, none can be against us. When guided by his holy Spirit, our whole trust is in Him, for we know that He doeth all things well. I have just baptised another native, Mrs. Qua. She has been living with us for more than a year, and we believe her truly converted to God. There are many others who are desirous of being followers of the Savior we so much love. The seed is now springing up in good ground and we trust a better day is in store for this people, when the work of the Lord shall spread mightily through the ranks of satan's army, and Christ shall be proclaimed "King of Kings."

My congregations are still quite large and many very attentive listeners to the story of the cross. And I am happy to say there are those who come day after day and ask to be taught the doctrine of the salvation of their souls. I feel greatly encouraged in my laboring among this people. Though we have many severe trials, and much opposition, yet God is our portion, our refuge, our life, our all, and we will not fear what man can do to us.

We have quite stirring and lively times at Shanghai just now. The authorities of the treaty powers and Russia are now in port and are expecting soon to sail for Peking, and will perhaps be there by the middle of May or sooner unless the Chinese authorities consent to make a treaty immediately, which they seem unwilling to do, or are slow in coming to a conclusion. It is thought, the treaty powers will yet have difficulty in getting a treaty. Lord Elgin, and the French soon determined to demand it, (if in no other way) by the force of arms. Whereas Mr. Reed, our commissioner, according to the instructions of our government, can only get it peaceably. I visited Mr Reed last week and found him to be a most excellent man. He has his son with him who is his private secretary. Lord Elgin and Mr. Reed are both christian men. How praiseworthy of these two great christian countries, England and America, that they should send on such occasions as these, christian men to transact important business for their respective countries and attend to their commercial interests. We shall have stirring times in China during the next three months. The Minnesota an American man-of-war, now lies outside of this port, not able to come in, being too large. We have other American men-of-war in port. The English have quite a number and so have the French. The Russian men of war are expected in every day to join the three treaty powers on their way to Peking. The treaty powers have received an answer to their communication, but only requesting them to retire to Canton where there will be a man of sufficient authority to treat with them. But the foreign authorities have chosen to treat at Shanghai or at Peking. There have been several murders committed by the China pirots outside of this port. Our captain, mate and some of his crew were killed by some Canton men last week, and twelve thousand dollars taken from the ship. Remember me in all your prayers at a throne of grace.

Ever, your brother in Christ,

W. LAMBUTH.

Sun Strokes.—Inquests were held yesterday on the bodies of eight more persons whose deaths were caused by sun stroke. Many cases of coup de soleil, which did not result fatally, were also reported.—N. Y. Times 1st.

News from the Churches.

Athens Circuit, Ala., Conference, June, 10th 1858.

Mr. Editor: I wish to say through your columns, to the lovers of Zion, that the Lord is with us on this circuit. Our second Quarterly Conference for this circuit was held the 8th and 9th of May, which was protracted for several days, and resulted in six or seven accessions to the Church, some few conversions, and the Church very much revived. The meeting closed with a number of mourners at the altar. On Saturday night, the 15th of May, we commenced regular services in the Methodist Church in Smithville, where we continued until Sundsy the 23d, during which time there were about thirty-five conversions, and about twelve accessions to the Methodist Church, and the membership very much revived. The conversions, however, were not confined to the Church, but took place in the school rooms, in private houses, at the dinner table, and in the grove; so that the interest was felt in all parts of the town and among all classes. The day our meeting closed the Baptists commenced in their Church. They continued some ten days, had some five or six conversions, and about fifteen to join the church. The prospect is good for a general revival on the circuit. I pray God we may have it.

Yours ever in Christ,

J. D. CAMERON.

Lake Providence, June 25th, 1858.

Mr. Editor: We have just closed our second Quarterly Meeting, which was held at Pecan Grove. The Lord was with us and made his word the power of God to the salvation of sinners; sixteen joined the Church and eight professed to know their sins forgiven. We have rarely, if ever, seen a meeting where we thought more good was affected. The leading members of the community were brought into the Church. Our older brother Pierce was with us fully in the spirit of his great work, and preached as a man sent of God. Brother Miller, of the Richmond Circuit, was also with us, and we felt that the Lord had sent him to do a special work. He will long live in the memory of that people. Every revival has some peculiarity; this one was marked in this, that our doctrines and usages were kept before the people all the time. Thank God for a full salvation.

We cannot close this article without saying that our Presbyterian brethren were with us all the time and gave us encouragement. Our prayer is that heaven may reward them according to their works. Their piety and intelligence was too thorough to take any exceptions to our doctrines or usages. Not so with the ignorant.

Yours in gospel truth,

W. G. McGAUGHEY,
T. L. BEARD.

Clinton Circuit, Miss., June 28, 1858.

Mr. Editor: We have recently closed a meeting in the village of Brownsville, which continued sixteen days. Long will it be remembered by many who attended it. God's spirit was in our midst manifesting itself both to the sinner and believer. It resulted in the conversion of some fifty, thirty accessions, and a great awakening among the membership. Never have I attended a meeting where there was such profound attention. All seem to be engaged from the youngest to the oldest. With this we are gratified to say there seems to be a general interest manifested at all the appointments. God grant that this feeling may continue to extend until it reaches the ends of the earth.

J. W.

Camden Ala., June 19, 1858.

Dear Brother: The friends of Zion here have been gladdened by a gracious revival. Night before last we had ten conversions, the Church made happy, many mourners, and a large serious audience. Yesterday at the prayer meeting, and last night again, there were several conversions. Brother Moody is with us laboring in the power and with the unction of the holy one. We are in expectancy of still greater manifestations.

Very truly, yours.

W. A. McCARTY.

Crawford Circuit, June 29, 1858.

No doubt, my dear brother, it will make many hearts rejoice to hear of a glorious revival we have enjoyed at Mount Zion, Crawford Circuit, Alabama Conference, for the past three weeks. It commenced at my regular appointment the first Saturday and Sabbath, and closed last Sabbath night. It was verily forced upon us. In one of the busiest seasons of the year, when farmers were pushing up with their work. But such were the demonstrations of the spirit's presence, and God's willingness to save sinners, we were unwilling to refuse our co-operation. We did what we could—so we thought—and at the close of services we numbered about seventy professions of religion, and sixty-six additions to the Church. "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad."—Quite a number of Sabbath school scholars were converted. Indeed, I have no doubt, a great deal has been wrought by our Sabbath school here, to produce this mighty work.

"Praise the Lord, O! my soul, and all that is within me, praise his holy name." Amen.

J. A. CLEMENT.

Jackson Miss., July 1, 1858.

Mr. Editor: It may be a matter of some interest to your readers to know that we have just closed a meeting of several weeks, which resulted in the conversion of many souls and an addition of nineteen white, and forty colored persons to the Church. In most of her interests, the Church is in an improved condition. The Sabbath school increases in numbers and usefulness. The class and prayer meetings are being better attended, the prospect for better times are very encouraging.

J. L. FORSYTH.

Macon Mission, June 22, 1858.

To the Presiding Elders and Preachers of the Alabama Conference:

Brethren, our Conference has been assessed by the General Conference $750, for the support of the Bishops. I have distributed that amount among the districts as follows, on the basis of the other assessment by the Board of Finance. I hope what I have done well, meet your approval, and the amount be collected and kept separate.

Be kind enough brethren to bring up the whole amount of the Conference collection assessed you, and the amount for the Bishops, also.

Mobile District	$80 00
Demopolis	80 00
Macon	80 00
Summerfield	80 00
Tuscaloosa	85 00
Columbus	85 00
Montgomery	85 00
Lowndesboro'	40 00
Eufaula	40 00
Camden	35 00
Blountsville	25 00
Talladega	35 00

The presiding elders will please see that the amounts are justly distributed among the several charges of their respective districts.

W. E. M. LINFIELD,
Sec'y Board of Finance.

The will of man is apt to glory in its native liberty, and, in a jealousy for the honor of that, adheres with most pleasure to that which is its own choice, and is not imposed upon it; therefore it is God's will that his service should be, not our chance, or a force upon us, but our choice.

To the Ministers and Members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

It is known to the Church at large that the undersigned has been elected General Book Agent. I need not say to the initiated that the office is responsible and its duties onerous. Nor need I say to many of my personal friends that I accepted the Agency with reluctance; nothing but a sense of duty induced me to consent to undertake a work so arduous. But my brethren have said under solemn conviction that I should serve the Church in this capacity, and hence the task is attempted.

Having been somewhat familiar with the operations of the Southern Methodist Publishing House from its foundation, and having, to a considerable extent, looked into its condition and prospects, I am prepared to say a few things which I desire my brethren in the ministry and membership to know and well consider.

And first. The institution is safe at present in its pecuniary condition, its assets being far above its liabilities.

Second. Notwithstanding this fact, it need not be concealed from the public that the House, in order to do a prosperous business, needs and must have a large active cash capital. This the Church must supply, and can supply without any loss to its individual members. Donations of one thousand, five hundred, one hundred, fifty, twenty, five, one dollar each, from those who are able to aid in the grand publishing enterprise of the Church, would at once rid the Publishing House of all its present liabilities, and put into the hands of the Agent a sum quite sufficient to place this great institution in a position where it could do a work that would tell for ages and generations to come upon the destinies of the Church and the world.

The late General Conference, being impressed with the truth of these sentiments, and urged by worthy laymen, resolved to ask the Church for two hundred thousand dollars, to place the Concern at once in such a condition as to meet the demands of the friends of Methodism in the great and growing South.—In due time the Financial Secretary will develop his plans for raising this sum. In the meantime, however, those impressed with the importance of the movement should lead off by some noble proposition. Who will be the first? The liberal soul deviseth liberal things.

Let not the timid fear to look this matter in the face. The American Bible Society, the American Tract Society, and many other kindred institutions in both Europe and America, sustain themselves by the annual contributions of their friends; and we ask, may not the Methodists have aid in this benevolent enterprise?

Third. I suggest, that to make the House useful and profitable, its publications must be circulated and read. To circulate them freely, is to insure their perusal. The people will read: it is a reading age, and no man of self-respect, who has the facilities, will fail to read. Reading is essential to common intelligence and to proper mental improvement. The people, I repeat, will read; but,

Fourth. It becomes a matter of interest and duty with the Church to know and in some measure direct in what the people shall read. The press must be sanctified by the Church and made tributary to the spread of gospel truth. The field is before us, and if we sleep, the enemy will sow tares therein, and the harvest will be the bitter fruits of Sodom. The Southern Methodist Church has undertaken to cast good seed into the earth, and she asks the aid of all her friends, that she may sow bounteously and reap bounteously.

Fifth. It is the solemn duty of every minister and member of the Church to exert himself in the circulation of religious publications.—Infidels are at work; skeptics are busily employed; and why should not Christians be on the alert?

We most sincerely ask the co-operation of our brethren in every portion of the Church in the circulation of the books and periodicals of our Connection. Reader, you do something? Fix the purpose in your heart, and raise right up and go at once to work.

We appear to those indebted to the Publishing House. Many owe for books sent out by my predecessors. The sums are comparatively small, but they constitute the capital of the Concern, and must be paid, and paid without delay. Reader, how much owest thou? Rest not an hour until you pay the debt; it is a debt of honor; it is the life-blood of your Book Concern, and if you withhold it, you are weakening the institution and destroying its power of doing good. It is a small matter for you to pay what you owe the Agent; but when all these small sums come together, it enables him to cancel large liabilities. Our friends must pay their indebtedness, or injure the Church and its institutions.

Sixth. Send orders for books until the various Annual Conferences shall determine the question of local depositories; let our brethren continue to trade with the Agent, being sure to order nothing which will not be paid in due time.

THE PERIODICALS OF THE CHURCH.

These should be more amply sustained. We say nothing now especially pertaining to the weekly papers; but we do ask a much larger patronage for the Quarterly Review, Home Circle, and Sunday-school Visitor.

The first we are anxious to retain in the Church, but it will be discontinued at the end of the present year unless it meets a better support than heretofore. If we can procure three thousand paying subscribers at $2 by the first of December next, we will issue the volume for 1859. Surely that number can be easily obtained. If every travelling preacher will subscribe for it, and will procure one additional subscriber, the work will be done, and the Quarterly will be continued and greatly improved in several respects, because we shall have the means for improvement. It ought to have five thousand paying subscribers, and will have, if each will do his duty.

The Home Circle.—We shall not be content till the list of this periodical reaches twenty thousand. When this shall have been done, the Editor and Agent can make it a work that will be an honor to our Church, and an ornament to Southern literature. Send in the subscribers by scores and hundreds; let them come from every quarter of the Church.

The Sunday-school Visitor.—Here the House has been crippled. To make this lovely little Visitor worthy a place in the nurseries and Sabbath-schools of the country, the Agents have been required to spend more means than they could well spare. It must have more patronage, or the children of the land will suffer for want of instruction.

CONCLUSION.

I now say to all the friends of the Church everywhere, that if they will lend a helping hand, I will work willingly and faithfully in promoting the interests of the Church committed to my care; and with the hearty co-operation and harmonious efforts of all, I believe we will succeed; but if these interests flag, the sin shall lie at the door of the Church. The duty of the Agent, by the blessing of God, shall be faithfully performed, and if he fail of success, he will not bear the blame. Fail! No, that is a word we have never learned to apply. It is not Methodistic: it is not Christian. Fail!! Methodists have not been accustomed to fail. Let every man do his duty, and success is sure.

Give us then, brethren, your good will, your prayers, your patronage, and the "sinews of war," and in a few years, by the blessing of God, you will reap a rich harvest where you now sow plenteously.

J. B. McFERRIN, Agent.

SPANISH COMETERIES.

W. C. Bryant, in a letter from Madrid to the Evening Post, makes this reference:

Before the feast of All Saints the people of Madrid repair to the sepulchers of their kindred and friends to deck them with flowers.—The day before, all the autumnal roses are cropped, the dahlias, marigolds, and china asters broken from their stems, the beds of verbena and heliotrope rifled, and massive wreaths of the dry flowers of gnaphalium, or everlasting, made up with little inscriptions expressive of affection and sorrow, formed by the same flower dyed black. On the morning of the first of November—a rainy morning—cabs and carriages, the tops of which were gay with baskets of flowers, were passing each other in the streets, on their way to the cemeteries. In the afternoon, the clouds opening to let down a gleam of sunshine, I went out to two of these burial-grounds, lying just without the walls, to the north of Madrid. They are large inclosures, laid out in formal walks, planted with shrubs and flowers, and surrounded with a wall from fifteen to eighteen feet high, and as thick as the wall of a fort, with a broad portico in front, extending its entire length. This wall is the place of sepulture; it is pierced with five rows of cells or niches, one above the other, into which coffins are shoved endwise, and the openings are then closed with tablets, inscribed with epitaphs.—All along the portico, before these repositories of the dead, rows of large waxen tapers were burning, and the tablets were wreathed with every flower of the season. Servants were employed to watch the tapers, who trimmed them occasionally, and as they flared in the wind gathered the wax that dropped from them, frugally made it into balls, and laid it by.—People were sauntering from tomb to tomb, and a bell from a little chapel in the wall was giving out a hard, sharp, monotonous toll. A few persons passed into the chapel, and paid their devotions.

The affectionate remembrance of the dead is beautiful in any shape which it takes. And yet I could not help saying to myself, as I looked at all this: What a different sight will be here, when Time, as at length he must, shall cause this sepulchral wall to crumble in pieces! What rows of grinning skeletons will then be turned out to the air! The sleep of the dead in the bosom of earth is safer from such ghastly profanation.

ILLUSTRATION OF MAT. 3: 4.

"His meat was locusts and wild honey."

In Dr. Livingston's travels and researches in South Africa, p. 48, recently issued from the press, we find the following passage illustrating the diet of John the Baptist in the wilderness:

"We are much in want of animal food, which seems to be a greater necessary of life there than vegetarians would imagine. Supplies of this were necessarily so irregular that we were fain to accept a dish of locusts. These are quite a blessing in the country, so much so that the rain doctors sometimes promised to bring them by their incantations. The locusts are strongly vegetable in taste, the flavor varying with the plants on which they feed. There is a physiological reason why locusts and honey should be eaten together. Some are roasted and pounded into meal, which eaten with a little salt, is palatable. It will keep thus for months. Boiled they are disagreeable, but when they are roasted, I should much prefer locusts to shrimps, though I could avoid both if possible."

Repentance.—The following is a paragraph from an article by Rev. H. W. Beecher, on the subject of repentance:

The element of feeling in repentance is different in different men in different instances. Some people think that all repentance is just alike: that there is a certain capacity or faculty in the mind which a man uses for nothing else but to repent with; and that every act of repentance will be substantially like every other. This is not true. There is a repentance which results simply from a feeling of the intrinsic loveliness of what is good or what is bad. When a man strikes wrong keys on a piano, and a jangling discord breaks out and grates upon his ear, repentance for him is to draw back his fingers, and strike the right notes. Such repentance as this, transferred from physical to moral things, is rare. There are few minds that are keyed so high that their first apprehensions of divine truth are of this true kind. Men are not only wicked, but generally mean.

They usually begin to repent through their lower powers, and only gradually rise toward their higher. But the noblest repentance which a man can experience is from the feeling of the intrinsic excellence of goodness and truth over wickedness and wrong.

St. Patrick's Prayer.—A correspondent wishes us to publish the following prayer of St. Patrick:

"At Tara to-day! The strength of God pilot me, the power of God preserve me, the wisdom of God instruct me, the eye of God watch over me, the ear of God hear me, the word of God give me sweet talk, the hand of God defend me, the way of God guide me. Christ be with me, Christ before me, Christ after me, Christ in me, Christ under me, Christ over me, Christ on my right hand, Christ on my left hand, Christ on this side, Christ on that side, Christ at my back, Christ in the heart of every person to whom I speak, Christ in the mouth of every person who speaks to me, Christ in the eye of every person who looks upon me, Christ in the ear of every person who hears me. At Tara to-day I invoke the mighty power of the Trinity—Salvation is the Lord's—Salvation is Christ's. May thy salvation, O Lord, be always with us."

Liberal Donation to the Bible Cause.—Rev. E. Hart in a letter to the Editor of the Witness says:

"As to the Bible cause, I am getting along very well, though I find the labor hard, on account of the roughness of the roads. I have been through De Soto, Caddo, and a part of Bossier parishes, and have obtained $3,300.

I have been desirous to find some one person, who would give $10,000 in order to stock the Bible House with Bibles. I have seen some of the friends of the cause disposed to smile, when I have spoken of such a thing. But yet, to day I have accomplished it. Mr. John Pickett, has given his draft for $10,000. He is a resident of Bossier parish. It is true he is a man of great wealth, but he did this thing with a cheerfulness that served to attach one to him."

Many flowers open to the sun, but only one follows him in his course. Heart, be thou the sunflower; be not only open to thy God, but obey him too.

Details of the Arabia's News.

The following additional details of the Arabia's news we take from the New York papers:

The Sardinian Government is said to be annoyed that the Cagliari was given up to the English rather than to Sardinia. The preference is ascribed to the wish of the King of Naples to make the concession to a Power of the first rather than of the second rank.

A pleasant incident, during the Commemoration week at Oxford, was the conferring of honorary degrees. Of the candidates Lord Shaftesbury de Radcliffe was the first, and obtained a cordial welcome, while Lord Eversley and Sir Lawrence Peel had certainly no cause to complain of the coldness of their reception. But when General Inglis appeared, with the effects of indisposition still traceable upon his pallid features, thunders of applause burst from area and gallery, and for some time the proceedings were at a stand-still. Again and again the acclamations were renewed, and it was not until the hero of Lucknow had taken his seat for some time that silence was restored. Mr. Thomas Acland was then presented, and the list was closed by Mr. Justice Hallibarton. The author of Sam Slick was welcomed with great cheering and cries of "Now, then, Sam, give us a story," with similar good humored apostrophies.

The Constitutionnel looks unfavorably at the European politics of England. "The influence of England," it remarks, "in the general business of the world is maintained by the alliances she is able to contract on the Continent. It is with the aid of allies that she has founded her power, and that she maintains it even now, where so many elements of decay reveal themselves in her interior organization, and in her remote territories. If, then, it should be proved that this power, long considered the safeguard of European interests, exists only to impair them, will they not be liable to witness the loss of those sympathies of which she has such immediate need? Great Britain, surrounded with a circle of governments, civilized, but unsympathising, may end by being isolated in all diplomatic questions, and the world may cease to believe in her influence."

A Dr. des Brulais, who was a surgeon on the ship Regina Coeli, whose capture, with a cargo of mutinied African Apprentices, by an English vessel, we have already recorded, writes among other interesting particulars, that the whole cargo, consisting of 265 negroes, were "taken in Liberia with the consent of the President of that State, and most of them had received some education, being able to sign their engagement."

The Montenegrins retired, between the 14th and 20th ultimo, to their mountains, leaving at Grahovo only eighty men to protect the part of the booty which had not been sent to Cettinye. Notwithstanding their departure, the rayahs of Zahsi and Grahovo sent, on the 14th, an expedition against the village of Korenci, which was completely ravaged on the 15th and 16th. All the bodies of the Turks, which were lying about in great numbers near Grahovo, have been burnt.

A private letter, from a French gentleman, to a friend in Paris, states: "In spite of the official and unofficial details in the French journals, the activity in maritime armaments does not the less continue. A sum of 75,000,000f. is applied to the blindage (sheathing with iron plates) of the ships, and 12,000,000f. to the construction of steam machinery of 150, 600, and 900 horse-power. A naval man, of high standing in his profession, and of high official rank, said a few days back that France wanted about eighteen months more to transform the whole of her fleet, and to finish the ships in the docks. Then, he said, France may dispose of a maratime force such as she has not had since Louis XVI."

The death of Ary Scheffer occurred on the 15th ult. He had just returned from the funeral of the Duches of Orleans.

Lord Brougham has introduced into the House of Lords a bill for "Securing the Real Independence of Parliament." It is directed against the admission of bankrupts to seats in either House.

The weekly bank returns show a decrease of £101,494 in the bullion, and of £393,210 in active circulation; but an increase in the reserve of notes of £286,110, and of £2596 in rest. The increase of reserve notes is £315,110.

The papers announce the death of General Hawkes, Col. of the 6th Dragoon Guards.

The Morning Star says: It is understood that the Lord Advocate, Mr. Inglis, will accept the vacant office of Lord Justice Clerk on the Scotch Bench.

The ministers of the French Protestant Church, in Paris, have addressed to the Debats a strong protest against the recent expulsion, from Sweeden, of the six women converted to Catholicism. Five of these women are mothers of families.

An interesting anecdote is in circulation, connected with the charming fete recently given at Etiolles by Count Walewski, in honor of the visit of their Majesties. A fine little boy, son of the Count, attracted great notice, and the Emperor calling the child to him, asked: "What is your name, my boy?" The child replied "Charles Walewski?"—"Count d'Etiolles," adding the Emperor, completing the answer. His Majesty desired apparently, by conferring this title on the son, to express how highly he reckoned the services of the father as Minister of Foreign Affairs.

The Herald remarks on the great political benefits which the Atlantic telegraph would confer on a crisis like the present with the United States. The order transmitted to the Admiral on the West India station would have reached him, and the offensive operations on our cruisers been stopped in three days. Six weeks are now required for the same service, and opportunities for a collision, which may involve the two nations in a war, are left open.

The Athenæum understands that the United States Government contemplates sending out an Arctic expedition to follow up the late Dr. Kane's discoveries in Baffin's Bay.

Recent advices from the West Coast of Africa state that Her Majesty's steamer Medusa, Commander Bowden, had taken the richest prize that had been made on the coast for some years, a brig, with a cargo of rum and tobacco, slave-fittings and £6500 sterling in cash.

Dr. Judson's Burmese Testament.—The story of the preservation of this precious work, related by Mr. Judson, might adorn the page of romance. It was taken to Ava in manuscript and when Mr. Judson was thrown into prison, was secretly sewed up by his wife in a cushion too hard and unsightly to tempt the cupidity even of his jailers, and used by him as a pillow. When, at the close of seven months, he and his fellow sufferers were so rudely thrust into the inner prison, the old pillow fell to the share of one of the keepers, but finding it probably too hard for his use, he threw it back, and it came again into its owner's hands. It was again lost when he was again driven to Onng-pen-la; and, being stripped by one of the attendants, of the mat which was tied around it, the roll of hard cotton was again flung back into the prison. Here it was found by Moung Ink, who took it home as a memorial of his teacher, without suspecting its priceless contents. Several months after, the manuscript, which now makes a part of the Burmese Bible, was found within, uninjured.

BY TELEGRAPH.

Cotton.—The cotton market is stated to have closed firm and buoyant, after a week's business of considerable activity.

Of the 45,000 bales sold during the week 7000 bales were taken by exporters, and 8000 bales on speculation—the latter being included in the 10,000 bales sold on Friday the 25th.

LONDON FINANCIAL MATTERS.

There was much activity prevailing in the London money market, and full rates were commanded.

Consols are reported to have been active, and are quoted at 95¾ for account.

The weekly statement of the Bank of England, appearing in the London Royal Gazette, of Friday, the 25th ult., shows the bullion in its vaults to have increased £113,000 during the week.

The shares of the Transatlantic Telegraph company had fallen to fifty per cent. discount in the London market.

MANCHESTER TRADE.

More activity is reported to have been prevailing at Manchester and throughout the manufacturing districts of England, generally. Goods and yarns were both manifesting an advancing tendency.

FRANCE AND SPAIN AGAINST GREAT BRITAIN.

It was reported in England that in consequence of the demands which had been made upon Spain, in connection with the abolition of the slave trade, by the Government of Great Britain, the former had applied to France for protection; and that Louis Napoleon had promised to accord it.

THE SLAVE TRADE IN PARLIAMENT.

The British Parliament was engaged in elaborate and warm discussion of questions connected with the abolition of the slave trade.

THE LATE SEARCH QUESTION EXCITEMENT.

All fears of a rupture with this country in consequence of the late boarding and searching of our vessels by British cruisers in the Gulf of Mexico and the West Indian waters, had subsided, and the difficulty was regarded as settled.

INDIA.

The London Times speaks rather discouragingly of the state of affairs in India. It says that the British forces were surrounded on all sides by interminable difficulties, and seems doubtful if they will surmount them without prompt and large reinforcements of all kinds.

The overland mail had arrived in England previously to the departure of the Africa; but the intelligence it brought comprised nothing of importance.

The heat had been intense.

CHINA.

There was great distrust manifested by the foreign settlers in China, as to the probable course of events there; so that they were leaving.

POSTPONEMENT OF THE PARIS CONFERENCE.

Further sittings of the Paris Conference had been postponed for the present, in consequence of the illness of the representative of Turkey.

NEW YORK MARKETS.

Our cotton market has been firm to-day. The quotations for Middling Orleans are 12¾c. per pound.

Sugar is firm and advancing.

The Dark Places becoming Bright.—The labors of the Wesleyan missionaries in the Feejee islands, but recently the abode of cannibals, and the "habitations of cruelty," are resulting in the triumph of the gospel. One of the missionaries says, that at the last annual meeting returns were made of 14,000 who had embraced Christianity during the year. In our several circuits we have now 52,281 professing Christians. Our present staff of missionaries and native agents is utterly inadequate to supply them with Christian instruction and pastoral oversight," while there are immense fields of labor open among the heathen. "From the New Hebrides, where missionaries of the Reformed Presbyterian Church in Scotland are laboring, there are similar tidings. The entire population of Aneiteum, nearly 4,000, excepting about 200, have abandoned heathenism, professed Christianity, and placed themselves under instruction. There are four large churches, capable of containing more than 2,000 worshippers, more than fifty schools, and the whole Christian population attend school for an hour five mornings in the week, and on Sabbath afternoon. More than 1,400 natives have mastered the elementary books, and are reading the gospels.

Hospitality in the House of God.—Every church, says an exchange paper, that would prosper, must show proper attention to strangers. It should be seen that they are promptly and courteously provided with seats, and made to feel that they have a cordial welcome there. Kind looks should greet them as they come, and follow them as they go. Should they come again, let them meet with the same reception. And should they become constant worshippers there, let them be sought out and visited, not merely by the pastor, but by members of the church and society. Whether rich or poor, they should not be overlooked or neglected. They have claims as strangers, irrespective of all onward distinction. Let us see that they have prompt attention.

Let a man bring the matter home to himself. Suppose you are in a strange place. You go to the house of God on the Sabbath, but are treated as a stranger in the fullest sense of the word. You are not spoken to—you are not seated. We venture the assertion that when you go home, it will be to attend some other meeting, if there is one near; and if there is no other, you will be quite inclined to stay at home.

Saving a Man.—I would rather convince a man that he has a soul to save, and induce him to lixa up to that belief, than to bring him over to my opinion in whatever else besides.

Lowliness of mind is not a flower that grows in the field of nature, but is planted by the finger of God in a renewed heart, and learned of the lowly Jesus.

The journey through life is as Peter's walking on the water; and if Christ does not reach out his hand, we are every moment in danger of sinking.

Those seek themselves more than God, that stand upon a point of honor to excuse themselves from doing real service to God and their generation.

MR. SPURGEON'S PRAYER MEETING.

Perhaps a few useful hints may be gathered from the following account which Mr. Spurgeon gives of his prayer meeting. The interest and usefulness of a prayer meeting depend very much upon the spirit and manner in which it is conducted. Mr. Spurgeon says:

"Now I have the pleasure of seeing very generally a prayer meeting of 1,200 to 1,500 persons, and I don't know that we ever come below a thousand at prayer meeting, except it should be a terribly wet night; and I know the reason in a great measure is this, that when I call upon a brother to pray, he knows how long he is to pray; he is not to pray twenty minutes till we are tired, but he is to be short; and then he knows too that he is just wanted to ask God for what he wants, and not to preach a sermon. So he begins, and perhaps he makes many blunders, but he warms and improves as he proceeds. My good deacon was telling me this very day of what a friend said on Saturday night, at prayer meeting; he said, "O, Lord, I don't know, I'm so ignorant, I can't put six words together, properly; but take the meaning, Lord; take the meaning!"

"Well, that was a very sweet thing for him to say, 'take the meaning;' and he prayed for me in this fashion, 'Lord, bless our minister; help him when he comes to preach next Sunday, and may he preach the Lord Jesus Christ: grant that he may set the Lord Jesus Christ right a top of the Bible, and stand right behind Him himself, so that we can see nothing but the Lord Jesus and Him crucified!' Now when the people hear a prayer like that breathed by an earnest man, they will go to the prayer meeting."

An Ancient Dame.—There is an old lady now living in the town of Blooming Grove, Orange co., N. Y., by the name of Diana Brooks. She is one hundred and fourteen years old, and yet is intelligent and active, and walks half a mile to church every Sabbath. She was thirty-two years old when the Declaration of Independence was made. Mrs. Brooks is probably the oldest person now living in the United States.

Worldly Cares.—Strive against distracting worldly cares. Consider that thine heavenly Father careth for the—worldly cares discredit and disgrace thy holy profession—they are a needless, aye, a very hurtful burden to thy soul.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Ask the Physicians.—All medical men admit that intestinal worms cause the death of thousands of children annually, and entail many terrible diseases on those whom they do not summarily destroy. No apology, therefore, is needed for introducing a preparation like Wurm's Canadian Vermifuge, which, in three days, will annihilate and carry off Tape Worms, Thread Worms, Round Worms or Maw Worms, and at the same time so brace and intensify the digestive powers of the stomach, that a return of the disease is next to impossible.

☞ Be particular and remember the name "Wiser's Canadian Vermifuge." This is the only article that can be depended on. Remember this. For sale by

The Great Drawback to persons emigrating to the extreme Western country, is the great fear they have of the Fever and Ague—the most direful of all diseases. Every day we hear of persons attacked by this disease, and made helpless in a short time without any means of affording relief. In view of the great demand for a remedy, Drs. Hostetter has presented his celebrated "Bitters," whose curative powers for all diseases of the stomach have been universally acknowledged. The "Bitters," prepared after a long experience and deep study, have received the encomiums of the most eminent physicians, as well as all classes, from every part of our country. To those who doubt their many virtues, all we can say is, to try them, and judge for themselves, respectively.

HOME CIRCLE.

This very attractive and deservedly popular periodical is published monthly by Stevenson & Owen, Ag'ts, Nashville, Tenn., L. D. Huston, D. D., Editor, at $2 per annum, strictly in advance. Each number contains 64 pages royal octavo, embellished with one or more beautiful steel-plate engravings. The matter is mainly original, and of the most important and interesting character.

To ministers of the gospel, and all others who may be disposed to act as agents in procuring subscribers, a discount of 20 per cent. will be allowed on the subscription price.

As the patronage of this admirable issue has not yet been sufficient to meet the cost of its publication, it is therefore respectfully proposed that a prompt, energetic, and continuous effort be made in all the Conferences to increase the list of its patrons to at least twelve thousand!—Come brethren, you have but to submit the claims of the "Circle" to the Church and her friends, and this desirable object will be more than realized at an early day.

SUGAR AND MOLASSES Business has been suspended on the Levee, owing to the rain, and we have heard of no sales worth reporting.

FLOUR—The sales have been confined to a few small parcels, including 100 superfine St. Louis, in two lots, at $4 10 ⅞ bbl.

WHEAT Nothing doing.

CORN The market is dull and drooping. The only sale we hear of is 250 sacks yellow, at 65c. ⅞ bush., showing a further decline.

OATS AND BRAN—We have heard of no transactions of any moment.

PORK Mess retailing at $16 @ 16 25 ⅞ bush.

BACON AND LARD No transactions reported.

COFFEE Market very dull and nothing done to-day.

MONETARY AND FINANCIAL.

It rained steadily during the entire morning, and the little business that has to be done was consequently very much impeded for the time. In fact the day has almost been a blank. Some few unimportant negotiations were made at 7 (a 8 for four to six month's paper, and 9 for eight months. There are very few prime signatures offering.

The letters to-day from the country complain of too much rain, and they are all of the same tenor. The Cotton does not henceforth require a drop of moisture. To-day's rain appears to be general.

We have no movement to notice in Stocks.

DR. T. McGOWN'S

SARSAPARILLA AND IODINE OF POTASI,

THE GREAT

BLOOD PURIFIER AND HEALTH RESTORER,

Prepared from fresh root, the only kind worthy the confidence of physicians or the public. Old, imported root is inert and worthless, facts too much overlooked by the profession. According to many, this compound is nearer a Panacea or Catholicon than any; and its components have been highly extolled by some of the most distinguished physicians of Europe and America, viz: Sir Wm. Fordyce, Brodie, Turgol, Colndet, Baron, Bardsley, Manson, Alcorn, Hendrin, Bell, Harrison, Channing, Hildreth, etc.—for the cure of Scrofula or King's Evil, White Swelling, Gout, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Dropsy; diseases of the Kidneys, Liver, Lungs, Skin—Erysipelas—Ulcers, Old and Obstinate Sores (McGown's Ointment should also be used, applied locally); Blotches, Pimples on the face, Ringworm, Tetter, Chronic Sore Eyes, Scald Head, Leprosy, Ocker; Pains of the Bones, Joints; Spinal Complaints Lumbago, Chronic Bronchitis, Tonsilitis, Hooping Cough, Bleeding from the Lungs, Typhoid Pneumonia, Scarlet Fever, Erysipelas; Dyspepsia, Jaundice; Glandular Tubercles, especially of the neck; Cachexy, Palsy, Tumors, Cancerous, Ulcer; Enlargements of the Liver, Spleen, Testes; Syphilis, in all its forms. Sir Wm. Fordyce says of Sarsaparilla, when exhibited in combination, refreshed and enacted by long attacks of the venereal, or by the abuse of mercury, it is the "great restorer of the appetite, flesh, color, strength and vigor." Professor Bell, lecturing on the Venereal, says of Iodide of Potash, it is a "powerful, safe and benign remedy, and its salutary operation is aided by preparations of Sarsaparilla."

Female Complaints.—Amenorrhea, Dysmenorrhea, Irregularities, Suppression, Diseases of the Womb, Leucorrhea, Tumors, Enlargement of the Uterus, Breasts; Ulcers, etc. Impurities of the Blood or System, and all diseases dependent thereon. Make the skin clear and smooth—an object of interest with the ladies. It should be used in the spring to purify the blood and prevent sickness.

McGown's Essence Tar—A certain cure for Bowel Complaints, as Diarrhea, Dysentery, Ehe, etc.

McGown's Dogwood and Iron—A permanent cure for Chills, Ague Cake, Night Sweats, Debility, Dyspepsia, etc.

McGown's Golden Pectoral—For the relief of Coughs, Colds, Consumption, etc.

McGown's Stomach Bitters—A pleasant invigorating Tonic, to be used before meals in Dyspepsia, Debility, etc.

McGown's Ointment—Never known to fail curing old Sores, Cancers, Chronic Sore Eyes, etc.

The above prepared and sold in Memphis by H. S. HUGHES, Druggist, No. 343 Main st.

Agents.—J. Wright & Co., and Sickles & Co., New Orleans; J. Hanay, Galveston, Texas; S. W. Huff, Warrington, Florida.

POETRY.

A LITTLE WHILE.

BY REV. DR. BONAR.

Beyond the smiling and the weeping
I shall be soon;
Beyond the waking and the sleeping,
Beyond the sowing and the reaping,
I shall be soon.
Love, rest, and home!
Sweet home!
Lord, tarry not, but come.

Beyond the blooming and the fading,
I shall be soon;
Beyond the shining and the shading,
Beyond the hoping and the dreading,
I shall be soon.
Love, rest, and home!
Sweet home!
Lord, tarry not, but come.

Beyond the rising and the setting,
I shall be soon;
Beyond the calming and the fretting,
Beyond remembering and forgetting,
I shall be soon.
Love, rest, and home!
Sweet home!
Lord, tarry not, but come.

Beyond the parting and the meeting,
I shall be soon;
Beyond the farewell and the greeting,
Beyond the pulse's fever beating,
I shall be soon.
Love, rest, and home!
Sweet home!
Lord, tarry not, but come.

Beyond the frost-chain and the fever,
I shall be soon;
Beyond the rock-waste and the river,
Beyond the ever and the never,
I shall be soon.
Love, rest, and home!
Sweet home!
Lord, tarry not, but come.

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

THE FRIGHTENED BOY.

About three years ago there was a big ship full of people coming from New York to California. All sorts of people were on the ship—gentlemen and ladies, old folks and young, boys and girls, and two or three little babies. There was one little boy named Thomas, but everybody called him Tommy. He was a fine, ruddy-faced, handsome, noble-looking boy about nine years old. His father was dead, but his mother was with him on the ship. Tommy would spend the time in running about from one part of the ship to another, and talking to the sailors, and sometimes he would stand and look out at the great waters and watch the mighty waves as they rolled.

One day as Tommy was standing looking over the side of the ship, one of the sailors, thinking to frighten him a litte, caught him up into his arms and said he would throw him into the sea. The sailor was only in fun, but Tommy thought he was in earnest, and he screamed with fright, and was thrown into convulsions. The sailor then put him down, but poor Tommy did not get over his fright. His senses were all frightened away, and never came back any more. He was carried to his mother, but he did not know her. O, how badly did his mother feel when she found her boy's mind was gone for ever! And how do you suppose the thoughtless sailor felt when he saw what he had done? He must have felt unhappy.

They brought Tommy to San Francisco, and then took him to Stockton, where there is a great house built for people who have lost their senses. It is called the Insane Asylum. The Editor of the Pacific Methodist went to see it last week, and put something about it in the paper.

They put Tommy in the Asylum, and they were in hopes the doctor could cure him, so that he could go back to his mother with his mind all right again. They put a straight jacket on him, and had men to watch him so that he could not hurt himself. His mother would often write to ask if Tommy was getting well, but he did not grow any better, though the doctor was very kind to him, and did all he could for him. It was soon known that Tommy would never get well, that he never would be able to take care of himself, or have his senses any more. How sad must his loving mother have been when they told her this!

Two years ago the Editor saw Tommy in the Asylum. Last week when he was there, he asked, where is Tommy? He is dead, said the doctor. And so our Heavenly Father took poor little Tommy away from earth, where he would only suffer all his life; and as Tommy was a good, obedient, affectionate boy before he lost his mind, I have no doubt he went to heaven, where he will always be happy.

Now, children, do you ever try to frighten one another? Do the large boys and girls ever try to frighten the little ones? It is very wrong for you to do so. And it is very wrong for teachers and parents to try to frighten children. And it is a very silly thing too. Nobody but a blockhead will do it, though some think it funny to do so.

PRAYING BETTER THAN STEALING.

Some poor families lived near a large wood wharf. In one of the cabins was a man who, when he was sober, took pretty good care of his family; but the grog shop would get his earnings, and then they suffered. In consequence of a drunken frolic, he fell sick. The cold crept in his cabin, and but one stick was left in his cellar.

One night he called his eldest boy, John, to the bedside, and whispered something in his ear. "Can't do it, sir," said John, aloud.—"Can't; why not?" asked his father angrily. "Because I learned at the Sabbath-school, 'Thou shalt not steal,'" answered John. "And did you not learn, 'Mind your parents, too?' "Yes, sir," answered the boy. "Well, then, mind and do what I tell you." The boy did not know how to argue with his father, for his father wanted him to go in the night and steal some sticks from the wood wharf; so John said to his father, "I can pray to-night for some wood; it's better than stealing I know." And when he crept up into the loft where his straw bed was, he did go to God with his prayers. He prayed the Lord's prayer, which his Sabbath-school teacher taught him, only he put something in about the wood, for he knew God could give wood as well as "daily bread."

The next noon when he came home from school, what do you think he caught sight of, the first thing after turning the corner? Half a cord of wood before the door—his door. Yes, there it was. His mother told him the overseers of the poor sent it; but he did not know who they were. He believed it was God; and so it was.—[Child's Paper.

"All that is great, and permanent and salutary on earth is slow in its development. Hence patience has always been a prominent feature of wisdom."

Some sins I have forgot; many I remember, and these so heinous, that I cannot forgive myself for them. It is well for me that God, who forgets none, forgives all.—Rev. T. Adams.

THE MAIDEN'S PRAYER.

BY J. G. WHITTIER.

She rose from her delicious sleep
And put away her soft brown hair,
And, in a tone as low and deep
As love's first whisper, breathed a prayer;
Her snow-white hands together pressed,
Her blue eyes sheltered in the lid,
The folded linen on her breast
Just swelling with the charms it hid.

And from her long and flowing dress
Escaped a bare and snowy foot,
Whose step upon the earth did press
Like a snow flake, white and mute;
And then from slumbers soft and warm,
Like a young spirit fresh from heaven,
She bowed that slight and matchless form,
And humbly prayed to be forgiven.

Oh, God! if souls unsoiled as these,
Need daily mercy from thy throne—
If she upon her bended knees,
Our holiest and our purest one,
She with a face so clear and bright,
We deem her some stray child of light,
If she, with those soft eyes and tears,
Day after day, in her young years,
Must kneel and pray for grace from thee,
What far, far deeper need have we!
How hardly, if she win not heaven,
Will our wild errors be forgiven!

THE TRINITY.

"Little girls," said Miss Bell, to her Sabbath-school class, "what do you understand by the Trinity?" "Three persons in one God; the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost," answered the children.

"Do you understand how there can be three persons in one God, and all equal?" asked Miss Bell. "No, ma'am; do you think any one does?"

"I suppose you do, ma'am," said Sophie Johnson. "No," said Miss Bell, "I do not understand how the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit are one; and perhaps I never shall if I get to heaven, and after I have been there ten thousand years.' This may be one of the mysteries into which the angels desire to look and are not able. But do we not constantly believe in a great many things we do not understand? You don't understand how the flowers grow; or why one kind of seed always produces one kind of flower. You know the sun and the rain make them grow, but how you cannot tell."

An old lady in one of our western villages saw the telegraph posts, and the wires passing through the village. And she said, "They tell me that thing carries a message from New York to Buffalo in no time at all, but I don't believe it, and I never will believe it. It is not possible."

One day a letter came to the old lady, and on opening it she found it was a message by telegraph, saying, "Your son Robert is very ill; come immediately." She asked a great many questions as to how the message came, and when she heard that the "wires" brought it, and when she saw the date only an hour before the time she was reading it, she said, "It is a hoax. It isn't possible a message could come to me that way."

So she staid at home. In two or three days she got a letter, saying, "Robert has just breathed his last. Oh how he longed to see his mother. We telegraphed you to come, and if you recoived it, and had started immediately, you might have seen him before he died."

Oh how the old lady reproached herself.—After that, she believed in a thing she could not understand.

Now we have the word of God telling us of many things which our poor weak minds can no more understand than the old lady could the telegraph, or the little fly who crawls on my book can understand the words printed there; but we know they are true, because the God of all truth tells us they are. We have only to believe, and in many cases we must be contented not to understand, saying, with the psalmist, "Such knowledge is too wonderful for me, I cannot attain unto it."—American Messenger.

ONLY ONE BRICK UPON ANOTHER.

Edwin was one day looking at a large building which they were putting up opposite to his father's house. He watched the workmen from day to day, as they carried up the brick and mortar, and then placed them in their proper order. His father said to him:

"Edwin, you seem to be very much taken up with the bricklayers; pray what might you be thinking about? Have you any notion of learning the trade?"

"No," said Edward, smiling, "but I was just thinking what a little thing a brick is, and yet that great house is built by laying one brick upon another."

"Very true, my boy; never forget it. Just so it is with all great works. All your learning is only one little lesson added to another. If a man could walk all around the world, it would be by putting one foot before the other. Your whole life will be made up of one little moment after another. Drop added to drop makes the ocean."

Learn from this not to despise little things. Learn, also, not to be discouraged by great labor. The greatest labor becomes easy if divided into parts. You could not jump over a mountain, but step by step takes you to the other side. Do not fear, therefore, to attempt great things. Always remember that the whole of the great building is only one brick upon another.

THE END OF PREACHING.

There are preachers, by myriads and majorities, and deeply pious ones two, that never once in all their lives distinctly concentrated their purposes to the single point of converting men. Their efforts are to finish an eloquent sermon, to develop theological or Biblical truth, to thrill esthetically an audience, to pour forth general religious emotions, to spread a popular fame, to gather crowds to build a large church, etc. Verily, those have often their reward, namely, success in their objects. But here is a lonesome preacher, who does not object to all these; but, with or without them, by study, by closet, by pulpit, by pastoral work, some or all, he means to convert souls, and just so many as he can. Where this is not attained, all the other success does not comfort him a penny; he goes off crest-fallen and disappointed, indignant at the devil and himself. He will not stay there where Satan has beaten him but he will go where, please God, he can get some souls.—Methodist Quarterly.

ANOTHER TOOTH WILL ANSWER AS WELL.

Another sorrow has fallen upon Saleruo.—"No sooner," says the London Daily News, "has the panic occasioned by the earthquake begun to cease, than the population are again alarmed by another sad event. The tooth of St. Matthew, the Bishop, one of the precious relics of the Church, has been stolen. It disappeared during the agitation consequent on the late disaster, and this incident is only another proof of that moral disorder which is often perceptible in times of great social distress. The bishop has ordered the excommunication of the sinner, but to no effect; processions with torches have been made, all equally useless; the precious relic, which has saved Salerno from so many misfortunes, is not to be found."

THE GOSPEL NO ILLUSION.

It is in vain, says Rogers, to tell men the gospel is an illusion. If it be an illusion, a very variety of experience proves it to be inveterate. At the feet of Christ guilty humanity, of diverse races and nations, for eighteen hundred years, has come to pour forth its faith and love its sorrows, and finds there "that peace which the world can neither give nor take away." Myriads of aching heads and weary hearts have found, and will find, repose there, and have invested Him with veneration, love and gratitude, which will never be paid to any other human Being.

Christ crucified is the library which triumphant souls will be studying into all eternity.—Stillingfleet.

THE GREATEST
Medical Discovery
OF THE AGE.

MR. KENNEDY, of Roxbury, has discovered in the root of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures

EVERY KIND OF HUMOR,
From the worst Scrofula down to a Common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases, both Cancer humor. He has now in his possession over one hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.

Two bottles are warranted to cure a running sore mouth.
One to three bottles are said to cure the worst kind of pimples on the face.
Two or three bottles will clear the system of boils.
Two bottles are warranted to cure the worst canker in the mouth and stomach.
Three to five bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Erysipelas.
One or two bottles are warranted to cure all humor in the eyes.
Two bottles are warranted to cure ringing of the ears and pimples among the hair.
Four to six bottles are warranted to cure corns and running ulcers.
One bottle will remove any tetter on the skin.
Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of ringworm.
Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the most desperate case of rheumatism.
Three to four bottles are warranted to cure the rheum.
Five to eight bottles will cure the worst case of scrofula.
A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the above directions are taken.
Nothing looks more impossible to those who have in vain tried all the worthless nostrums of the day, as a common weed growing in the pastures, and abounding in our walks, should cure every humor in the system, yet it is those facts. If you have a humor, it has to start. There are no IFS nor ANDS, humor has about it nothing some cases, but all yield. I have cured a thousand bottles of it in the vicinity of Boston. I know the effects of it in every case. It has already done much good in Roxbury. I cured a case done in Massachusetts to give it to children in a year and a half from one only. I have seen poor, puny, worthy young children, whose flesh was soft and flabby, restored to a perfect state of health by one bottle.
In those who are afflicted in a less degree, one bottle will always cure it. It gives great life in plethoric weakness. Some who have taken it had been costive for years, but have been regulated by it. Where the body is bound up so as to be costive, but where there is any derangement in the system, it will cause very singular feelings, but you need not be alarmed; they always disappear in from four days to a week. It is a perfect blood purifier, and the result from its use. On the contrary, when that is done you will feel yourself like a new person. I defy any one to find extravagant accounts of it that ever misled others.

PASTORAL ADDRESS

OF THE

General Coference of the M. E. Curch, South.

BELOVED BRETHREN: In addressiag you from our present session, as your pastors and "servants for Jesus' sake," we congratulato you upon the peace and prosperity which distinguish our history as a Christian people.

We rejolee in our unity as to doctrine, and our freedom from all disturbing questions, both as to theology and government. Our ministry still preach a free and full salvation—justification by faith—the witness of the Spirit—the necessity of a clean heart and a holy life—and the Great Head of the Church still attests the approval of our plans and labors, in that great nnmber believs and turn unto the Lord." We have increased in membership—grown strong in all the resources which give influence among men or entail responsibility to God. Cherished and strengthened as ministers by your endorsement and support of our ecclesiastical government, your prompt co-operation in all the labors hitherto projected to diffuse religious knowledge and to perpetnate the institutions of the Church, we now most confidently and confidently invoke your continued sympathy and union of effort.

Satisfied of your loyalty to Methodism as a system, and persnaded ourselves of its wisdom and efficiency, we would enter afresh into covenant with you to carry ont its schemes of usefulness; to hring our personal experience up to the standard of its doctrines, and to illustrate, in life and action, the purity of its principles and the catholicity of its designs. If there be evils among us, either denominational or personal, they are not sequences of our doctrines or polity, but hava resulted from the fact that some of our rules have grown powerless from long desuetnde, or that vital institutions have lost their charm through our own spiritual decline. These, aad kindred evils, lie beyond the reach of legislation. No enactments of a General Conference can give strength to a feeble faith, restore tha joys forfeited by infidelity to duty, or make spiritual exercises attractive to a backslidden heart or to a formal professor. We do not believe in the policy of ignoring a scriptural duty, or relaxing discipline, because wrong-doing haa grown common and popular, nor would we surrender a prudential regulation long approved, largely useful, always conservative, because a few opposed to the thing itself, seek its virtual abolition by repealing the obligation to observe it.

If class-meeting, for example, be, as we believe, a good institution—important to the spirituality of the Church, we cannot, we ought not to revoke our laws upon the subject, and, by making a stand once upon it, voluntarily commit onrselves to the absurdity of saying or admitting that, with all its advantages as a means of grace, those who neglect are as acceptable and praiseworthy as those who observe it. While, therefore, we have been memorialized by a law, (aud we are glad to say by very few of our people,) for some modification of this and other peculiarities of our economy, for the reasons just given, and others that might be added, we have inaugurated no important changes in our book of Discipline. We return it to you untouched, sava with a re-arrangement of its sections and a faw verbal alterations.

The only exception to this remark is to be found in the almost unanimous vote of this body, recommending the Annual Conferences to concur with us in expunging from our General Rules the rule concerning "the buying and selling of men, women, and children, with an intention to anslave tham." Tha question of slavery has long agitated the Church and the country. Tha Southern Church, while yet in connection with the North, avowed her conviction that the subject belonged to Cæsar, and that ecclesiastical legislation upon it is contrary to the teachings of Christ and the example of the apostles. Her counsels were unheeded, her remonstrances disregarded, aud the unfortunate policy which first obtruded it into the legislation of the Church maintained itthers, notwithstanding history accumulated evidence amounting to demonstration, that its continuance was the occasion of strife and trouble, alienation and discord. Its simple presence in our book of laws, whilo the Methodist Episcopal Church in this great country was a unit, was the pretext which fanaticism employed during long years to insult our feelings, and, in the memorabla Conference of 1844, to outrage our rights. When the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, under the authority of the General Conference, and with the consent aud approval of our people, organized a separate and independent jurisdiction, we found the Discipline still encumbered with the rule and the section on slavery. The testimony against slavery was decided, although gratuitous; but the legislation in reference to it, contradictory and absured. The section was anomalous. While denouncing slavery as an evil and pledging the Church to its extirpation, it provided by statuto for its allowance and perpetuation. Four years ago we annihilated the chapter, and rid tho book of its self-condemning enactments upon the subject. Tho General Rulo still remained under the protection of tho restrictive articlo of the Constitution which forbids a change without a three-fourths majority of all the members of the several Annual Conferences, and a two-thirds majority of the General Conference. A resolution from the Alabama Conference recommending tha expunction of the rule passed around, but the failure of three Conferences to vote, made it somewhat doubtful whether the requisite majority had been obtained. This body, determined to protect the Constitution, waived the right of immediate action and, originating the question of expunging, by an almost unanimous vote, now appeals to the Annual Conferences to concur. Of the issue there is no doubt. The rule will be stricken out by legitimate authority from the book of Discipline. This movement, we feel, is demanded by loyalty as citizens under the Constitution of the country; by consistency as to our position and oft-repeated declaration; by fidelity to the people whom we serve, and the institutions among which we live. The rule itself was expletive—having no application to an existing state of things, or to one likely to exist. And if, contrary to expectation, the African slave-trade should ever be revived in the face of the law which declares it to be piracy, we have rule and authority enough by which to hold our membership to a rigid responsibility. Nor would we fail in this, sustained as we would be by our own convictions of duty, the law of the land, and what we know to be the moral sentiment of the people among whom we dwell. We rejoice, ourselves, and confidently expect your sympathy and approbation, that Southern Methodism at last stands disentangled from this vexed and vexing question, erect upon a scriptural basis—at liberty to circulate everywhere in our bounds her book of laws, without note or comment; and that a rule of doubtful interpretation no longer exists to embarrass our ministers and friends, or to justify the suspicion and assaults of our enemies. We have surrendered to Cæsar the things which are his, and holding ourselves to be debtors to "the wise and the anwise, the bond and the free," we can now, unchallenged by the jealous and distrustful, preach Christ alike to the master and the servant, secure in the confidence and affection of the one and the other.

The relation of master and servant is recognized in the New Testament, and the duties of each prescribed. The observance of these moral rules we regard as integral to the morality and piety of our members. The benign spirit of our holy religion not only demands that masters should render to their servants that which is just and equal in wages, as to food, raiment, and shelter, but that religious instruction should be provided alike for servants as for children. The gospel is God's gift to the black man as well to the white, and Christian masters should see to it that all their dependents are regularly supplied with the preaching of the word, and all the privileges of the Church of God.

The salvation of the colored race in our midst, as far as human instrumentality can secure it, is the primary duty of the Southern Church. Let us earnestly seek to meet our responsibilities, and then, whatever "evil thing" ignorance and prejudice may say of us, we shall have the testimony of a good conscience, and the blessing of Him who is Judge of all.

The Publishing House has been re-organized, and arrangements made which will greatly facilitate the diffusion of our books. This we regard as one of the leading interests of the Church—entitled to the patronage of our people, not only on denominational grounds, but as an effective instrumentality of general usefulness. While this great Southern institution has lived, and, considering its recent establishment and the late financial distress of the country, done well, its present measure of support is not equal to its merits nor sufficient for its effective and enlarged development. We desire to see the House not only self-sustaining and maintaining an honorable credit as a business enterprise, but so endowed with money and patronage that the largest demand for religious literature may be met at the lowest rates. "Wisdom and knowledge are the stability of our times;" and these elements of strength, influence and perpetuity must be diffused by the pulpit and the press—mainly perhaps by the latter. The experience of the last four years clearly indicates that our experiment in publishing will prove a triumphant success, honorable alike to our patriotism and our piety, if we can but command the ready, liberal and united support of the several sections of our wide-spread Methodism. Let us have one heart and one mind, and the Publishing House, with its Depositories, will bring religious knowledge into such general circulation among us as greatly to promote the ends of our Church organization. We shall grow wiser, stronger, more active, and, with enlarged views and increasing faith, we will more rapidly fulfill our mission on the earth.

Our periodicals, too, we must commend to your patronage. Strange to say, the circulation of our Church papers is extremely limited. With five hundred thousand white members, and eight papers, located for the convenience of the people, we do not count fifty thousand subscribers. The simple statement of this fact is the strongest argument we can address to the preachers for increased activity as agents, and the most urgent appeal we can make to our people for their more liberal support. These weekly records of Church plans, of revivals, of triumphant deaths, of missionary success, if they were more widely diffused, could but stimulate the hopes, multiply the prayers, improve the liberality of our Zion. The great connectional bonds which bind us together would grow stronger, as the Christian sympathies of our extended communion learned to thrill with the tidings from every section of our common Methodism. The strong would rally to help the weak, and the weak, encouraged by the assurance that they were cared for, would struggle in hope, and the little one would become a thousand. Take the Church papers, brethren—read them—inform yourselves as to the plans and wants, the labors and achievements of the Church at home and abroad. This is duty: in the performance of it there is a great reward.

The religious training of the young—as this duty is involved in household piety, family government, Sabbath-school instruction, cannot be exaggerated in its importance; and while we rejoice in an increasing attention to this subject in some places, we can but mourn that there should be neglect and short-coming anywhere. The future history of the Church—nay, of Christianity itself—is bound up with the moral instruction of the rising generation. No department of labor is more inviting, so full of promise, or will yield so large a dividend. Here, he that reapeth may overtake him that soweth, and the sower and the reaper may rejoice together in the abundance of the harvest.

Wherever the Patriarchs pitched a teat, they reared an altar, and surely Christian habitations should have their morning and evening devotions. Children, themselves, an heritage from the Lord, should grow up in an atmosphere of piety. Dedicated to God in baptism—taught by parental lips the doctrines and principles of our holy religion—trained in Sabbath-school—made familiar with the ordinances of the sanctuary—who does not believe that they would grow up reverent and moral, and that the probabilities of their becoming pious would be increased a hundred-fold? O if the Church were roused to estimate aright her duty and responsibility in this regard, we should expect our ministers to count our converts by the thousand, and to see the Church clear as the sun, fair as the moon, and terrible as an army with banners.

We hope to see the day when, at every regular preaching-place in the ample rounds of our itinerant ministry, there shall be a well-organized Sunday-school, with an efficient corps of teachers, a well-filled library, and a public moral sentiment in the congregation on which the institution may rely for sympathy and support as occasion may require. We will only add, let the children in every charge be furnished with the Sunday-school Visitor, and the Editor be allowed to feel that, in his labor of love, the Church accredits his agency as one potent for good in the present and future.

We feel that we ought not to tax your patience, brethren, by a long address, and therefore we forbear to go into details.

We have great reason to thank God and take courage. An improved personal experience, and a pious appropriation of our resources, will show us greater things than the past records. Our responsibilities are great: let us be found faithful. While we engage more heartily and bountifully in the work of education, moral and literary—in missions, domestic and foreign—in the distribution of books and tracts—and foster with a more encouraging patronage our periodical literature, let us beware of the error of the Corinthian Church, and see to it that we do not substitute increasing knowledge, external activity, and bounteous gifts, for personal faith, the witness of the Spirit, and individual communion with God. None but a holy ministry and a spiritual membership can work our peculiar economy. Numbers, wealth, and intelligence will encumber its motions and dilute its energies, unless all are vitalized and sanctified by the presence and power of an inward, powerful, spiritual piety.

Heaven send the baptism of the Holy Ghost upon the pulpit and the press—the preachers and their congregations! May there be a new and more absolute consecration of ourselves as a Christian people to the glory of God in the service of man—a revival of personal and relative religion in every Methodist household—and a more universal and earnest effort after that scriptural holiness which it is our privilege to possess and our providential mission to spread over all the earth. Amen, and Amen.

SAMUEL FINLEY BREEZE MORSE.

The name of Professor Morse will ever be associated with the invention of the magnetic telegraph, of whom somebody well said, "If Franklin brought the lightning from heaven, Morse tamed it and taught it the English language." Tha first telegraph wires were posted between Washington and Baltimore in 1847, and the first message sent was, "What hath God wrought!" As this message was suggested by a young lady of Hartford, Connecticut, the governor of that state had it engraved in letters of gold and hung in the rooms of the Historical Society.

It is interesting to see what use the telegraph has lately been put to. At many of the offices in New York and other places, messages have been sent to all parts of the country, conveying the glad tidings of conversions, and many of them have been very touching. What can be more so than the following? "Dear mother, the revival continues, and I too have been converted." "Tell my sister, I have come to the cross of Christ." "I have found peace and joy in believing." "The lost one has returned to his Father's house." "Mother, blessed be God, your prayers are answered in the conversion of your son." Telegraphic communications have also been held between prayer meetings in different and distant cities; fulfilling that remarkable prophecy of Zachariah, "And the inhabitants of one city shall go to another, saying, Let us go speedily to pray before the Lord, and to seek the Lord of hosts: I will go also."

When the Lord shall see fit to use these great instruments, which the world has made and is using for its business, for the carrying on of His kingdom, how "it will then break forth on the right hand and on the left;" for "the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord as the waters cover the sea."

ATHEISM OF BARON VON HUMBOLDT.

Besides the regular members of the University, there are in Berlin quite a number of celebrated scholars and authors who move in the professional circles, and belong to the Academy of Sciences, which adjoins the University buildings. Of these, I need only mention Alexander Von Humboldt, the world-renowned patriarch of Natural Sciences, the intellectual mirror of the physical cosmos, the living wonder of the age. In his eighty-seventh year—for he was born in 1769, the same year with Napoleon and Wellington, and within a few months of the elder Schleiermacher; and the younger Hegel—he still speaks and writes with the freshness of youth and the vigor of manhood, and seems to defy the wasting power of time upon the mortal frame. He never was married but to science. He talks with the same rapidity and fulness of information as ever; reads and answers some four thousand letters annually; dines almost daily with the King of Prussia, and performs, contrary to the wishes of his royal friend, the duties of chamberlain in his turn, refusing the indulgence of a chair; he is incessant in polite attention to friends and distinguished strangers during the day, and spends the half of the night in severe scientific labor, allowing his body only a few hours of rest.

What a melancholy reflection that such a master of all the mysteries of nature, the daily companion of a pious king, and, in a moral point of view, a kind-hearted, benevolent, and amiable gentleman of the highest finish should, like Germany's greatest poet, Goethe, content himself with the wonders of nature, without rising to nature's God, and remain indifferent to the greater mysteries of grace. I may do him injustice, but I cannot remember now to have read even the name of God—not to speak of Christ—in the three volumes so far published of his Cosmos, except in an approving quotation from a lost work of the heathen Aristotle, as preserved by the heathen Cicero, (de natura Deorum, ii. 37.) We mean the sublime passage that puts to shame many a nominally Christian philosopher: "Nobody, does Aristotle observe, that if there were beings who had always lived under ground, in convenient, nay, magnificent dwellings, adorned with statues and pictures, and everything which belongs to prosperous life; if, then, these beings should be told of the being and power of the gods, and should come up through open fissures from their secret abodes to the places which we inhabit; if they should suddenly behold the starry heavens, the changing moon, the rising and setting of the stars, and their eternally ordained and unchangeable courses, they would exclaim with truth: There are gods, and such great things are their works."

How much is it to be desired that this truly remarkable man, before closing his unrivalled scientific career, should bow down in child-like adoration and faith before the one and true God, whose living presence alone gives strength, order, and beauty to the works of his hand, and whose glory shines from the starry heavens above us, from the solid earth beneath us, and from the rational will within us, from the book of nature, and the book of history, but, brightest of all, from the Book of books, and the face of His only begotten Son, full of grace and of truth.—Schaff's Germany.

CONVERSION OF AUGUSTINE.

By degrees, from amid the haze of Platonic ideas, the living truth dawned on his sight, and the splendid but unreal visions which had charmed him before, retreated into shadow. He had been undergoing salutary, moral and mental discipline. Sorrow, disappointment, and sin had made him weary and heavy laden. Speculative doubts had given way. Conscience upbraided him. The account of some who had renounced the world's pomp and vanity, brought on a crisis. Sitting with his friend (Alypius) who had heard the recital too, he started up, saying, "What ails us? What is it? What did you hear?" The unlearned take the kingdom of heaven by force; while we, with our learning, wallow in flesh and blood." His tones, his gestures, his face showed the intensest emotion, and Alypius looked on in silent wonderment. Augustine rushed into the garden that adjoined the house, followed by Alypius. He tried by one strong, determined effort of will to break his chain. He struggled to be free; his soul dashed against the bars of her prison, only to fall down, exhausted and bleeding by the effort. His agony and misery found vent in tears; and, prostrated by a sense of utter helplessness, he fell on his knees, and cried, "How long? how long? To-morrow and to-morrow? Why not now? Why is there not this hour an end to my uncleanness?" A child's voice is heard from a neighboring house, singing, "tolle, lege; tolle, lege." (Take and read; take and read.) Checking his tears, he arose, and going within, took up St. Paul's Epistles. His eye fell on the passage in the Epistle to the Romans: "Not in rioting and in drunkenness," etc.; "but put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ." The words met his case. They sounded in his ear like a voice from heaven, seconding the voice of conscience in drowning the clamors of the flesh, and pointing to a divine helper to strengthen his struggling will to make the grand resolve. Animated by the divine command, and nerved by a power not his own, the prodigal son sinks into his Father's arms, and the great crisis is over. Peace entered his troubled bosom; the storm was hushed; the clouds vanished; sunlight flooded his soul, and lit up his face with a tranquil joy.

Alypius took the book from the hand of Augustine, and read the passage, and what followed, till he came to "Him that is weak in the faith receive ye," and the gentler, weaker Alypius, who, with almost womanly confiding, had clung to the stronger arm of Augustine for many a year, grasps it still, and they enter together the heaven of rest.

Their joy is not yet full till another heart shares it. Gladness, exultation, triumph, praise, are the words by which Augustine describes the emotions of his mother's heart, when she heard from his own and Alypius's lips the joyful tidings. Long had she sown in tears, but her harvest of gladness was now come, and the bitterness of the cup she had been drinking for long years, was forgotten in the ecstacy of unearthly joy, which He who had put into her hand the chalice of sorrow, had hid at the bottom beneath the wormwood draught.

Living Age.

PROCRASTINATION.—Near the close of his life, Patrick Henry laid his hand on the Bible, and said to a friend, "Here is a book worth more than all others; yet it is my misfortune never to have read it with proper attention until lately." William Pitt, when he came to die, said, "I fear that I have, like many others, neglected my religious duties too much to have any ground to hope that they can be efficacious on my deathbed."

When you retire to bed, think over what you have been doing during the day.

PORCELAIN AND EARTHENWARE.

Porcelain is distinguished from common earthenware by its beautiful semi-transparency, as well as by its greater hardness and strength. Our knowledge of porcelain dates only from the discovery of the passage to India by the Portuguese, who first brought specimens of this ware from China, composed of kaolin, a pure clay drained from the decomposition of felspar and petuntze, the latter a quarzose felspar partly decomposed. The clay alone is able to produce only a white opaque body, like any other sort of clay ware, but when a proper portion of the petuntze is incorporated with it, the fusible felspar at once imparts new properties to the biscuit, rendering it semi-transparent and very strong and sonorous. Thus porcelain differs from comaon earthenware by being somewhat assimilated to the nature of glass. The felspar fuses in the heat of the furnace, owing to the potash or soda it contains, and the fused portion so completely permeats the whole mass that the clay becomes as it were, saturated with glass, until it has the peculiarity of semi-transparency belonging to it. Porcelain is also distinguished from common earthenware by its glaze, which is formed of pulverized felspar, and has, therefore, the same composition and hardness with the body of the bisoit. This glaze has no lead in its composition, and thus differs in a most important particular from the glazing of opaque ware. The latter may be removed from the body which it covers by mechanical or chemical means, and often chips off and cracks; no such accident can happen to the porcelain glaze, which, owing to its being of the same constitution with the body of the ware, is completely one with it, and suffers no fracture from any inequality of expansion or contraction between the two materials.

THE MOSAIC ART.

The art of Mosaic seems to be Italian, and was known in Rome from the days of the Republic. Under the empire the art was greatly improved, and not merely by the introduction of marbles of several colors, but by the invention of artificial stones termed by the Italians "smalti," which can be made of every variety of tint. On the introduction of pictures into churches they were first made of Mosaic. The art of Mosaic was, however, perfected in the last and present century, as now practised. The minute and numerous pieces of colored marble, or artificial stone, are attached to a ground or copper by means of a strong cement of gum mastic and other materials, are afterwards ground and polished as a stone would be to a perfectly level surface. There are several kinds of Mosaic, but all of them consist in embedding fragments of different colored substances, usually glass or stone in the manner just described, so as to produce a picture. The beautiful chapel of St. Lawrence, in Florence, which contains the tombs of the Medici, has been greatly admired by artists, on account of the vast multitude of precious marbles, jaspers, agates, avates, avanturines, malachite, &c., applied in Mosaic upon its walls.

INVISIBLE HARMONIES.

We are apt to "limit the Holy One of Israel," and to say "some things have worked together for our good." God says, "All things!" Joys, sorrows, crosses, losses, prosperity, adversity, health, sickness; the gourd bestowed, and the gourd withered; the cup full, and the cup emptied; the lingering sick-bed, the early grave!

Often, indeed, would sight and sense lead us to doubt the reality of the promise. We can see, in many things, scarce a dim reflection of love. Useful lives taken, blossome prematurely plucked, props removed, benevolent schemes blown upon. But the apostle does not say, "We see," but "We know." It is the province of faith to trust God in the dark. The uninitiated and undiscerning cannot understand or explain the revolution and dependencies of the varied wheels in a complicated machine; but they have confidence in the wisdom of the artificer, that all is designed to "work out" some great and useful end. So it ours to write over every mysterious delaying, "This also cometh from the Lord of Hosts, who is wonderful in counsel and excellent in working."

Rev. R. Macduff.

THE VAIL TAKEN AWAY.

There is much change in the attitude of the Jewish mind towards the rejected Messiah.—An unprecedented number of conversions have recently taken place among them in this country. Many of the most interesting incidents of the revival of 1858 have been connected with the religious experience of converted Jews. Twenty-three of these cases in the city of New York alone, within the present year, have been enumerated by a New York correspondent of the Baltimore True Union.—A similar state of things is reported among the Jews of Philadelphia, some of whom have been converted, and numbers have called on their missionary, the Rev. Mr. Bonhomme, for Christian instruction. In this connection, it may or may not be worth while to refer to a singular report which has obtained currency, to the effect that most of the leading Rabbis of London have agreed that if their expected Deliverer shall not appear within the next fifteen years, they will be constrained to acknowledge Jesus of Nazareth!

DESCRIPTION OF ARCADIA.

There were hills which garnished their proud heights with stately trees; humble valleys whose base estate seemed comforted with the refreshing of silver rivers; meads we enamuled with all sorts of eye-pleasing flowers; thickets, which being lined with most pleasant shade, were witnessed so to, by the cheerful disposition of many well-tuned birds; each pasture stored with sheep, feeding with sober security; while the pretty lambs, with bleating oratory, craved the dam's comfort; here a shepherd's-boy piping, as though he should never be old; there a young shepherdess knitting, and withal singing; and it seemed that her voice comforted her hands to work, and her hands kept time to her voice-music.—Sir Philip Sydney.

A FINISHED CITY.—A recent American traveler, when in Venice, expressed a curiosity to know how the remarkable palaces of that city were built, and on what foundation they stood.—When told that they stood on piles, he desired to see the pile-driver. "There is a model of it in the Doge's palace somewhere," replied the guide, "but it has not been used, for we have had no house built in Venice for three hundred years." Making due allowance for the guide's accuracy of computation, the anecdote will serve to show the stagnant dead-sea aspect of many Eastern countries, whose exploits history has emblazoned.

HINTS FOR KEEPING COOL.

To preserve the system in a cool and healthy state during the extreme hot weather of summer, the diet should consist as much as possible of fruits, vegetables, and farinaceous food, and the lighter kinds of meats. The fruit should be perfectly ripe and fresh from its parent stem, and should be eaten in the earlier and middle part of the day. Its nutritive properties are not very great, but it serves to neutralize the acids in the stomach, and acts as a general corrective to the system. In the warmer climates of South America, Spain and Italy, where fruit abounds, the inhabitants freely partake of it an hour or two before breakfast, and during the middle of the day, but never after; they holding to the Spanish maxim that fresh and ripe fruit is gold in the morning, silver at noon, and lead at night. The people of the tropical climates perform very little active labor during the extreme heat of the day, but generally remain inactive and under cover, in habitations constructed with a view to coolness. The best mode of keeping buildings cool and free from flies during the "dog days" is to open all the windows and doors for an hour or two before sunrise, so as to fill every accessible portion of the building with the cool fresh air of the morning, and then to close them sufficiently to keep out the sun and light. The cold air within will serve as a barrier to the entrance of the heat during the day, and the darkness to the entrance of the flies and other insects.—Scientific American.

THE HOUSE OF A TURKISH LADY.—These rooms were prettiest of all, and looking on to the garden. They were hung with pale blue silk, instead of flowered chintz, like the others; for the lady inhabitant had been a present from the Sultan, and etiquette demands that her apartments be better furnished and adorned than all the rest. Her bedroom was charmingly fitted up; a deep alcove covered with rich Persian carpets, filled with luxurious cushions and embroidered coverlets, taking up one side of it. On the other side was a light green and gold bedstead, covered with gauze curtains. The toilette table was extremely pretty, dressed with muslin and lace, after our fashion; a Persian looking glass, shaped like a sunflower, in mother-of-pearl, hanging above it. The ceiling was painted with a trellis work of birds, leaves and flowers. Three steps led in the cool and shady garden, and to the wide spreading household tree I told you of. Opposite the alcove were doors; one led into a sitting room, hung with the same blue silk, and furnished with richly-cushioned divans; the other opened into a beautiful white marble bath, the air still heavy with steam and perfume.—Mrs. Henby's Stamboul.

THE LEVIATHAN.—The Leviathan is at present one of the shows of London. By a payment of half a crown strangers secure admittance to this wonder of the age. It is said, however, that arrangements are made for uniting the English and Canadian Railway Companies with the enterprise, and that after completing the interior, this mighty marine novelty will begin a permanent traffic between Milford Haven, in Wales, and Portland, in Maine, the profits of which are expected to be more than remunerative. The calmness of the motion of so large a vessel, her speed, the largeness of the accommodations, and the cheapness of the fares, it is hoped will give to the Leviathan such advantages over all other ships that passengers will crowd into her, so as to make the concern in the strongest sense successful. Hitherto there has been nothing but discouragement.

THE PASSION FLOWER.—The following interpretation of this justly celebrated and much admired flower will not be found uninteresting, especially to the fair devotees of Flora. The leaves resemble the spear that pierced our Savior's side; the tendrils the cords that bound his hands, or the whips that scourged him; the ten petals the apostles, Judas having betrayed and Peter deserted; the pillars in the center the cross or tree; the stamina the hammer; the styles the nails; the inner circle around the center pillar the crown of thorns; the radiance the glory; the white in the flower the emblem of purity; and the blue the type of heaven.—On one species, the passiflora altra, even drops of blood are seen upon the cross or tree. The flower continues three days open, and then disappears, thus denoting the resurrection.

THE SCRIPTURES.—There is in Holy Scripture such success to the weak and feeble, comfort to the sorrowful, strong meat for men, milk for babes; such elevation and grandeur of mind, advancing the humanity of men to the height of bliss; in a word, it is what manna was to the Israelites, food delicious and accommodated to every man's taste. It is a deep well for depth, celestial for height. As it speaks of God, nothing is so sublime—as of man, nothing is so humble; it is a bridle to restrain, a spur to incite, a sword to penetrate, salt to season, a lantern to our feet, and a light to our path.—John Evelyn.

SEED OF THE RIGHTEOUS.—It is stated that a large proportion of the students in Princeton Theological Seminary are ministers' sons, and many are remotely descended from ministers. Dr. Alexander, Dr. Griffin, and Dr. Witherspoon have each a grandson among them, and there is also a great-great-grandson of Jonathan Edwards. One-fifth of the whole accession during the last year were sons of ministers. Of the sons of one hundred ministers whose lives are given in Dr. Sprague's Annals of the American Pulpit, over one hundred and ten became ministers; and of the remainder, by far the larger proportion, rose to eminence as honorable and successful men in business or in the learned professions.

WATER IN THE DESERT.—Five Artesian wells have been bored in the desert of Sahara since May, 1856, all of which yield a plentiful supply of water, to the unbounded joy and gratitude of the natives. One of these wells was solemnly consecrated by the Marabouts, and named "the well of peace," another "the well of bliss," and another "the well of gratitude."

UNIVERSITY HONORS.—The highest honor in the gift of the University of Cambridge, England, that of "Senior Wrangler," has been conferred upon Morris Birkbeck Pell, son of Gilbert T. Pell of New York. It is the only instance in which this high academic distinction has been bestowed upon an American.

A LITERARY TREASURE TROVE.—A discovery interesting to the literary world, has recently been made at Florence, being that of a script copy of Dante, thought to be in the handwriting of Petrarch. On one of the leaves is a note written on the very day that he lost his Laura, and mentioning the fact.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, JULY 17, 1858.

A BEGINNING.

All ... things have their beginnings, ... be ordinances of nature, or institutions of society. An editorship has a beginning, as well as a pastorship or a presidency, or even a life. The new editor of this paper ... his beginning with the present issue, and cannot be foreseen from the beginning—and this is well. With diffidence, but not without dismay—promising sparingly, yet hopeful of success—awake to the value of the press, to the promotion of christian civilization, sanctified culture, and scriptural holiness—he consecrates himself, with what energies God has given him, to the work assigned him.

The parting words of the former editor recently appeared in these columns. The regretful tenderness which followed indicated an unspoken feeling pleasant and beautiful to contemplate. Such testimonials are cheering evidences to the mind of the christian philosopher, of a spirit of progress much more valuable and essentially excellent than is commonly conceived—progress in the amenities of the christian life—in the esthetics of religion—in "the beauties of holiness," as the scriptures express it. They are green places in the desert of selfishness—happy isles in the dead sea of ingratitude. It is only when we travel backward upon the pathway of history, toward the verge of ruder times, or when we go outward toward the frontier of christian civilization, that we find faithful public servants neglected or ...

... not improper to say, that the ... writer assumes the position, upon the ... which he now enters, with the more ... from the fact that he was chosen ... remarkable unanimity by those con... He was chosen without opposition, ... that of some of his too partial friends, ... ought to retain him in his former editorial ... of the Texas Christian Advocate. That noble ... will never be forgotten! Adhering to a fundamental principle of the economy of the Methodist itinerant ministry, which ... interference with his own ecclesiastical ..., willing to return to his old post, ... to remove to another, as the voice of the General Conference might direct—he finds himself in his present position, in accordance, as he believes, with the providence of God, as indicated in the untrammelled operation of the ecclesiastical system to which he belongs. In this confidence he enters upon his work, and in this confidence he invokes and expects the sympathetic and hearty support and co-operation of his constituency.

While it is undeniably true that the success and usefulness of a christian journal depend principally upon its own intrinsic excellence—that is, upon the sympathy, variety, taste, and power of its editorial conduct—it is also true that very much depends upon the confidence, forbearance, and energetic support of its constituency. Confidence in the editor's sincerity, capability, fidelity, and general soundness of judgment, is indispensable; such confidence as will secure acquiescence in his decisions, as to the matter, manner, the thought, sentiment, taste, and style of the journal, as to what should and what should not appear in his columns.—In these questions, there will always be irreconcilable and irreconcilable differences of opinion, among the vast number of persons—of various localities and circumstances, and of all shades of religious, ecclesiastical, and literary sentiment and taste—who are interested in the paper. There must be some one to decide these questions, and to guide the journal amid the various mental currents that beset it on every side. The editor is that man, chosen for that purpose; and he must pursue the course dictated by his most deliberate judgment, without regard to any partialities whatever, whether they be personal or otherwise; else he will injure himself, and the cause he represents, in irreconcilable and incurable inconsistencies, to the loss of all confidence, dignity, and usefulness. Forbearance is also necessary; such forbearance as will receive kindly an adverse decision of the editor, when it is conscientiously believed that the judgment is wrong, however honest. Such forbearance is necessary, because such antagonisms of judgment will unavoidably occur. The wisest and best men, whatever their relations to society, cannot stand without it; much less the men of less wisdom and moral excellence, while occupying a representative position of such difficulty, delicacy, and responsibility, as the editorship of a christian journal. Freedom from error should not be expected, and condemnation simply because of error, should not be practiced. Nature is too easily measured out to even the wisest men, by the most unwise people, to be hastily indulged by men claiming to be wise. Censure is sin, when visited upon any thing short of sin. Kindly admonition is the only divinely prescribed treatment of simple ...

But the great lesson to be impressed upon the constituency of a christian newspaper is, ... support and co-operation. The christian press is the grand instrumentality chosen by providence in these later times to spread the ... of sanctified thought and sentiment throughout the bounds of civilized society.—The religious press, were those interested in it fully awake to the fact, has a system of agencies, in the ministry and membership of the churches, sufficient to give it almost unlimited circulation. And the Methodist press, in this regard, has the advantage of all others. Our itinerant ministry has a power for good, in this direction, the extent of which has never yet been developed. This development is one of the greatest triumphs to be obtained in the future history of Methodism. Is it too soon to expect it? We await the answer of the readers of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, whom we now address for the first time.

MISSIONS IN THE SOUTHWEST.

The Black River Conference at its late session had some plain interchange of opinions says Zion's Herald, on the connection of slavery with our mission churches in the Southwest. Bishop Janes, who has recently returned from the session of the Missouri Conference, made some remarks in reference to the anti-slavery attitude of our church in that State. He referred to the recent triumphs of the emancipation party, and the probability of Missouri ere long becoming a free State. He represented that our church was regarded there as an abolition church—that our people were strongly united to the emancipation interest, and that our church was a powerful auxiliary in pushing forward this great reform. He had no definite information as to the existence of slaveholding among our membership there, though he inferred the contrary from the attitude of the church in regard to emancipation.

In reference to the Arkansas Conference, Bishop Ames remarked, that our people there were emphatically the poor, and he doubted if a member of our church there could be found rich enough to own a slave. He also stated that the bishops from the first had been unanimously and decidedly opposed to the formation of these border Conferences.

Dr. Parks, of the Oneida Conference, confirmdd the statemsnt that the bishops were opposed to the formation of those Conferences.

The statements and explanations seemed to give general satisfaction.

Resolutions were then passed pledging the Conference to greater efforts in the missionary cause, but requesting the Missionary Board to reduce as far as possible missionary appropriations to the Arkansas and Kentucky Conferences.

We question the propriety of this recommendation, and with our present light upon the condition of things in those States, and especially in Kentucky, entirely dissent from them. We earnestly recommend the Missionary Board to inquire whether more labor may not judiciously be expected in those Conferences.

The above is from one of the most ultra of the anti-slavery journals of the Northern Church.

SOUTHERN CHURCH AND SLAVERY.

The Bishops, Address, on the first page, speaks for itself. On the subject of slavery, it cannot be misunderstood by candid readers, North or South. The Southern Christian Advocate says: "We inherited a Discipline with the obnoxious passages, and there are such constitutional guards around its rules, that they are not easily altered. Now we shall have, doubtless, an end of the difficulty, and have the Discipline as the South has from the beginning desired it to be. It succeeded partially in the days of the fathers. The rules on slavery were cobbled at in almost every Conference, because Southern Methodists opposed them. Now they were modified, then suspended, and then again obliterated. In the first Discipline—that of 1787—arranged by Bishop Asbury into chapters, sections, etc., there was not a word on the subject, nor was there from 1786 to 1789. Our fathers, according to modern reasoning, were then pro-slavery Methodists. The General Rules were first inserted in 1789—and this expunged rule is found among them, for the first time. In 1808, an edition was ordered by the General Conference for the South Carolina Conference without the section and rule on slavery. Our General Conference has only come back to that precise point. We have expunged that section and rule—and ordered another edition of the Discipline, like that ordered for the South by the fathers of Methodism. Whatever reproach falls upon us cleaves to them. Are we pro-slavery? So were they, then. Are we encouraging the African slave-trade? So were they. This is all we have to say to our enemies in the North, who revile us for our present position.

A CHARLES WESLEY HYMN BOOK.

A correspondent of the London Watchman recommends that an edition of the Hymn Book be printed in honor of Charles Wesley, and that it be distinguished from others by having the tunes printed as well as the hymns. He says that "not only in the old English books, but in those printed for French, Italian, German, and other Continental congregations in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, musical notes were printed to assist the worshipers. The idea, however, was not new, for—besides the splendid and costly Antiphonals, or music books of the Church of Rome,—Pontifioals, Rituals, Missals, Breviaries, &c., printed for ecclesiastics, were furnished with such notes, and supplied the choirs; and such books are still used in the Mass-House. The Reformation produced books for the whole company of worshipers, changed congregations into choirs, and made even little children familiar with the written sounds. Some of the most thrilling tales of Reformation History attests the value of this method. Over the hymn, in these old books, you may find the air printed, generally but a simple melody; yet there is nothing to forbid our advancing upon this, and providing for each measure a good variety of established, imperishable tunes, in treble, tener, and bass."

The same end says the Advocate and Journal is well accomplished by our New Hymn and Tune Book, the success of which shows the wisdom of the above suggestion.

We have received the catalogue of the Normal College, under the control of the North Carolina Conference. Rev. B. Craven, A. M., President and Professor of Moral and Mental Science; Lemuel Johnson, A. M., Professor of Mathematics; J. L. Wright, A. M., Professor of Latin Language, and Modern History; W. T. Gannaway, A. M., Professor of Greek Language, and Natural History; O. W. Corr, Tutor in Mathematics and Ancient Languages; J. H. Robbin's, Tutor in English Literature, and Natural Science.

BOOK EDITOR'S DEPARTMENT.

QUARTERLY REVIEW OF THE M. E. CHURCH, SOUTH. D. S. Doggett, D. D., Editor. Nashville: Stevenson & Owen.

The April No. of the Quarterly is just laid upon our table. We regret it is not the July number. But we do not insinuate that any one is to blame for the delay of the issue; it is a misfortune, perhaps, rather than a fault. We had the pleasure of reading the first four or five articles in proof—the rest we have read since the publication of the number. The first article is an interesting historical account of the Huguenots since the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, by G. P. Disosway, Esq., a worthy descendant of the noble race whose fortunes he so graphically depicts. The second article is a scholarly paper on "St. Paul's Wish," Rom. ix. 3. It is from the pen of a layman in Alabama—and a right scholarly paper it is. We read it twice or thrice in MS., and then in proof—but we cannot endorse the views of the excellent and learned author. We hope he will write frequently for the Quarterly. The third article is a curious paper on "Alchemy and the Alchemists," by L. J. Gogerty, of Virginia. The fourth is a continuation of Professor Munsell's able "Review of Comte's Philosophy." The fifth is an interesting paper on "Xavier," by the Rev. J. Gibson. The sixth is a critique on Bishop Hopkins's "American Citizen"—discriminating and just. The seventh is a scholarly article on the "Canon of the Old Testament," by Professor Reuhelt. Then follow "Brief Reviews," "Biblical, Literary, and Religious Miscellanies," prepared with the usual good taste and sound critical judgment of the editor. An interesting "Correspondence"—containing a paper on China, by Dr. Kelley; Psychology, by the Rev. B. F. Long; and the Study of the Classical Languages, by "Rho"—whose "speech betrayeth him"—closes this valuable number.

By the late action of the General Conference, it closes also the editorship of our excellent brother and friend who for eight years has so ably and acceptably controlled the fortunes of the Review. Nothing but the res augusta domi forced this measure upon the Conference. Bereft of the editorial supervision of one so well qualified to conduct this important journal, its friends, particularly those who fought so hard for the preservation of its life, will have to rally around it, and support it with more than ordinary liberality and zeal. As the April number is but just published, and as all the "copy" has to be procured for the July number, there may be some delay in its issue. But after this, the subscribers may depend, with some reasonable amount of confidence, on prompt and punctual issues. At the appearance of nearly every number of the Quarterly, from the beginning, we have pleaded earnestly for its more liberal support. We can do no more—it will not be expected that we will do less—now that our relation to it is somewhat more intimate. Let us have the aid and comfort of our ablest pens and most reliable purses—then a brilliant future awaits the Quarterly Review of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; but scarcely otherwise.

TUSKEGEE FEMALE COLLEGE.

From the Tuskegee Democrat, we take the following extract of a notice of the recent examination of this institution. After speaking of the examinations of the classes, the writer adds:

"On Sabbath, the Commencement Sermon, in the absence of Rev. Dr. Summers, who was appointed for the occasion, was delivered by Dr. Lipscomb, the worthy President of the College, and was listened to with the most profound attention by an audience as large as the Chapel would contain. It was an admirable discourse, and very appropriate to the occasion: "Cast thy bread upon the waters, for thou shalt find it after many days," was the instructive scripture theme upon which the worthy speaker enlarged, to the very great satisfaction of every listener. We regret that our limited space forbids us giving any thing more than a mere notice of it. Those who listened to it will sustain us in saying that it is altogether unsurpassed by any thing of the kind we ever had the pleasure of hearing.

On Monday evening an original Poem was delivered by Mr. Wilkinson, which did great credit the writer. It is spoken of by all that heard it in the most flattering terms."

A few weeks since we had the pleasure of visiting the institution, and really feel that we can scarcely speak too highly in its praise.—The school of design is a new a valuable feature, of which more will be said in these columns after a while.

CHUNNENUGGEE FEMALE COLLEGE.

A writer in the Tuskegee Democrat, noticing the examination of the above institution, among other things, says: Their venerable President, Dr. Ellison, arose and presented the young ladies their diplomas, and gave them his farewell address in the most touching and beautiful language. I can well imagine how his pupils felt when listening to his dear voice perhaps for the last time. They have bidden adieu to their happy school girl days, to go forth to engage in other employments and to mingle in the gay circles of fashion, and to realize by lessons of experience that "all is not gold that glitters."

At the conclusion of these exercises, the Rev. P. P. Neely, D. D., of Marion, Ala., who had been selected to deliver the literary address, was presented by the President. Dr. Neely is emphatically an orator, and for more than an hour he held the audience spell-bound by the bursts of eloquence that ever and anon fell upon their eager ears. His address was classic, chaste and eloquent, abounding in brilliant thought, clothed in the language of poesy, and spoken in tones of musical and soul stirring eloquence.

The highest waterfall in the world is said to be in the Sandwich Islands. It is reported to be between 4000 and 5000 feet.

GREAT MEN IN SOUTHERN HISTORY.

If we look, says the Boston Post, at the character of those distinguished persons of the nation who may be deemed historical, there are names that certainly will live as long in history, and in marble, in the South as in the North. Yea, there is one Southern name with which there is none to compare, either in the North or in the world. We can speak of the "incomparable Washington," that the Northern colonies were so ready to have as commander-in-chief of the American forces, in the war of the Revolution, and who was unanimously elected the first President of the United States of America. Of the fifteen Presidents of the United States, eight of them were Southern men. And where is the Northern man that will not agree with us, that the names of Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, Jackson, Tyler, Polk, and Taylor, are quite as illustrious as those of the Adamses, Van Buren, Harrison, Fillmore, Pierce and Buchanan? If the North has produced a Samuel Adams, a Hamilton, a Story, and a Webster, the South has given birth to Patrick Henry, a Pinckney, a Marshall, a Calhoun, and a Clay. If the North has given to the country more distinguished scholars and authors, the South has yielded more than its share of the most distinguished generals, statesmen, and politicians.

REMEMBER THE FINANCES.

Our brethren and friends, and especially the itinerant preachers, will please not forget the financial interests of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. For some time past the collections have been meagre. But, from this time forth, with the opportunities afforded by camp meetings and protracted meetings, and the help and encouragement of the out-pouring of the Spirit of God, we sincerely hope to witness a different state of things. Brother Pastor, could you not, with a little exertion, collect a considerable amount of money, and largely increase the circulation of the Advocate, in the field God has sent you to cultivate? Think of it. Help us. We will help you.

NEW ORLEANS DEPOSITORY.

We take pleasure in announcing to the public that the establishment of the Methodist Book Depository in New Orleans begins to assume the appearance of a tangible reality.—The building is secured: the Trustees have purchased, and the Depository is now permanently located at, 112 Camp street.

To enable the Trustees to meet the terms of their contract and make payments on the house as they fall due, it is necessary that our friends who have subscribed to the Depository fund make as speedy payments as possible.

Let us have your earliest remittances through your merchants here, or remit to me direct.

TWO MORE VIOLENT DEATHS.—The Richmond Christian Advocate notices the removal, by violence, of two amiable and worthy members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Mr. J. W. Watkins was killed by his own servants. Mr. L. J. Gogerty, Principal of Centreville Male and Female Academy, and a popular contributor to our Quarterly Review, was killed by a brother of one of his pupils. When dying he requested that there might be no post mortem examination of his body—for the reason that he did not wish any evidence from the investigation to be brought against the youth, if he should be criminally prosecuted.

A Union Clerical Association has been formed in Philadelphia. It embraces all the Evangelical ministers. About one hundred were present, and the term, Evangelical, was defined to embrace all who would subscribe to the Apostles' Creed. Monthly meetings are to be held on the first Tuesday of the month, to continue one hour and a half. No one is to speak but once. All speakers are limited to five minutes. The Union Hymns, so called, are to be used. A presiding officer is chosen, to be changed each month, and a new one elected. The most influential clergymen in Philadelphia are said to be in the movement.

THE SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY.—The Sumter Democrat learns from the Greensboro' Beacon, that the Southern University, at Greensboro', will not be opened before the first of October, 1859.—They expected to begin operations by next October, but the time is put off because the building will not be ready this Fall. The Trustees at their late meeting did not elect a President, as it was thought they would. We learn from a private letter that the most prominent candidates before the Board, for the position, were Hon. H. W. Hilliard, and Rev. Dr. Doggett, of Virginia.

WESLEYAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—The results of this great Missionary Society for the past year exceeded any previous year. They occupy 493 central stations or circuits, have nearly 4000 chapels, nearly 700 missionaries and assistants, and nearly 1000 agents, with 11,000 unpaid agents and Sunday-school teachers, and 121,000 accredited church-members. During the year, 22 missionaries and 12 missionaries' wives have been sent out. The receipts amounted to £123,062, or over $615,000, being more than $20,000 in advance of the previous year.

AN UNSAFE COUNSELLOR.—A lady residing near Brescia in Italy consulted her priest as to investing 40,000 francs which she had received. On the next night, two masked and armed men entered her room and demanded that she should deliver up the money, on pain of instant death. A visitor hearing her shrieks rushed to her room, shot one of the men dead, and disarmed and arrested the other, when it was found that the one who was killed was the priest, and the other was his assistant.

NORWAY.—Norway has a population of about a million and a quarter of inhabitants, who are nominally Protestant, there not being a Roman-catholic church or priest in the land. No Jew or Jesuit is allowed by the constitution to set foot on the soil.

TRACT MEETING.

On last Wednesday night a meeting of the Moreau Street Church Tract Society was held, at which addresses were delivered by Rev. C. C. Gillespie, and Rev. R. H. Read. The speeches were received with great approval by the audience, and the meeting passed off pleasantly, and we trust, profitably. Encouraged by this meeting, it was adjourned to meet again next Wednesday night at the Moreau Street Church, when several attractive addresses may be expected. The first named gentleman, after some pleasant introductory remarks, congratulated the society in a very happy and eloquent manner upon the promising field of operation. He thought good reading the most powerful means of educating the American masses. It was not Greek and Latin, or the Sciences, so much, however useful they might be, but good reading, that fed the intellect, and made the great men of the church, and nation. It was that, which must stir the souls, and refine the minds of the masses round us. He maintained that the Church, itself, needed the conservative influence exerted by the valuable literature which was issuing from our concern; it was the most aggressive Church in christendom, and consequently, stood more in need of some influence, powerfully conservative. He closed his speech by expressing his pleasure in finding so early after the session of the General Conference, a movement to carry into practical effect a work, the theory of which had engaged the earnest deliberations of that body.

The second speaker, was then introduced and addressed the audience in a peculiarly happy manner. He regarded the main Book publishing corporation of the Church South, as the trunk of the great tree, the Conference corporations, as the branches, but the individual societies were the twigs; and the twigs always bore the fruit. He thought the society in putting into the hands of the masses, the Biographies, Histories, and writings of the good and great of the earth were affording them a key to the mental and moral treasures of the universe. He closed his speech, which had been listened too with profound attention, by a happy reference to the dairyman's daughter. H.

FATHER OF RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPERS.

An exchange says: "After all that has been said as to the relative claims of various parties to the honor of having originated religious newspapers, it seems that it belongs to the late Dr. Alexander. Under date of 1810, in his biography, he is quoted as saying:

"In considering the wants of the people and the difficulties of reaching the multitude with religious instructions, I conceived the plan of a religious newspaper, a thing at that time unknown in the world. But as the thing was new, I mentioned it to none but two or three of my ruling elders, and it met with approbation. It was suggested that we had a printer, who was a well informed young man, John W. Scott. I conversed with him, and he drew up a well written but rather florid address to accompany a prospectus. Before the plan was carried into effect I was removed to Princeton; but Mr. Scott went forward with the enterprise, and published for a number of years, before any other work of the kind was thought of, the Christian Remembrancer."

This paper, having been published in Philadelphia in 1810, was the pioneer of this class of journals, and is entitled to rank as the oldest religious newspaper. As to Dr. Alexander's connection with the matter, it is well known that he was true to his idea of the importance of this agency for usefulness to his dying day, having, as is well known, written very extensively for the religious newspapers, especially in the latter years of his life."

SABBATH SCHOOL PIC NIC.—On last Tuesday we had the pleasure, in company with several other brother ministers of this city, of attending the Anniversary Pic Nic of the Moreau Street Methodist Church Sunday School, Capt. R. L. Robertson Superintendent, Rev. R. J. Harp pastor. It was held in a beautiful live oak grove, just outside the suburbs of the city, reached by the Bayou Road omnibuses. About four hundred persons were present. The day was very fine, and the merry-making was general, hearty, and most satisfactory. Swings, foot-balls, and good provisions were abundant. Capt. Robertson, his amiable lady, and the ladies generally, young and old, of the Moreau Street Church, devoted themselves, as they do annually, to the innocent happiness of the children. It was a delightful and beneficial affair.

MOON HEAT.—Prof. Piazza Smith, the Astronomer-Royal for Scotland, in his interesting account of a recent scientific expedition made by him to the Peak of Teneriffe, has set at rest the vexed question of the heat of the moonlight. He says that his thermometrical instruments were sensibly affected by the moon's rays, even at the lowest of two stations occupied by him at different elevations. This perhaps, illustrates the last sentence of the passage in the 121st Psalm: "The sun shall not smite thee by day, nor the moon by night." The peasantry of many parts of Europe, it is said, have an unwillingness to sleep in the moonlight; a feeling, it appears, not altogether superstitious.

CLAY AND JEFFERSON.—A letter from Florence, Italy, to the Newark Advertiser, states that Mr. Hart's marble memorial of Mr. Clay, for the ladies of Virginia, is in progress, and will probably be completed during the year. The same artist is further occupied on the model for a colossal bronze figure of Mr. C. for the city of New Orleans. Mr. Jefferson is also being commemorated in marble, for the State of Virginia, by an aspiring young sculptor of the Old Dominion, Mr. Galt.

The French Minister of State has informed the managers of theatres at Paris that the censors have orders to strike out hereafter all slang from plays, and no piece will be licensed which contains slang. The motive is to protect the purity of the language.

THE DICKENS DIFFICULTY.—A New York correspondent of the Boston Atlas and Bee says:

The scandalous reports about Dickens and his family have excited much attention here, but the manly card of Mr. Dickens, published in Household Words, relieves him from the imputation of infidelity. I was yesterday conversing with a gentleman well acquainted with the Dickens family, and he attributed the difference between the novelist and his wife to diverse views they take in regard to the religious education of their daughters. Mr. Dickens is a decided latitudinarian in his views, and generally attends the Unitarian Church, while Mrs. Dickens, an Ediaburg lady, brought up in the stricter doctrines of Presbyterianism, still clings to the religious ideas inculcated in her youth, and naturally wishes her daughters brought up in the same way. The fact of the daughters siding with the father, merely shows that the most young people they approve of those doctrines that offer more freedom, and are generally more attractive in appearance at least.

A SINGULAR COINCIDENCE.—Not the least of all the memorable incidents of the day, is the fact that, while two brothers were suspended from two of the most important dioceses in the Episcopal See in this country, in the run to elect their successors in office, with years intervening, two brothers succeeded and two brothers were defeated. The suspended Bishops were the Rt. Rev. H. N. and B. T. Onderdonk, two brothers, who were consecrated, respectively Bishops of Pennsylvania and New York, A. D. 1827 and 1830—some thirty years ago—and are now, consequently, venerable with the snows of many winters. The two successful candidates for their official position were the two brothers, the Rev. Drs. Alonzo and Horatio Potter. The two defeated candidates for the same honor, are the two brothers, the Rev. Dr. Frank Vinton, of New York, and the Rev. Dr. Alexander H. Vinton, Rector of St. Paul's, Boston.

SUCCESSFUL STATESMANSHIP.—Wellwood, in his "Memoirs," speaking of the invincible Armada, says: "It is now a well known truth that Sir Francis Walsingham, then Secretary of State, upon notice that the King of Spain had written a letter to the Pope, with an account of the true design of his mighty preparations and to beg his blessing upon it, got a copy of this letter out of the Pope's cabinet by the help of a priest his spy, and had thence the first certain intelligence of the designed Spanish invasion; and that thereupon that consummate statesman prevented it for a whole year, by procuring the merchants to gather up the chief bills of the Bank of Genoa, and to draw the money out of it just as King Philip had ordered bills upon that bank to set his fleet out to sea, which being, through necessity, protested, there was no remedy but patience, and to wait the arrival of his Plate fleet from the Indies for the necessary supplies."

At the annual meeting of the Association for the Advancement of Science, at Boston, it was shown that, after all, there are no "dumb beasts." Dr. Gibbon read a very interesting paper on the Language of Animals. He says that every variety of animated beings possesses some means of intelligible communication. Each creature, by peculiar sounds or signs of correspondence, has a language understood by its own kind, and sometimes learned by others. Emotions of caution, affection, and fear—of joy, gratitude, and grief—are disclosed by simple tones of voice, or by impressive gestures, to signalize feelings, strictly comprehended, and often answered. Insects and birds fishes and beasts, thus express themselves—in distinct languages, signed, spoken, and sung, seen, heard, and felt. He illustrated his theory by stating familiar facts relative to domestic animals.

Mr. Leon Scott of Parie has devised a method for obtaining the vibrations of the human voice, expressed in signs, written so to say, by the voice itself. A tubular conduit receives the vibrations of the human voice at one of its extremities, shaped like a funnel; at the other extremity there is a vibrating membrane, to which a very light pencil or stylus is attached. This stylus rests upon a slip of paper, covered with a coating of lampblack, and is made, by the aid of clockwork, to unroll from a cylinder while the person whose voice is to be experimented upon is speaking. The stylus, in receiving the vibrations of the voice through the tube, marks the paper with undulating lines expressing the different inflections. These lines are afterwards indelibly fixed by taking potographic impressions of them.

ALABAMA EDUCATIONAL ASSOCIATION.—The annual meeting of this association will be held at Marion on the 20th, 21st and 22d of July.—The objects of the Association are, as officially announced, "to promote intercourse, harmony and unity of effort among those engaged in education, to secure the co-operation of the people and the Legislature in measures for the advancement of the interests of sound learning, and to render such measures more efficient and systematic in their operation." Addresses will be delivered by Dr. Garland, President of the Universary of Alabama, Rev. Dr. Lipscomb, of Tuskegee, and other distinguished gentlemen. Reports will also be made on various educational subjects, and a meeting of unusual interest is expected.

MARRIED BY PROXY.—The young Queen of Portugal, who was lately married by proxy in her German home, is making her bridal tour alone, in a Portugese war-steamer. She has spent some time in England, and has received every attention from Victoria. In a leisurely way she is making her way toward Lisbon, there to meet her husband whom she has never seen. A modern Rebecca, with a steam-ship for her camel, a king for her Isaac!

Small and steady gains give competency with tranquility of mind.

SIX GENERATIONS.—Recent English papers report the death at Norfolk of Mr. John Holmes, in the 100th year of his age. The Chelmisford Chronicle says: "The deceased leaves behind him a son Thomas, aged 81, and a grandson aged 60, the latter being himself a great-grandfather, thus presenting the remarkable spectacle of a man living to witness the sixth generation from himself, and to see his great-grandson become a grandfather."

The Rev. J. I. T. Coolidge, for sixteen years pastor of the Thirteenth Congregational Unitarian Church, Boston, having accepted the creed held by the orthodox churches, parted from his congregation on Sunday, the 4th inst., by preaching a farewell sermon. The Boston Courier says he gave the reasons for the change in his belief, and said that unitarianism led to irreverence, irreligion and disbelief.

LIBERAL DONATION.—The Rev. George L. Prentiss recently dissolved his connection with the Mercer street Presbyterian Church, New York, and left for Europe on the 26th ult. A few days before his departure, Dr. Prentiss received a letter from his friends in that congregation, announcing a donation of more than eight thousand dollars, contributed by them for his use and benefit.

RUSSIA.—Letters from St. Petersburg state that the Emperor was gathering about him every day men belonging to the progressive party; that the Cabinet was impressed with the necessity of approaching Western civilization, and that the next generation will not find a trace of slavery in Russia. This policy is opposed by the old Russian party, headed by Prince Menchikoff.

The late Abraham Miller, of Philadelphia, left charitable bequests amounting to $26,500. The Pennsylvania Institution for the Deaf and Dumb receives $6000, the Blind Institution $1000, the Academy of Fine Arts $500, the Pennsylvania Colonization Society $1000, and sixteen other institutions have legacies ranging from $100 to $2000 each.

Mr. J. S. Redfield is about to issue a new work by Richard Cheuevix Trench, "On the Authorized Version of the New Testament, with Reference to Some Late Proposals for its Revision." The author says, in his preface, "I propose not mainly to advocate a revision, nor mainly to dissuade one, but to consider rather the actual worth of our present translation."

ROBERT MCFADDEN Esq., of Greensboro' Ala., was recently killed by his horse running away with his sulky. Twelve years ago we attended the wedding, when he led to the altar the daughter of our old friend, Thomas Johnston, Esq., of the same place. He was a wealthy and influential gentleman, esteemed by all who knew him.

The grave of ex-President Monroe is located in the southwast corner of Hollywood, on an eminence commanding a magnificent view of the city, the river, and the environs of Richmond. The grave is five feet in depth, set in cement, and so arranged as to give a secure foundation to the proposed monument.

CHARLES MCKAY, Editor of the London Illustrated News, while on his recent tour in the United States, visited the rice plantation of Gen. Hayden, at Pialico, near Charleston, S. C. His description of the humane manner in which the slaves are treated in the South, and of the happy lives they lead, is very interesting.

The Joint Board will meet on Monday, 26th, at 9 A. M.

The public are cordinlly invited to attend.

THE HOME CIRCLE for July has an interesting table of contents. Among other things, there is a letter to Bishop Soulo from that beautiful spirit, now in heaven, John Summerfield. At the time this letter (which is but the first of a series) was written, Summerfield was stationed in New York, Joshua Soule preacher in chargo. These are, therefore, letters from a junior to a senior preachor. It should be borno in mind, also, that of all Summorfield's friends in the ministry, Joshua Soulo was the most beloved and trusted; and, the editor adds, of all the Bishop's sons in the gospel, Summerfield was the favorite. The next letter will be one of especial interest.

LIVES OF THE DRS. PATTON.—The St. Louis Christian Advocate says the life Rev. William Pattou, after vexations delays, is now about ready for the press. The manuscript has been ready for months, and the delay has been caused by the workmen. It is confidently expected, however, the work will ho issued soon.

Of the biography of Rev. Samuel Pattou, the same paper says: "The biography of this great and good man will also be put to press in a short time. This also has been delayed by circumstances over which we had no control. Glad to be able now to announce that, unless some very unlooked for occurrence should prevent, it will soon appear."

M. E. CHURCH SOUTH.—There are now in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, 2267 traveling preachers; 167 superannuated; 4907 local; 404,430 white members; 62,231 white probationers; 148,525 colored members; 29,394 colored probationers; 3389 Indian members; 467 Indian probationers. The total membership, ministers, laity, in full and on trial, is 655,777, exhibiting a gratifying uet increase of 12,069.

The French Gazette Medicale states that by an accident charcoal has been discovered to be a cure for burns. By laying a piece of cold charcoal upon the burn, the pain subsides immediately. By leaving the charcoal on one hour the wound is healed, as has been demonstrated on several occasions. The remedy is cheap and simple, and certainly deserves a trial.

BOHEMIA.—It is stated that in this country the Reformation, which centuries ago was forcibly put down, seems about to break forth again, many of the Roman-catholic priests being ready to leave their church. One whn has become a Protestnut, gives the names of thirty-five who with him have forsaken the church and left Bohemia in serch of a livelihood.

THE LATEST NEWS.

Omer Lulsol had crossed the Ganges, and was threatening to block up the Bombay route.

The conspiracy which had been detected in Punjaub was among the 4th Infantry. The ringleaders were hung.

Silks at Shanghai had declined twenty taels.

The Rev. Mr. Dodd, American missionary at Shanghai, had been outraged by priests there.

The British had captured Calpei from the rebels, with a great amount of stores and ammunition.

Sir Colin Campbell had also beaten the rebels at Mahundee, and had captured that place.

The news that the rebels were approaching Lucknow in large force is confirmed, but no apprehensions are entertained, as the position is considered to be fully defended.

Serious disturbances had broken out in Bombay of a political character. A political agent and his escort had been murdered by the insurgents.

The British had taken Fort Copal, and had other minor successes.

Later intelligence had been received from India previously to the departure of the Fulton, and comprised accounts of British successes on the one hand, and of further outrages and new outbreaks by the rebels on the other.—The British had captured Fort Culpoe, New Goond and Mopundee.

The rebels had plundered Gwalior; and in the Kingdom of Oude they continued their operations unchecked."

In the Bombay Presidency, serious disturbances had broken out.

Local Intelligence.

HEALTH OF THE CITY.—There have been some few cases of yellow fever in the city, with no perceptible increase, for about a month. Most of the cases have been connected with the shipping. For the last week, however, there has been a marked increase. Twelve cases have been admitted into the Charity Hospital between the 7th and 15th inst., five have died—seven are yet under treatment. Several physicians have some cases in private practice. It is not believed, however, that we shall have an epidemic.

An attempt was made one night last week to burn the Girls' High School of the Fourth District, which was fortunately prevented.

According to the Picayune, the suburbs of the city are improving rapidly. The establishment of an Oil and Vinegar Manufactory, the enlargement of the Old Basin Canal, the shelling of various streets, the drainage of the back part of the city, and its general improvement in the way of residences, are mentioned as instances.

The river at this point has been at about a stand for a week past—that is, about fourteen inches below the highest level which it attained during the season. From this out it must continue to fall.

The Picayune says that the First District School Library, having been cautiously nurtured for ten years, now has about eleven thousand volumes. In the departments of biography, history, travels, belles lettres, it is remarkably perfect. Even the shelves especially devoted to books for children contain valuable treatises on science, natural history's copious selections of historical and biographical works of reputation as well as books written with the direct view of instructing youth. Complaint is made of need of funds.

Residences, of superior architectural taste, are now being erected in various parts of the city.

SUMMERFIELD, Dallas county, Ala.,

WILL re-open First Monday of October next, under the direction of its former principal, Rev. D. C. H. Connerly, M. A., assisted by Rev. Jno. S. Moore, M. A. These gentlemen are both members of the Alabama Conference, of high reputation as to scholarship, experience and skill. Their best energies will be employed to promote the religious and intellectual training of their pupils. Summerfield is retired and healthy. Boarding is fixed at $18 or $14 per month. The principal boards a portion of the young men with his terms are complied with.

Circulars are sent every three months to parents and guardians. Catalogues can be had by applying to the principal, or to the undersigned.

Let our friends, everywhere, sustain this, the only male school now in operation under the care of the Alabama Conference.

R. A. BAILKER,
President Board Trustees.

DR. T. McGOWN'S

SARSAPARILLA AND IODINE OF POTASI,

THE GREAT

BLOOD PURIFIER AND HEALTH RESTORER,

Prepared from roots accr, the only kind worthy the confidence of physicians or the public. Old, imported root is inert and worthless, facts too much overlooked by the profession. According to many, this compound is nearer a panacea or Catholicon than any; and its components have been highly extolled by some of the most distinguished physicians of Europe and America, viz: Sir Wm. Fordyce, Ucedia, Lassol, Colndai, Baron, Bardsley, Manson, Ricord, Gendrin, Bell, Harrison, Channing, Hildreth, etc.—for the cure of Scrofula or King's Evil, White Swelling, Gout, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Dropsy; diseases of the Kidneys, Liver, Lungs, Skin; Eruptions; Blins, Ulcers, old and obstinate Sores (McGown's Ointment should also be used, applied locally;) Blotches, Pimples on the face, Ringworm, Tetter, Chronic Sore Eyes, Scald Head, Leprosy, Goiter; Pains of the Bones, Joints; Special Complaints Lumbago, Chronic Bronchitis, Tonsilitis, Hooping Cough, Bleeding from the Lungs, Typhoid Pneumonia, Scarlet Fever, Erysipelas; Dyspepsia, Jaundice; Glandular Tubercles, especially of the neck; Cancheey, Palsy, Tumors, Gonorrhea, Gleet; Enlargements of the Liver; Spleen, Tetter; Syphilis, in all its forms. Dr Wm Fordyce says of Sarsaparilla, when exhibited in constitutions enfeebled and emaciated by long attacks of the venereal, as by the abuse of mercury, it is the "great restorer of the appetite, flesh, coins, strength and vigor." Professor Bell, lecturing on the Venereal, says of Iodine of Potash, it is a "powerful, safe and benign remedy, and its salutary operation is aided by the presence of Sarsaparilla."

FEMALE COMPLAINTS.—Amenorrhea, Dysmenorrhea, Irregularities, Suppressions, Diseases of the Womb, Leucorrhea, Tumors, Enlargemnnt of the Uterus, Breasts; Chorea, etc.; Impurities of the Blood or System, and all diseases dependent thereon. Makes the skin clear and smooth—an object of interest with the ladies. It should be used in the spring to purify the blood and prevent sickness.

MCGOWN'S ESSENCE TAR—A certain cure for Bowel Complaints, as Diarrhea, Dysentery, Flux etc

MCGOWN'S DOGWOOD AND IRON—A permanent cure for Chills, Ague Cake, Night Sweats, Debility, Dyspepsia, etc.

MCGOWN'S GOLDEN TINCTURAL—For the relief of Coughs, Colds, Consumption, etc.

MCGOWN'S STOMACH BITTERS—A pleasant invigorating Tonic, to be used before meals in Dyspepsia, Debility, etc.

MCGOWN'S OINTMENT—Never known to fail curing old Sores, Cancers, Chronic Sore Eyes, etc.

The above prepared and sold in Memphis by H. S. HUGHES, Druggist, No. 343 Main st.

HOME CIRCLE.

This very attractive and deservedly popular periodical is published monthly by Stevenson & Owen, Ag'ts, Nashville, Tenn., L. D. Huston, D. D., Editor, at $2 per annum, strictly in advance. Each number contains 64 pages royal octavo, embellished with one or more beautiful steel-plate engravings. The matter is mainly original, and of the most important and interesting character.

To ministers of the gospel, and all others who may be disposed to act as agents in procuring subscribers, a discount of 20 per cent. will be allowed on the subscription price.

As the patronage of this admirable issue has not yet been sufficient to meet the cost of its publication, it is therefore respectfully proposed that a prompt, energetic, and continuous effort be made in all the Conferences to increase the list of its patrons to at least twelve thousand!—Come brethren, you have but to submit the claims of the "Circle" to the Church and her friends, and this desirable object will be more than realized at an early day.

WINER'S CANADIAN VERMIFUGE contains the elements of life and death. It will destroy with certainly every species of worms engendered in the stomach and bowels and save the life of the child wasting away under the disease. Whenever the presence of worms is suspected, the medicine should be promptly given. It will have a healthful influence in all cases where the digestive and secretory organs are disordered; and if worms exist it will expel them without pain and quickly cure the sufferer.

☞ Be particular and remember the name "Winer's Canadian Vermifuge." This is the only article that can be depended on. Remember this. For sale by

The Great Drawback to persons emigrating to the extreme Western country, is the great fear they have of the Fever and Ague—the most dreadful of all diseases. Every day we hear of persons attacked by this disease, and made helpless in a short time without any means of affording relief. In view of the great demand for a remedy, Dr. HOSTETTER has presented his celebrated "Bitters," whose curative powers for all diseases of the stomach have been universally acknowledged. The "Bitters," prepared after a long experience and deep study, have received the encomiums of the most eminent physicians, as well as all classes, from every part of our country. To those who doubt their many virtues, all we can say is, to try them, and judge for themselves, respectively.

Sold by Druggists everywhere, and by HOSTETTER & SMITH, Sole Proprietors, 55 Water and 56 Front streets, Pittsburg. July 1-4t

MONETARY AND FINANCIAL.

The market has not changed since yesterday. Good paper is in very active request, and sales were made at 7@8 ℔ ct., the latter for a round amount due in January and February. The amount offering continues small, and the quantity of unemployed capital is still on the increase.

In the produce markets the movements is of course restricted, but there is a fair business doing for the season.

We have no transactions to notice in stocks. Nearly all those who are generally disposed to operate have left town.

Exchange is firm. Sterling 108¼@100 and 109¼. Drafts with bill of lading, 108¼@108¾. Francs are scarce at 7f. 17½@5f. 15. Sixty day bills on New York were sold this morning again at an extreme range of ¼@¼ ℔ ct. discount, but most of the business is done at 1@1¼. Sight is quite firm at par, and the banks are not disposed to check for large amounts at this rate.

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

THE HAIR OF THE PRESIDENTS.

In the Patent Office at Washington there are many objects of interest connected with the government, and those who administered its affairs in times gone by. While examining some of these objects of curiosity when in Washington, in December last, there was nothing that struck us so forcibly as the samples of small locks of hair taken from the heads of the different Chief Magistrates, from President Washington down to President Pierce, secured in a frame, covered with glass. Here is, in fact, a part and parcel of what constituted the living bodies of those illustrious individuals, whose names are as familiar as household words, but who now live only in history and the remembrances of the past.

The hair of Washington is nearly a pure white, fine and smooth in its appearance.

That of John Adams is nearly the same in color, though perhaps a little coarser.

The hair of Jefferson is of a different character, being a mixture of white and auburn, or a sandy brown, and rather coarse. In his youth, Mr. Jefferson's hair was remarkable for its bright color.

The hair of Madison is coarse, and of a mixed white and dark.

The hair of Monroe is a handsome, dark auburn, smooth, and free from any admixture whatever. He is the only President, excepting Pierce, whose hair has undergone no change in color.

The hair of John Quincy Adams is peculiar, being coarse and yellowish grey in color.

The hair of General Jackson is almost a perfect white, but coarse in its character, as might be supposed by those who have examined the portraits of the old hero.

The hair of Van Buren is white and smooth in appearance.

The hair of General Harrison is fine white, with a slight admixture of black.

The hair of John Tyler is a mixture of white and brown.

The hair of James K. Polk is almost a pure white.

The hair of General Taylor is white, with a slight admixture of brown.

The hair of Millard Fillmore is, on the other hand, brown, with a slight admixture of white.

The hair of Franklin Pierce is a dark brown, of which he has a plentiful crop.

BOSSUET AND MILTON.

We have no English Bossuet, and we have reason to be thankful that our national life was never so concentrated in the palace as to give a pre-eminence to the court pulpit sufficient to sustain such lofty flights of rhetorical magniloquence. But England produced in that same age a genius of grander and more truly religious soul; greater in his aspirations, and more noble in his life; a man who never crooked the hinges of the knee to power; who raised his eloquent voice again, and again in behalf of unviolated liberty of thought and conscience; who endeavored to forward the reign of God's justice upon earth; who, blind, old, deserted, clung with unqueuchable ardor to the cause that was dispised by the court, scorned by the great, and dispared of by the people; a name that will be as dear as his works to the most distant posterity; who was great and good, whether considered as Christian, poet, politician or patriot. If France has her Bossuet, England has her Milton. The genius of one and of the other bears the same stamp of massive grandeur; the eloquence of one and of the other rose to sublimity and pierced the vail of mortality. But the French orator was the champion of authority and of the Church of Rome; the English poet was the child of freedom and of sacred truth; and if the works of Bossuet stand as proud memorials of the court and creed he adorned, the writings of Milton breathe an immortal spirit; which changes of opinion will never consign to the records of the past, and which revolutions will never efface.—Edinburg Review.

A CHANGE OF HEART.

Every man's life, practically speaking, is shaped by his love. If it is a downward, earthly love, then his actions will be tinged by it, all his life will be as his reigning love. This love, you perceive, is not a mere sentiment, or casual emotion, but is the man's settled affinity; it is that which is, to his character, what the magnetic force is to the needle, the power that adjusts all his aims and works, and practically determines the man. It only must be either a downward love, or an upward love; for, being the last love and deepest of the man, there cannot be two, last and deepest, it must be one or the other. And then, as this love changes, it works a general revolution of the man. Hence it is that so much is said of the heart in the Gospel, and of a change of the heart; for it is what proceeds out of the heart that defileth the man. The meaning is, not that Christianity proposes to give us a new organ of soul, or to extract one member of the soul and insert another, but that it will change the love of the heart. A man's love is the same thing as a man's heart.—Dr. Bushnell.

READ AN HOUR A DAY.

There was once a lad who at fourteen was apprenticed to a soap boiler. One of his resolutions was to read one hour a day, or at least at that rate; and he had an old silver watch, left him by his uncle, which he timed his reading by. He stayed seven years with his master, and his master said when he was twenty-one that he knew as much as the young squire did. Now let us see how much time he had to read in seven years, at the rate of an hour a day. It would be twenty-five hundred and fifty-five hours; which, at the rate of eight reading hours a day, would be three hundred and nineteen days; equal to forty-five weeks, equal to eleven months; nearly a year's reading. That time spent in treasuring up useful knowledge would pile up a very large store. I am sure it is worth trying for. Try what you can do. Begin now.—Child's Paper.

MAXIMS OF BISPOP MIDDLETON.

Persevere against discouragements. Keep your temper. Employ leisure in study, and always have some work in hand. Be punctual and methodical in business, and never procrastinate. Never be in a hurry. Preserve self-possession, and do not be talked out of conviction. Rise early, and he an economist of time. Maintain dignity without the appearance of pride; manner is something to everybody, and everything with some. Be guarded in discourse; attentive and slow to speak. Never acquiesce in immoral or pernicious opinions. Be not forward to assign reasons to those who have no right to ask. Think nothing in conduct unimportant or indifferent. Rather set than follow examples. Practise strict temperance, and in your transactions remember the final account.

TAKING ITS OWN PORTRAIT.—A daguerreotype of the eclipse of the sun, March 15, was taken in England, which attracted much attention at the meeting of the Astronomical Society, for its beauty as a work of art, and because it seized and recorded a remarkable phenomenon, a mock sun appearing on the clouds at some distance from the real luminary.

OBITUARIES

The subject of this sketch, Bro. CUTHAN METHVIN, was born in the State of Maryland, April 24th, 1797. At an early age he accompanied his father to the State of Georgia, [illegible] Louisiana, and settled in St. Helena parish, where he was principally reared and educated. He [illegible] of religion, and connected himself to the Methodist Church in 1811. In 1832 he was licensed to preach by the Quarterly Conference of the St. Helena Circuit, under the presidency of P. Pipkin. He was admitted into the Traveling Conference as a probationer, not long after; and in the year 34 or 35, in the town of Woodville, Miss., he was ordained deacon by Bishop Soulo. In [illegible] Elder in the city of New Orleans. Not far from this date, it seems, brother [illegible] and moved to Jackson parish where he [illegible] the functions of his ministerial office [illegible] by the Great Head of the Church from [illegible] rest. He died at his own residence on Saturday [illegible] at a good old age. He was a man of so- [illegible] which no doubt caused him many times [illegible] blood, and like all persons of that tempera- [illegible] will both enemies and friends wherever he [illegible] was a man of marked familiarity with the Scrip- [illegible] was regarded as a sound theologian and a good [illegible] He was taken with his last illness on Sunday, at [illegible] weeks lacking one day previous [illegible] illness he suffered intensely, but [illegible] satisfactory evidence of a well-founded [illegible] promises of God, and of a sure title to a glo- [illegible] through the atonement of the Blessed [illegible] He has left a family and friends to mourn his loss.

C. W. HODGE.

DIED—On Bayou Lafourche, in the parish of Pointe Coupee La., in the forty-first year of her age, of hemorrhage of the lungs, Mrs. MARY A. P. PULLIN, wife of Mr. [illegible] Sister Pullin was born and raised in Louisiana, [illegible] Methodist Church in 1844. She calmly said that she was not afraid to die. Seated in her rocking chair, in the morning, when all nature was lovely and [illegible] Pullin to [illegible] sickness, read the sad [illegible] of death. A few words to her daughter, (the [illegible] moment) five minutes in the agonies of death, [illegible] the deathless soul bore itself away from the bleeding [illegible] and changed the sighs and sobbings, the tears and [illegible] of earth, for the unknown realities of vast eter- [illegible] where we hope, with her babes and her loved ones, [illegible] her at last.

J. LANDRUM.

Departed this life in Copiah county, Miss., on the 4th day of April, 1858, FRANCES E. FULGHUM, in the 23d year of her age, daughter of John and Elizabeth McDonald, late of the aforesaid county, 29th August, 1835; raised in the faith and doctrines of the M. E. Church, was married to Wm. A. Fulghum September 1854, joined the Church [illegible] afterward, was converted to God at a protracted [illegible] held at Burton's store, Bayou Pierre Circuit, Miss. Conf. by Rev. S. L. Ercumbrack, preacher in charge, Sept., 1857. The writer, her father, saw her twice afterward and [illegible] with her on her enjoyments of religion; she pro- [illegible] her confidence in the merits of her Savior. Four [illegible] before death she spoke of her conversion and [illegible] her confidence and hope beyond the grave. [illegible] told her weeping friends she was dying, and as she [illegible] praying all the time asked them to join with her [illegible] they knelt around her bed and prayed; these [illegible] her last words. Thus passed from the walks of life [illegible] amiable and lovely daughter leaving an affectionate [illegible] and two infant children and many relations and [illegible] to mourn her untimely death.

JOHN MCDONALD.

Winchester, Miss., June 26th 1858.

DIED—At his father's residence, near Pattersonville, of [illegible] fever, LAWRIE WARREN, son of Joseph and Matilda B. Knight, aged 5 years 6 months. It seems as if the angel of death would always hover over this devoted household. Almost before they have had time to fully realize the loss of [illegible] darling child another is snatched from their em- [illegible] The subject of this obituary was a very interest- [illegible] and even at his early age seemed to be im- [illegible] the importance of religion. He could sing [illegible] the lines of the hymns usually sung in the [illegible] circle, and would often call his little playmates [illegible] and requesting all to kneel, would sing and pray [illegible] He would never eat at a table until a blessing [illegible] and if no one else was present to do it he would ask it himself. His affectionate disposition endeared him to every one who knew him. His example may teach his little playmates that they are not too young to love and obey God, and his death may also teach them that they are not too young to die. This is a dreadful [illegible] to his parents, but they should be comforted by re- [illegible] that their loss is their darling boy's eternal gain.

A FRIEND.

Planters' Banner please copy.

Departed this life, Caroline Jordan, died June the 16th, 1858, aged 11 years 10 months and 7 days. For a child she spoke [illegible] encouragingly on the subject of religion— [illegible] her friends a little memento. To her mother [illegible] for Christ as her choice gift. After exhorting all [illegible] her in heaven, she rested her head on [illegible] "Now I lay me down to sleep." Thus [illegible] sleeps in Jesus, and will embrace her faithful friends [illegible] resurrection.

J. PIPES.

"When we married, my wife [illegible] family altar. I could not pray, but [illegible] could. I did not love to pray, but she did; [illegible] ten years she led in family prayer, and, [illegible] blessed to God, she has prayed us all into the [illegible] kingdom of God—me, my two apprentices, and I expect all three of the children," said a sough [illegible] man, reclaimed into Christian meekness and [illegible] sobriety. "I thank God for a wife that has had [illegible] courage to pray before an ungodly husband."

TOILS OF AN EDITOR'S LIFE.

We commend the following to those who envy the honors and rewards of an editor. It is the expression of Capt. Marryatt, and the experience of all editors who justly feel the responsibilities of their position:

"I know how a periodical will wear down one's existence. In itself it appears nothing; the labor is not manifest; nor is it in the labor, it is in the continual attention it requires.—Your life becomes, as it were, the publication. One day's paper is no sooner corrected and printed, than on comes another. It is the stone of Sisyphus, an endless repetition of toil, a constant weight upon the intellect and spirits, demanding all the exertion of your faculties, at the same time that you are compelled to the severest drudgery. To write for a paper is very well, but to edit one, is to condemn yourself to slavery."

THE GREATEST
Medical Discovery
OF THE AGE.
MR. KENNEDY, of Roxbury, has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures

EVERY KIND OF HUMOR,
From the worst Scrofula down to a Common Pimple.
He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases, both blood humor. He has now in his possession over one hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.
Two bottles are warranted to cure a nursing sore mouth.
One in three bottles will cure the worst kind of pimples on the face.
Two or three bottles will clear the system of biles.
Two bottles are warranted to cure the worst canker in the mouth and stomach.
Three to five bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Erysipelas.
One or two bottles are warranted to cure all humor in the eyes.
Two bottles are warranted to cure running of the ears and blotches among the hair.
Four to six bottles are warranted to cure corns and running ulcers.
One bottle will cure scaly eruptions of the skin.
Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of ringworm.
Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the most desperate case of rheumatism.
Three to four bottles are warranted to cure the rheum.
Five to eight bottles will cure the worst case of scrofula.
A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the above quantity is taken.
Nothing looks so improbable to those who have in vain tried all the wonderful medicines of the day, as that a common weed growing on the pastures, and along old stone walls, should cure every humor in the system; yet it is a fact. If you have a humor, it has to start. There are no if's nor ANDs, hums nor buts about it curing some cases, but not yours. I peddled over a thousand bottles of it in the vicinity of Boston. I know the effects of it in every case. It has already done some of the greatest cures ever done in Massachusetts. I give it to children a year old, to old people of sixty. I have seen poor, puny, wormy-looking children, whose flesh was soft and flabby, restored to a perfect state of health by one bottle.
To those who are subject to a sick head ache, one bottle will always cure it. It gives great relief in catarrh and dizziness. Some who have taken it find been costive for years, and have been regulated by it. Where the body is sound it works quite easy, but where there is any derangement of the functions of nature, it will cause very singular feelings, but you must not be alarmed; they always disappear in from four days to a week. There is never a bad result from it; on the contrary, when that feeling is gone you will feel yourself like a new person. I heard some of the most extravagant encomiums of it that ever man listened to.
Manufactured by DONALD KENNEDY, No. 120 Warren street, Roxbury, Mass. Price $1 per bottle.

DOCTOR HOOFLAND'S
CELEBRATED
GERMAN BITTERS.
PREPARED BY
Dr. C. M. JACKSON, Philada, Pa.
WILL EFFECTUALLY CURE
LIVER COMPLAINT, DYSPEPSIA, JAUNDICE,
Chronic or Nervous Debility, Diseases of the Kidneys, and all diseases arising from a disordered Liver or Stomach.
Such as Constipation, Inward Piles, or Fullness or Blood the Head, Acidity of the Stomach, Nausea, Heartburn, Disgust for Food, Fullness or Weight in the Stomach, Sour Eructations, Sinking or Fluttering at the Pit of the Stomach, Swimming of the Head, Hurried and difficult Breathing, Fluttering at the Heart, Choking or Suffocating Sensations when in a lying posture, Dimness of Vision, Dots or webs before the Sight, Fever and Dull pain in the Head, Deficiency of Perspiration, Yellowness of the Skin, and Eyes, Pain in the Side, Back, Chest, Limbs, etc., Sudden Flushes of Heat, Burning in the Flesh, Constant Imagining of Evil and great Depression of Spirits.
The proprietor, in calling the attention of the public to this preparation, does so with a feeling of the utmost confidence in its virtues and adaptation to the diseases for which it is recommended.
It is no new and untried article, but one that has stood the test of a ten years' trial before the American people, and its reputation and sales unrivaled by any similar preparations extant. The testimony in its favor given by the most prominent and well-known Physicians and individuals in all parts of the country is immense, and a careful perusal of the Almanac, published annually by the proprietor, and to be had gratis of any of his Agents, cannot fail to satisfy the most skeptical that this remedy is really deserving the great celebrity it has obtained.

HUNTSVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE,
HUNTSVILLE, ALA.
THE latter half of the scholastic year of this Institution will begin January 25, 1858. The splendid buildings, elegant organization, the superb faculty, and the extraordinary facilities of an accomplished education, recommend this Institution to the consideration of every parent. The French Language is taught by Parisians, and taught possibly more thoroughly than any where else outside of a native French family. This is a regular Boarding School of the highest order. Besides, Huntsville, as a location for a Female School, in point of beauty and healthfulness, has no equal in the South. I would refer to my patrons in Louisiana: Gen. R. M. CHRIST WEEPING OVER JERUSALEM.

BY DR. J. S. HARRISON.

wept at he sat on bright Olivet's brow, ile the victims of wrath were slumbering below.
dnm of the city was hush'd to repose,
the moon o'er Jerusalem in brightness arose temple in grandeur rose full in his sight ile the moonbeams lay on her, all trembling and bright, Savior sat weeping while on her he gazed,
d saw in the distance her foundations razed.

thy snow-whited towers and glittering domes, columns of cedar and bright polish'd stones,
adtha shall weep, and proud Lebanon mourn, en they hear of thy fall, and thy beauty is gone on thine altars no more shall sweet incense arise.

songs of devotion ascend to the skies,
ough thy vaults shall the wallings of sorrow resound,
en thy columns and towers are laid to the ground.

wept as he at wed the doom'd city below," ile the dew-drops like crystals distill'd on his brow, olation in thee, O Jerusalem shall reign,
the prophets of God thou hast hated and slain.

oft have the wings of compassion been spread,
a broad shield of mercy to cover thy head;
e sin thou hast lain till redemption's too late,
d now thou art left to thy desolate fate.

moon, from the scene, hid her face in a cloud, ile the thunders of wrath mutter'd doleful and loud;
stars that for bottom their vigils to keep

LETTER FROM JERUSALEM

JERUSALEM, March 7, 1858.

O! for the Garden, in its simple guise,
Where she, the earliest of the mourners came
Cirne ere the state of Syria's cloudless skies
Grew pale before the morning burst of flame
O! if the tidings now were free to twine,
Over the dark entrance of that rock-hewn cell
Say should we nip the gold encrested shrine
Of incense fumes intoxicating spell?
Would not the whispering breeze, as evening fell,
Make music in the palm-tree's shade,
Then choral prayers, or chaunted rituals swell,
Can the proud pomp of Helen's colonade,
Mark thy lime-hallowed stems Gethsemane's holy glade?

DEAR BROTHER McTYEIRE:

There is nothing which appears natural about the Church of the Holy Sepulchre—all looks artificial—and crowded as it is now every day with pilgrims, it has the appearance of a public fair, more than a place of worship. There are one thousand of the Greek Church here, with their Patriarch, traveling with them. The visitants of the place have a high opinion of the morals of the pilgrims, for there is much desecration in such a mighty mass as assembles here. Twenty thousand are expected this month. They come by every boats, and wend their way from Joffa through the mountains to Jerusalem. The streets and court yard of the Holy Sepulchre are lined with venders of goods, suitable for pilgrims. All kinds of trinkets and ornaments are exhibited in profusion, and the Sabbath is not exempt from buyers and sellers. The money changers are here still

We visited the Garden Gethsemane, and walked over the same ground our Savior trod, and where, in agony, he sweat great drops of blood. If not the identical spot, it could not be far off, and there old knotted olives tell of their antiquity; and, as they spring succulently from the roots, they may be considered the descendants of those under which Jesus sat with his disciples. The spot, enclosed by a wall, is a small garden at the foot of the Mount of Olives, near the brook Kedron. A little space, enclosed by a wall near the entrance to the Garden, is a place called "Terra Damnata," where Judas betrayed his Master with a kiss; there is a ledge of rocks before it, where, tradition says, the disciples fell asleep. O! what reflections passed over the mind, as we stood upon the spot, to think of Jesus grappling with the power of evil, when he cried out, "my soul is exceedingly sorrowful even unto death!" That night, when the gates of Jerusalem were closed, Gethsemane must have been a perfect solitude, and the Saviour could see the company ascending Mount Moriah, to apprehend him, with their lanterns, torches and glittering arms. We passed through the gardens, and gathered a few olive leaves as a memorial of the place, with hearts deeply touched with the solemnities associated with the scene, so full of interest, in which the whole world is involved. We stopped at the tomb of the Virgin, lighted by hundreds of lamps—more like a chapel than a tomb—where a multitude of pilgrims were gathered for prayers, chaunting and singing before the altars. The roads and avenues on the hill-side were full of pilgrims; three thousand had left the city for Jordan, and were pouring along upon the hill-side with camels, mules and donkies. It was difficult to press our way through these crowds back to the city. The borders of the roads, and the hills, were covered with multitudes, who came out as spectators, to look at the pilgrims—the ladies, with their white veils, presented quite a picturesque appearance, altogether new. Mrs. T. thought they resembled Angels, but their wings were hedged, there was no buoyancy in their robes to elevate them from earth, for their religion is too earthly in its character. The women and children we saw in the roadside were much better looking than any we saw in Cairo, for they appeared to be comparatively clean. We passed through the gates of St. Stephen; the place where he was stoned to death is before its entrance; tradition has pointed it out. The pool of Bethesda is there, with all the associations of Bible history in it with deep and thrilling interest. Via Dolorosa was almost impassable for the crowd. This street is said to be the one through which Jesus was compelled to bear the cross; a place was pointed out where tradition says he fell; a column stands near the judgment seat, where the cock crowed when Peter denied his Lord; heavenly inspiration, as, "He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; and He leadeth me beside the still waters." "He sendeth the springs into the valleys which run among the hills." Here among these picturesque scenes of romantic beauty the shepherd-boy of Israel learned to sing the praises of God, and benefit the whole world by his words of inspiration, adapted to all conditions, circumstances, and places, from the poorest to the throne of Kings.

A LETTER FROM A LOG CABIN

A LOG CABIN ON BAYOU BARTHOLOMEW, Ashley county, Ark., June 21, 1858.

MR. EDITOR: I flatter myself I may place you upon my list of friends. Never having seen you, I imagine you to be a lair browed, neatly dressed middle aged gentleman, about the medium height, with dark hair, eyes that have ever a pleasant light, such as will make a little child love to come to you with its joys and griefs, a large nose, and a mouth which "openeth with wisdom; and in whose tongue is the law of kindness." I may never see you "face to face," but yet, each week will bring to my forest home, the "Advocate," that portrayer of your thoughts and feelings, and our spirits may become acquainted notwithstanding the miles of land and water between us. I imagine you to be seated in a high-backed, leather cushioned chair, in a nicely arranged sanctum, before a round table covered with "Exchanges" "Magazines"—and then just on your right, I spy the new "Herbarium," which is hereafter to grace the sanctum of the Advocate, and in which my "Spring-offering of Wild Flowers," have the honor of being the "nucleus" around which many floral gifts, I hope, will soon gather.

I and my "little ones" have kept Herbariums for several years; we find in them much pleasure and innocent amusement. What is better calculated to give the dear children a love for the beautiful objects of Nature, and for the kind Father above, the Maker of all, than to teach them to seek for and preserve the lovely flowers and mosses, the slender grass and curiously shaped leaves, and when old enough, under each to write some appropriate sentence or verse, with the date when it was gathered.

I will open my Herbal; a neat white sheet is presented with a fern leaf, a tiny boquette of woodland violets, and a sprig of mistletoe, tacked with needle and thread upon it. Along the scalloped fern leaf I read: "A gift from Johnny, on a most lovely spring-like day, January 7th, 1858." Around the violets and their heart shaped leaves, is neatly written: "These sweet violets, were plucked from the cold bosom of earth, January 20, 1858. Mattie, my baby not two years old, unbidden, gave the lovely flowers a welcoming kiss."

"'Tis sweet; and yet, 'tis sad, that gentle power Which throws to Winter's lap, the Spring tide flower."

Near the ever green mistletoe and its waxen berries, I read, "A parasite of the oak-tree, held sacred by the Druids, the ancient priesthood of "Merrie England."

But a trifle of time has been spent in preserving the flowers, and writing a few lines underneath, while the pure thoughts and kind words the presence of flowers, or any thing beautiful, is calculated to call forth, more than repay us for the small care necessary for forming and keeping a Herbal.

Children soon become fond of culling and preserving the many fragrant flowers, sprigs and leaves, they daily meet, and many hours can thus be passed with much pleasure and profit, that otherwise would be spent in idle play.

I hope your little readers will ask their mammas to give them a book for a Herbarium. They should first press the flowers before sewing them in their book.

Children should early be taught to notice things about them, and to admire the floating clouds, the bright stars and moon, with all of the other beneficent works of our Father in Heaven.

My little Mattie, two years old last January, kneels each night and prays, "Pesso Dod, beas pa, ma, huddy and sissy;" she points to the moon and says: "Dod's moon." When I ask her who made her, she instantly answers—"Dod" or "Dood Lord." When first asked who made herself and every thing, pointing to the different objects around, she would say, "Ma;" but when I told her, no, the good Lord who lives beyond the blue sky, pointing up to it, made all things, a shade of thought came into her bright blue eyes, and ever her dimpled face, and ever since she invariably answers when questioned, "Dod made me." So you see how early a child can be taught about God. They are much more intelligent and happy when their young minds are directed in the right channel, than when allowed to grow up sometimes to the age of five or seven years, before they know who made them, and the many wonderful objects about them. O how great the responsibility of mothers! They should not think the dear little ones entrusted to their care at so tender an age are too young to understand. I know by experience that an infant of four or five months, can be taught obedience, affection, and even how to revenge itself when hurt. Some mothers, I am sorry to say, take pleasure in encouraging the evil passions of their infants, laughing and saying: "The darling don't know any better." But if the "darling" has capacity to strike its nurse in anger, or to scream for things denied it, surely it can be taught that which is right and good. It is really cruel for a parent to teach a child that which, in a few years, they will have to whip out of him, if they can.

You will oblige many mothers, including myself, if you will publish the titles of books containing information on the duties of parents to their children.

When I commenced I had no idea of writing so long a letter; my excuse, kind sir, is the heart felt interest I have for the dear "little ones."

Adieu.

M. H. C.

"The individual in question, is young, tall and quite dark in complexion; and, to his discredit be it said, little boys are afraid of him—little girls are fond of him. He hopes to hear often from the "Log Cabin," any way.

BAYOU BLACK MISSION.

NAPOLEONVILLE, La., June 30, 1858.

In obedience to the authority of the Church, I make through the columns of our weekly, my report of the Lafourche Circuit and Bayou Black Colored Mission.

The work is in the four weeks form, and I preach to one white congregation every Sabbath. There is in connection with these, seven colored congregations, served once a month. These are mostly served on plantations, indeed all but one. There are, say, one hundred and sixty members on the plantations under pretty good discipline, for there, we have regular leaders and we make our regular monthly visits to them. There are a great many colored members scattered upon the plantations not regularly served now, many of them good and faithful no doubt, whom the master will invite to seats at his right hand in the kingdom; over these we cannot exercise much oversight, and they suffer for want of wholesome discipline; but what can we do for them, better than we do?

Our white congregations are said to be larger than they have formerly been, at none of them however, has there been any general interest on the subject of religion manifest. Great indifference prevails throughout this whole country; perhaps, in part owing to the great peril of their temporal interests by high water united with other ordinary causes.

Six whites and as many colored have been added to the Church; twenty-five baptisms. We have filled all of our appointments thus far, and are at our work. Yours in Christ.

N. A. CRAVENS.

NEW ORLEANS GERMAN MISSIONS.

No doubt but the friends of Zion abroad will read with interest a brief statement of this our field.

First of all allow us to express our grateful acknowledgement for the assistance rendered us, in building and rearing up our German Mission Church. If the friends who have so nobly contributed to it, could but see the fine structure, so far as it is finished, they would indeed rejoice in their hearts in beholding that monument of their liberality, as it points with its spire up to heaven, truly an ornament of Methodism as well, as of our whole city. We have opened the basement for divine service at about the middle of May last. On that solemn occasion the hearts of our members were overflowing with gratitude and thanksgivings to God, who made the brethren and sisters willing to build us an house, wherein we can preach the gospel, worship the father of all love, according to the doctrines of our church, and wherein we can bring immortal souls to the Lamb of God. But brethren the building is not yet finished; you have begun it, and I am sure you would like to see it finished; come then friends of the German cause, give us a little more help and aid in this your own enterprise, that we may be able to complete it. About three thousand dollars more would enable us to pay the debts hitherto contracted, and to finish it entirely; then we would have a church clear of all debts, cheap, and finished in a style which will surely bring great credit to the liberality and christian benevolence of Methodism, not only here, but throughout the bounds of the Louisiana Conference. I know that there are many demands made for your assistance; but brethren remember that we are the children fostered by your care, and that we are yet in the prime of our youth and consequently most of all need your assistance and protection. Give us this church free of debts, and you may rest assured that many a precious soul will be the dividend for your capital invested in this glorious enterprise. In this our first German Mission as well as in the second we have great prospects of encouragement, that the Lord will soon enlarge the borders of his kingdom. We never before had so many strangers regular attendants of our meetings as at present; some of them are earnestly seeking the Lord, and will soon join our society. Methodism is gaining confidence amongst our German friends and the prejudice entertained by so many is overcome by the powerful truth of the word of God. If we could concentrate all our labor to this our second Mission, then we could soon be enabled to report a great number of conversions. If our worthy Bishop could send us a preacher here in the first Mission; which is yet to be supplied, then we would soon make up for all we have lost and more than that. The third Mission, I can truly say, has never before offered so great inducements to become first in rank, as at present. Our fourth Mission consists of dear souls, strongly united together in the love of God; they are indeed co-laborers with the minister, and if they could be regularly attended to by a preacher, their numbers also would swell greatly; they are a little band of soldiers of the cross, scattering the word of God in all directions, and inviting sinners to flee the wrath to come. This is a brief statement on which I might enlarge, but suffice it to say in conclusion, that I as the only stationed German preacher cannot do justice to this large field. In it we have to preach weekly thirteen sermons, if we will fill all our preaching places; and that one man cannot do. Had I not some faithful local preachers to assist me, we would long since have lost a great many members. I cannot but praise enough, the faithful labors of our beloved brother Weber; he has been constantly, Sabbath and week days, at his appointments, preaching Christ and him crucified to the satisfaction and edification of all who heard him. The brethren Hamer, Schriever and Maras have also done well, and were ever ready to do the work of the Lord. They all have neglected their own private affairs in this time of need, and done the work as faithful servants of the Lord, and as I have above stated our united labor has not been in vain; some have been added to our number and others will follow. May we soon have a preacher and may this appeal for our Mission Church not be in vain. The God of all mercies bless those who have already so kindly remembered us, and may He yet make other hearts and hands willing to aid us. Brethren send on your money, I know you will do so, for we Germans have yet a place of warm affection in your hearts.

J. A. PAULY, Missionary.

New Orleans, June 1858.

BISHOP BERKELEY.

Though a great metaphysician, he was not a great moralist. His Theory of Vision contains a great discovery in mental philosophy. His immaterialism is chiefly valuable as a touch stone of metaphysical sagacity; showing those to be altogether without it who, like Johnson and Beattie, believe that his speculations were skeptical, that they implied any distrust in the senses, or that they had the smallest tendency to disturb reasoning or affect conduct. Ancient learning, exact science, polished society, modern literature and fine arts, contributed to adorn and enrich the mind of this accomplished man. All his contemporaries agreed with the satirist in ascribing

"To Berkeley every virtue under heaven."

Adverse factions and hostile wits concurred only in loving, admiring, and contributing to advance him. The severe sense of Swift endured his visions; the modest Addison endeavored to reconcile Clarke to his ambitious speculations. His character converted the satire of Pope into fervid praise. Even the discerning, fastidious, and turbulent Atterbury said, after an interview with him, "So much understanding, so much knowledge, so much innocence, and such humility, I did not think had been the portion of any but angels, till I saw this gentleman." "Lord Bathust told me," that the members of the Scribblers Club, being met at his house at dinner, they agreed to rally Berkeley, who was also his guest, on his scheme at Bermudas. Berkeley, having listened to the many lively things they had to say, begged to be heard in his turn, and displayed his plan with such an astonishing and animating force of eloquence and enthusiasm, that they were struck dumb, and, after some pause, rose up all together, with earnestness exclaiming, "Let us set out with him immediately." It was when thus beloved and celebrated that he conceived, at the age of forty-five, the design of devoting his life to reclaim and convert the natives of North America; and he employed as much influence and solicitation as common men do for their most prized objects, in obtaining leave to resign his dignities and revenues, to quit his accomplished and affectionate friends, and to bury himself in what must have seemed an intellectual desert. After four years residence at Newport, in Rhode Island, he was compelled, by the refusal of Government to furnish him with funds for his College, to forego his work of heroic, or rather godlike benevolence; though not without some consoling forethought of the fortune of the country whom he had sojourned.

"Westward, the course of empire takes its way,
The first four acts already past,
A fifth shall close the drama with the day;
Time's noblest offspring is its last."

Thus disappointed in his ambition of keeping a school for savage children, at a salary of a hundred pounds the year, he was received, on his return, with open arms by the philosophical queen, at whose metaphysical parties he made one with Sherlock, who, as well as Sumbridge, was his supporter, and with Hoadley, who following Clarke, was his antagonist. By her influence, he was made Bishop of Cloyne.

Of the exquisite grace and beauty of his diction, no man accustomed to English composition can need to be informed. His works are, beyond dispute, the finest models of philosophical style since Cicero. Perhaps they surpass those of the orator, in the wonderful art by which the fullest light is thrown on the minute and evanescent parts of the most subtile of human conceptions. Perhaps he also surpassed Cicero in the charm of simplicity, a quality eminently found in Irish writers before the end of the eighteenth century; conspicuous in the masculine severity of Swift, in the Platonic fancy of Berkeley, in the native tenderness and elegance of Goldsmith, and not withholding its attractions from Hutcheson and Leland, writers of classical taste, though inferior power. The two Irish philosophers of the eighteenth century may be said to have cooperated in calling forth the metaphysical genius of Scotland; for though Hutcheson spread the taste, and furnished the principles, yet Berkeley undoubtedly produced the skepticism of Hume, which stimulated the instinctive school to activity, and thought incapable of confutation, otherwise than by their doctrines.

PHILLIP EMBURY.—The Rev. F. Reed, of Pact Byron, New York, has in his possession the Bible of Philip Embury, having the autograph of the old pioneer on its title-page. This Bible was printed in 1611, and brought by Embury to this country. It was the one from which he preached in the rigging loft and old Wesley Chapel. The following is the title:

"THE BIBLE: Translated according to the Hebrew and Greek, and conferred with the best Translations in diverse Languages. With most profitable Annotations upon all the hard places, and other things of good importance, as may appear in the Epistle to the Reader."

"And also a most profitable Concordance for the ready finding out of anything in the same contained."

"Imprinted at London by Robert Barker, Printed to the King's most Excellent Majestie. 1611."—"Cum Privilegio."

SLIGHT COST.—According to Rev. Dr. Durbin, the whole expense (of Secretaries, Reports and all other agencies,) incurred by the Methodist Missionary Society, in collection and disbursing $271,000, last year was not $5,000. Less than two per cent!

INFLUENCE OF FEMALES ON SOCIETY.

From an accurate account of the condition of women in any country, it would not be difficult to infer the whole state of society. So great is the influence they exercise on the character of men, that the latter will be elevated or degraded according to the situation of the weaker sex. Where women are slaves, as in Turkey, the men will be the same; where they are treated as moral beings—where their minds are cultivated, and they are considered equals—the state of society must be high, and the character of the men energetic and noble. There is so much quickness of comprehension, so much susceptibility of pure and generous emotion, so much ardor of affection in women, and they constantly stimulate men to exertion, and have, at the same time, a most powerful agency in soothing the angry feelings, and in mitigating the harsh and narrow propensities which are generated in the strife of the passions.

The advantages of giving a superior education to women are not confined to themselves, but have a salutary influence on our sex. To fear that increased instruction will render them incompetent or neglectful in domestic life, is absurd in theory, and completely destroyed by facts. Women, as well as men, when once established in life, know that there is an end of trifling; its real cities and duties multiply upon them equally fast; the former are apt to feel them much more keenly, and too frequently abandon all previous acquirements to devote themselves wholly to these. But if the one sex have cultivated and refined minds, the other must meet them from shame, if not from sympathy. If a man finds that his wife is not a mere nurse, or housekeeper; that she can, when the occupations of the day are over, enliven a winter's evening; that she can converse on the usual topics of literature, and enjoy the pleasures of superior conversation, or the reading of a valuable book, he must have a perverted taste, indeed, if it does not make home still dearer, and prevent him from resorting to taverns for recreation. The benefits to her children need not be mentioned; instruction and cultivated taste in a mother enhance their respect and affection for her and their love of home, and throw a charm over the whole scene of domestic life.—William Tudor.

A WHOLESALE WEDDING.

A correspondent of the Memphis Appeal thus describes a connubial convention and demonstration that occurred recently on the plantation of Captain J. W. Jones, near that city;

Mr. James Hubbard, the faithful and excellent manager, assisted by his kind and affectionate wife, had everything in readiness. The brides, beautifully attired, were in waiting; the bridegrooms, each of ebony color, nine in number, made their appearance, and were conducted to the proper cottage and the order of the evening made known. Then with preliminary arrangements, they with each of their attendants, four in number, marched forth to join the brides and their attendants, under the blue canopy of heaven, on a beautiful blue grass plot prepared for the occasion, for no house could be found to accommodate the crowd of over one hundred and fifty. They (the nine couples and attendants) then formed and marched in silence in front of the dwelling where had assembled many friends of Capt. Jones and Mr. and Mrs. Hubbard to see an unusual sight; nine happy couples to be united in the holy bonds of matrimony by Rev. John Rosser, servant of Major John Rosser, of Camden, South Carolina.

Each couple, with their attendants, marched up after the ceremony, by our pious tabulator, and in knelt in prayer, imploring Heaven to bless each one of the nine couple. And, sir, the prayer seemed to be breathed with fervor and devotion for assistance from on High on his fellow-servants. After prayer, such kissing and joy as was manifested by the friends of each. Then in a few minutes, supper was announced; and permit me to say, that it was the most orderly crowd I had ever seen of blacks, attributable, no doubt, to no spirits or wine being used on the occasion.

THE LAND OF BEULAH.

No other language than that of Bunyan himself, perused in the pages of his own sweet book, could be successful in portraying this beauty and glory; for now he seems to feel that all the dangers of the pilgrimage are almost over, and gives himself up without restraint so entirely to the sea of bliss which surrounds him, and to the gales of heaven that are wafting him on, and to the sounds of heaven that float in the whole air around him, that nothing in the English language can be compared with this whole closing part of Pilgrim's Progress, for its entrancing, splendid, yet serene and simple lovelliness.—The coloring is that of heaven in the soul, and Bunyan has poured his own heaven-entranced soul into it. With all its depth and power, there is nothing exaggerated in it, and it is made up of the simplest scriptural material and images. We seem to stand in a flood of light, poured upon us from the open gates of Paradise. It falls on every tree and shrub by the wayside; it is reflected from the crystal streams that, between grassy banks, wind amidst groves and fruit trees, into vineyards and flower gardens. These fields of Beulah are just below the gate of heaven; and with the light of heaven come floating down the melodies of heaven, so that here there is almost an open revelation of the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him.—Chester's Lecture on Pilgrim's Progress.

DEGREES OF GUILT.—When the balance shall be struck between small sins (so-called) with great privileges, in the one scale—and crying sins with few responsibilities, in the other scale—who shall say infinite justice may not see deeper guilt in the unkind word, the uncharitable suspicion, the selfish act, and other manifestations of an un-Christlike spirit, in which Christians are too often tempted to indulge, than in the more glaring departures from the law of God of those who have but just begun to hear of a Savior's love, and to know anything of its constraining power.—English Hearts and English Hands.

HEATHEN IN NEW ENGLAND.—In the report on Home Missions recently presented to the Massachusetts General Association, the following astounding statements are made in relation to the religious condition of New England: "From reliable statistics it appears that in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, and Massachusetts not more than one quarter of the whole population are in the habit of attending church. There are one million three hundred thousand people in New England, who, so far as attending church is concerned, are, practically, like the heathen. There are twenty-six towns in this state which have no evangelical preaching."

Be just before you are generous.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, JULY 24, 1858.

The Yellow Fever is not making any perceptible progress in the city. During the last four or five days we have heard of no new cases whatever. The weather is delightful and the city healthy.

SUBSTANCE OF CORRESPONDENCE.

Our correspondents will please excuse us for the manner we peruse in condensing their favors. We are absolutely compelled to do so. On our arrival here, we found enough matter of different kinds awaiting us to fill the paper, outside advertisements, for weeks to come. What could we do but "pack it down" into considerably smaller compass, or reject the whole of it? And this is a tedious and laborious business. Some one is justly indebted to us a considerable bill for "press-work." By the way, could not somebody invent a correspondence-press? It would be invaluable (to us) as a cotton-press.

SABBATH SCHOOL CELEBRATION.

Dr. McAllister furnishes us with an account of the above celebration, which took place July 3rd. Port Hudson is a small village on the Mississippi. The Dr. says:

A Sabbath-school was organized here about eight years ago, has been in operation ever since, and numbers now about 40 scholars. Mr. Thomas Miller has been the Superintendent for years. At 10 o'clock, the young [illegible] and friends walked in procession to the Church—a very neat and comfortable edifice—where some remarks were made by the writer, in the absence of the speaker for the day—Rev. Mr. Piper. All then proceeded to a grove about half a mile from the village, where the young people, of both sexes, made addresses, recited Psalms, and spoke dialogues, for about two hours. Dinner was then announced; and such a dinner! A most ample supply of every thing good and nice.

Nor is the Church here less worthy of imitation than the Sabbath-school. They have preaching only two Sabbaths in the month, and but once in the morning, yet owing to the zeal, firmness, and consistent piety of a few old members, the society is in a prosperous condition.—This is owing, I am persuaded, to the fact that every Thursday night, regularly, they hold a prayer meeting much better attended, I learn, than oftentimes in large towns; and that class meeting is held every Sabbath evening, at 4 o'clock, throughout the year. Of this Mr. B. W. Truth is the leader. Where these two means of grace to be discontinued, I am satisfied that in a short time the Methodist Church in Port Hudson would be little more than a name.

MISSIONARY MEETING AT POINT WORTHINGTON.

Rev. W. G. Millsaps writes us, June 8th, of a Quarterly missionary meeting at the above place, in Mississippi. He says:

By appointment of our Quarterly Meeting our missionary sermon was preached at Worthington chapel. Though the congregation was unusually small, owing to overflowed and the absence of some on their summer trips, our contribution amounted to five hundred and five dollars. Bro. Murphy, from Ouachita Conference, preached a searching and entertaining discourse upon the christian duty of giving. Contrary to sage predictions, in discouragement of such an attempt, the small congregation felt their hearts generously expanding under the power of gospel truth, evincing itself in their subscriptions.

Since then, Mr. Millsaps writes that he has been prevented from attending his appointment by high water.

REVIVAL AT DANGERFIELD, TEXAS.

A Louisiana correspondent gives us an account of a revival of religion at Dangerfield, while on a visit there. He seems to have been under the impression previously that Texas was a sort of refuge of "outside barbarians." Many other people will change their opinions of Texas after visiting the country. Rev. Mr. Hamill is the preacher in charge of Dangerfield circuit, and conducted the services at the time mentioned. The Holy Spirit was most wonderfully poured out—the people of God shouted. His praise, and many sinners were brought to the knowledge of pardon. After service was over, the village, in the dead of the night, was vocal with song of praise. The meeting was still in progress when our correspondent left.

SUPPORT OF THE BISHOPS.

Rev. F. G. Ferguson, in a letter to the members of the Alabama Conference, on this subject, says:

We may subject our worthy Superintendents to great inconvenience, by a delay until the meeting of Conference. I therefore propose the following assessment and hope the Presiding Elders, with the help of all the brethren, will [illegible] it as speedily and remit either to Dr. A. H. Mitchell, Montgomery Ala., or to the Book Agent.

SUMMER SESSION FEMALE INSTITUTE.

A Mississippi correspondent writes of this institution as follows:

I have just been up to the commencement of the Mount [illegible] Female Institute, one mile north of Clinton Miss. As superintendent, I was agreeably disappointed. I found Mr. Rice, the President and his teachers to be all accomplished and erudite. Indeed Mr. Rice is almost an exception; although a denominational christian, he is no sectarian, for he has been known to advise Baptist children who were in his schools and who wished to join his own church, not to do so, but to join the church of their parents; he does not pro-elite, nor is there a Theodosia Earnest (a book of Sophistry) about his school.

Therefore his school is a safe one for all denominations, Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Baptists, etc. etc. [illegible] to the pupils, the graduates Miss Cabbel and Miss [illegible] acquitted themselves with honor; they read Essays that would have done honor to older heads.

The music, [illegible]ique; there I saw the nine Muses [illegible] their [illegible] those voices were most captivating. There could be seen also the Graces, with all their beauty [illegible] and charity manifested.

REVIVAL IN LIVINGSTON, ALABAMA.

Rev. [illegible] Cottrell writes a very interesting account of a revival in Livingston, growing out of a union prayer meeting, held by himself and Rev. Dr. Hall, of the Presbyterian Church, assisted occasionally by various other ministers. The prayer meeting commenced about the middle of April, and is yet in progress. He says:

Brethren, [illegible], unmarred, among all denominations, Methodist, Presbyterian, Episcopalian and Baptist, I have [illegible] None of your fraternity, but a genuine meeting together of Christian hearts, and a co-operation, perfect and permanent, to the close. Members of all these churches, perfectly at home around the altar, talking to mourners, praying when called on, presented to the world a spectacle seldom witnessed in these days of strife and dissention. The young converts (male) had a weekly prayer meeting, and such a troop of solid, substantial men, oh, its is glorious! May Heaven save the last one of them.

But the devil sent the circus, and the country people crowded in, with some members, and stewards of the churches. Hear the letter:

Could'nt spare the horses out of the crop to come to church, but no difficulty about being at the circus. Yet these are the men upon whom the cause of Christ is depending. Is it any wonder that Sabbath-schools fall through in such hands—that the old unelined unpainted barns (miss called churches) in which they worship should be rotting down over their heads—shame! shame! upon such spurious religion.

OUACHITA DISTRICT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Rev. R. R. R. Alexander writes some encouraging things. He says that with proper exertion five thousand subscribers to the Sunday-school Visitor could be obtained in that district. He gives facts as well as opinions. He says:

We have done something in behalf of the missionary enterprise, but ought and hope to do much more. On Bastrop circuit we made a missionary collection which resulted as follows; seven bales of cotton were pledged which, at thirty-five dollars each, amount to $245, thirteen life members, $260,00, and about ten dollars loose change—making an aggregate of about $515. In Minden circuit we secured in money and pledges about $82 and in Homer about $175. We trust that those who have thus liberally laid of their substance on the altar of God, will be visited with displays of divine mercy in their souls and communities. We hope for a revival during the year.

REVIVAL AT NATCHEZ.

We find in the drawer an old letter, of May 27, reporting a revival at Natchez, Mississippi which resulted in the conversion of forty whites and one hundred and fifty blacks.

REVIVAL ON VILLAGE CIRCUIT, ALABAMA.

Rev. W. C. Turner writes that in his circuit just around Mobile, a gracious revival has been prevailing.

We have just closed the most interesting series of meetings that I have ever attended. The Lord has blessed our labors among this people wonderfully. We have had the unexpressible pleasure of witnessing over one hundred and fifty conversions, and as many accessions. Besides I have baptized near forty infants, in addition to this we have Sabbath-schools at each appointment with an average attendance of between thirty and forty scholars.

REVIVAL ON CADDO CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA.

Rev. S. J. Hawkins writes of a series of sacramental meetings held on his circuit:

Several of the meetings were protracted. The last (at Friendship) continued nine days. And resulted in seven converts, nine recruits, and two hundred and eighty-five dollars missionary subscriptions.

DR. MITCHELL ON THEOPHILUS WALTON.

Rev. Dr. A. H. Mitchell sends us a letter in which he most earnestly recommends the general circulation of "Theophilus Walton," recently published. He says:

Depend upon it, sir, as the Western men say, "it is one of the books." I confess I despise the whole thing of mixing up fiction and romance with the solemnities of church ordinances which is the plan of "Theodosia Earnest," in which this is an answer; but then desperate diseases require desperate remedies, and I believe it is an ancient and wise maxim, "fight your enemies with their own weapons." I have often heard it said that error and falsehood will rest upon the head of the perpetrators; in this case it is emphatically so. Let this work be thrown broadcast over the land and let it find its way to the masses, for it is unusually adapted to them, and if it dont work wonders upon the subject of baptism, I'll give up my judgment. It not only settles the controversy as far as baptism is concerned but it stirs the waters amazingly upon the subject of close communion. I had often been told that this member of the Alabama Conference was a man of war, and been pointed to the plains of Rehobeth, Alabama, Macon Mississippi, and other battle fields streaming with the trophies of his conquering arms, but I had no idea he demolished enemies after this fashion. I do not attempt anything like a review of the book, for I want every body to read it, but I must say that the author has given evidence of research into history, a knowledge of the fathers, and a familiarity with ancient and modern languages which quite astonishes me. It will no doubt be a matter of information to many people to know that this Baptist novel, Theodosia Earnest, has had a run of 30,000 already and I want the sale of Theophilus Walton, circulated as widely and from what I learn the people are determined to have it, for 5,000 copies have already been issued and orders are coming in at the rate of 500 per week.

BLACK HAWK MISS.

A correspondent gives a glowing description of the Masonic celebration at Black Hawk on the 24th of June, which is too long, however, for our crowded columns. He also describes the examination of the female institution at that place, which occupied the last three days of June, and which, he says, was very creditable to the teachers and pupils, and highly satisfactory to the community.

AMERICAN SUNDAY-SCHOOL UNION.

A correspondent wishes to know, whether or not our church has any representation in the publishing committee of the American Sunday-school Union. We answer, no. The Methodist church has no official representative in any of the voluntary societies. Let our people remember it. When they are visited by agents not appointed by their own Annual or General Conference, they may take it for granted that their church has nothing to do with the enterprise sought to be promoted.

ALABAMA BAYOU.

Rev. J. Landam writes a long letter descriptive of the scenes and circumstances surrounding him in a portion of country where he had gone to preach, and where a protestant had never preached before. But we have not room for it. The planters have concluded jointly to build a church for the benefit of themselves and their servants, and a subscription has been commenced, headed by one person with three hundred dollars.

TEXAS COLORED MISSION, LOUISIANA.

Rev. J. D. Pitts sends his second quarterly report. He says:

There are nine appointments, one hundred and ninety-four members in full connection and fifty-nine on probation. I have preached to eight hundred and fifty servants; have catechised three hundred and eighty; I have taken in fifty-nine on probation and one by letter; have baptised eleven adults and twenty-three infants. I think I may safely say the mission is in a prosperous condition. the servants appear anxious to hear the word and it has not been entirely in vain, we have some interesting meetings.

CENTENARY INSTITUTE.

Of the recent examination of this old and worthy institution, we have a long report of more than eight pages from the Conference Committee, and also another letter on the same subject from Rev. T. Y. Ramsay. The interest thus manifested speaks highly in praise of the Institute, but we cannot possibly find room for them. The committee say:

The male department is under the direction of Rev. D. C. B. Connerly M. A. This gentleman is a graduate of the University of Alebama, has had many years experience in his profession; is a thorough disciplinarian and a skilful teacher. In the classical department we venture the assertion, he has few superiors. Conversant with the structure of the Latin and Greek languages, he carries into the recitation room decided tact and aptness, in teaching them. To this department he devotes his personal attention. The department of Mathematics is under the management of Prof. Hutchinson, a graduate of La Grange. Though a young man, he has acquired high reputation in the abstruse sciences.

Of the examinations in the male department, we are bound to say, that, they furnished satisfactory evidence of patient labor bestowed by the instructors, and of appreciative diligence and docility in the students.

This department closes with eighty-six students in its classes, several of whom are preparing themselves for the itinerant ministry. These latter are under the protection of the "Ministerial Education Society," of the Alabama Conference, an institution every way worthy of the liberal support of the friends of Methodism.

The female college is in charge of Rev. J. T. Montgomery, M. A., who is aided by a highly accomplished corps of assistants, among whom we are gratified still to find our old acquaintance and friend, the amiable and excellent scholar and gentleman W. C. L. Richardson M. A.

Mr. Montgomery is an old teacher. Has won for himself high reputation, before he took charge of the Centenary.

A noble body of young ladies has he had in charge.

The senior class acquitted itself finely. The examinations were here also fair, honest, for bidding emphasion.—In "Evidences of Christianity," they were excellent. In that beautiful, acetul, but difficult branch of Mathematics, Trigonometry, they really excelled.

This department closes with eighty-two pupils in its classes. This number is independent of "Irregulars," and the preparatory department, all told the number is one hundred and nine.

An interesting revival of religion this year embraced among its subjects about seventy-five of the students of the two departments, a glorious endorsement of the Great Head of the Church. Summerfield is "consecrated ground."

We were permitted to listen on Sabbath morning to the commencement sermon delivered by that big-hearted man and servant of God, Doctor Means of Georgia. It was a noble effort. Some of its passages thrillingly sublime.

Dr. Nesly delivered the address before the Castalian and L. M. J. societies, of this Female Department, and John T. Morgan Esq., the address before the three literary societies of the Male Department. Both are highly spoken of. Prof. Gieffer and his music are enthusiastically eulogized. Truly, Centenary must be renewing her youth.

THE ATLANTIC TELEGRAPH.

We think it quite probable that the people of England and of the United States will have to submit to another great disappointment, in the failure of the second attempt to lay the telegraphic cable between the two countries. The news, so far, from the steamers engaged in the work is entirely unfavorable. The weather however, has been exceedingly unpropitious of it may yet succeed. But another difficulty besides that of laying the cable, seems to exist—the failure of the transmission of the electric fluid along the submerged wires. Mr. P. P. Shaffner, affirms it to be fixed law of electric science that, when a cable is laid in water an element of retardation commences, and the current will not traverse long distances. He admits that it may pass a distance of a thousand or more miles, but will in longer distances fail altogether. The longest submarine cable ever laid is that between Varna and Balaklava across the Black Sea, about 340 miles.

We learn from the Picayune that there are engaged in this scheme three corporations, but really only one set of persons, incorporated, in different places, under three different names.—They are mostly concentrated in New York city.

In New York they are the American Telegraph Company, organized as a company within the United States, to form telegraphic combinations here, to act with companies out of the United States, having exclusive rights over lines entering the United States.

In Newfoundland these same men, identically, are incorporated by act of the provincial Legislature as the New York, Newfoundland and London Telegraph Company. In this character these parties have an exclusive grant for fifty years of constructing and using telegraphic lines from that island to any part of the world, to lay a wire to the coast of Ireland, and to purchase and work lines connecting with the United States. To prevent any competition, they obtained exclusive grants for landing telegraphic cables on the coasts of any of the British possessions in North America, and they obtained the same from the State of Maine, in the United States. They made the same application to Massachusetts, but failed.

Their third character is in the name of the Atlantic Telegraph Company, which is that incorporated by act of the British Parliament, for making and using the line between Ireland and Newfoundland.

These three companies, distinct in law and in nationality, are but one set of persons, mostly domiciliated in New York City. The Companies contract with each other under their corporate names, but the British company, and the American company, are composed of the same individuals—who are all the time bargaining with themselves, and employing the close monopoly which they own under the Newfoundland charter, to create a close monopoly of the right of telegraphing over the Atlantic wires, and over the communications with the United States. They have, under their British charter, excluded all Americans, and the American Government, from any fair share in the privileges of telegraphing, as the consideration for enabling them to perfect their monopoly of American telegraphing.

Since writing the above, the telegraph reports that the enterprise is undoubtedly a failure. It appears that three attempts were made to consummate the work. On the first essay, ten miles of the cable was lost; on the second attempt one hundred and twenty miles were laid, when the cable parted; it was joined again on the 28th, and the third effort was made, until two hundred and fifty miles were laid. Communication with the Agamemnon was then found to be interrupted, and the cable was parted, the Niagara returning to Queenstown.

Keep yourself innocent, if you would be happy.

THAT UNIVERSITY!

Which one? Why, the one that is to be. The University of "Look Out," "Sewanee," or some other locality, if the poor thing shall ever be allowed to find a resting place. It is known, as far as there is anything to be known, as the "University of the South." I think it a pet of Bishop Otey's and a protege of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the slave States. But what of it? Nothing; there is nothing of it. And from all appearances there will not soon be. The thing is a decided bore. For a great while by a certain system of operations, the newspapers have been kept ringing their changes on the "School" and the intended movements, the trustees and the Bishops, and the prospects of "Sewanee," and the travels of Prelates, and the intentions of some body to do something; but after all the "mountain," I mean the "Sewanee" or "Look Out," or Tennessee locale where phantom found a temporary rest, has brought forth literally "nothing."

And what then? Why this; whilst all this foam of the waves has been tossed by so many breezes in the faces of Southern readers of the journals of the day, a genuine University has been founded, built, endowed, and I presume a faculty elected, and the doors of the institution are soon to be opened, and yet the public has not been annoyed with a single scrap of such puffing and crying out lo! here and lo! there, as the still unknown, unlocated, unbegotten, unexpected "University of the South," has managed to keep up.

The Methodist people of Alabama, amongst whom are a large proportion of the most wealthy and cultivated citizens, have erected a series of most elegant and commodious buildings for a great University at Greensborough and raised in cash $300,000, as a beginning for a nobler endowment fund. Nor is this all, but it is something to have accomplished so silently, so unostentatiously, and it argues well for the future fortunes of the enterprise.

Below, you will find the last notice I have read on the "Sewanee" scheme, and the grand council of the Board seems fixed for Beersheba Springs.

I presume we shall soon get another bulletin from some of the party, and may expect to hear of a new site chosen for the thing that is to be.

Meantime, we would like to hear from our Greensborough neighbors and be informed what they are doing.

SILLILD.

UNIVERSITY OF THE SOUTH.—Polk, of Louisiana, arrived here on Monday, on the H. D. Newcomb, from New Orleans, on his way to Beersheba Springs, to be present at a meeting of the Trustees of the University of the South.—This Convention will be composed of the Bishops of the Episcopal Church in the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, and Tennessee, with lay delegates from each State, and has been summoned for the purpose of acting officially on the acceptance of the charter of incorporation granted by the late Legislature of Tennessee, and for taking such measures as the act requires for organizing the institution and concerting measures for the vigorous prosecution of the work.

DEATH OF REV. DR. BUNTING.

The death of this distinguished Wesleyan Divine is mentioned in the telegraphic despatch from Halifax of the Arabia's news. For more than half a century,—for close upon sixty years,—Dr. Bunting wielded so vast an influence in the Wesleyan Church, and was so eminently a public man; that a brief epitome of his influential career cannot fail to interest the general reader, even on this side of the Atlantic.

Dr. Bunting was a native of Derbyshire, and at the time of his death was about seventy-eight years of age, and had been a minister of the Methodist Church about fifty-one years. During that time he held in succession almost every high position at the disposal of the Church and was several times selected President of the Wesleyan conference—the strongest evidence of esteem and confidence which a minister of that denomination can receive at the hands of his co-laborers. He was also for many years senior Secretary of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, the great financial success and general prosperity of which society were to a great extent the result of his admirable and sagacious management. Subsequently he was chosen president of the Wesleyan College at Richmond, which office, as his years and infirmities increased, he more than once resigned, but the conference refused to accept his resignation, but he held that office, with the understanding that he should bear as little of the burden of it as possible, to the time of his decease.

For some years, we believe, he has been very infirm, but has nevertheless taken an active part in counseling the Wesleyan Church in its missionary, educational and financial departments. He was unable to attend the last conference of the body, but sent a touching and affectionate farewell to his brethren, expressing his belief that he should no more appear among them. Few men, we believe, either in this country or in England, have more completely filled the sphere in which they were called to move than did the venerated Dr. Bunting.

PURGATORY.—The "Purgatorial Society," says an exchange, is the title of an organization instituted by Archbishop Hughes, the foundation of which is the annual subscription by its members of fifty cents, to be expended in behalf of souls in purgatory; to procure an alleviation of their sufferings, and a final release from their punishment. By a circular issued in New York, under the sanction of the Archbishop of the diocese, it appears that "all who say three 'Our Fathers,' and three 'Hail Marys,' in honor of the Passion of Jesus, and the sorrows of the Blessed Virgin, gain three hundred days' indulgence each time, all which indulgences are applicable to the souls in purgatory."

A HAPPY DELIVERANCE.

The Nashville Christian Advocate, which, we suppose, is now regularly in the hands of the new editor, has some sensible and striking remarks on the contract between the Northern and Southern Methodist Churches in reference to the slavery question. It says: "When the full time came, the rule was voted out with singular unanimity. It had never done any good, according to the best testimony. The Conference set out to clear the record of the whole subject. This it set out to do, and did. The question, in some shape, had long been troubling the Church of God; it had hatched evil like a cockatrice. Resolve this or that about it, treat it any way otherwise than Christ and his apostles treated it, and harm comes of it. We meant to come out of the agitation clean, straight, without complication or resolutions pro or con. While our Northern brethren are off their moorings, and tossed on a troubled sea, thank God our ship has been brought safely to land. No more legislation, no more quarrelling, no more dividing about slavery!

When we glance at the papers of the Church, North, and see the headings of communications and editorials—the resolutions of Conferences—the angry debates—the divergent councils—the intemperate heat—the bickerings—the predictions of ruin—the brotherly denunciations—the fraternal animosities—the criminations and recriminations, all about slavery we rejoice at our deliverance. Their columns are burdened with that one thing—have been for years, and promise to be. Other matter is excluded or overshadowed. It shades like a Upas, and eats like a cancer. Division calls for subdivision—to infinitessimals. The more they talk, the less they agree. Their pulpits are rabid, and their people disgusted with the theme. Verily, with small hopes of it, we wish them like peace with ourselves. Do they envy us? Rather they should rejoice with us. One branch of Methodism stands on New Testament ground. It was an evil day when the Church left it: we have been toiling to get back to it. We mean to stand on it."

DEATH OF GEN. QUITMAN.

In General John Anthony Quitman, the South has lost one of her truest and most admired sons. He died at Natchez, Mississippi, the place of his residence, on the 17th inst. We learn from the Delta that he had hurried home to be in readiness to attend the Pharsalia Encampment, to which he was especially invited. He had accepted the invitation to be present and to receive and confer honor as the chief guest of the citizen soldiery on that occasion; and, not heeding the warnings of incipient disease, with a true soldier's zeal to keep his word and be punctual at every hazard, he taxed all his energies in order to reach home in time for the encampment and review.

Alas! he reached the spot in time, but his body was prostrated. He came with the harness on, but not for him any more the heated field, the throbbing drum and the bayonsted line. He came at the hour of summons, but another summons awaited him. His sense of duty was too strong for prudence, but it could not resist disease. The brave old man answered to his name when the muster-roll was called; that was all he was able to do, and that was too much, it was perhaps fatal.

On the day of General Quitman's arrival at Natchez he was very ill, and was taken to the sick couch from which he was not to arise again. The warrior and statesman, who had so often, in high emprise and noble strife, looked on battle and defeat, met danger and achieved triumph, on whose brow thickly clustered alike the civic and the mural wreath—that honored veteran breathed his last at the home of his youth and his age, gently as an infant falls to sleep on its mother's breast.

BISHOP SOULE.

A correspondent of the Western Methodist Protestant thus speaks of a sermon delivered by Bishop Soule recently, at Lebanon, Ohio:

"Everything in his discourse was rendered inviting practical. His love of the sublime and the beautiful was all rendered tributary to one grand holy end, the useful. He shows a deep reverence for all true philosophy; but in his administration prefers to deal with the concrete rather than with abstractions. He has an insight into the deepest springs of human action, the conjunct causes of what is termed character, such as few men ever attain; and this alone must have given him a commanding influence. Not only so; but we must remember that Bishop Soule has been one of the most laborious ministers of our age, having performed more active service than any other preacher in America that is now living, or has died during the last century. His name is, and must be the property of evangelical Christianity, though it must by association be especially dear to Methodism, in whose faith he has lived and suffered.—a faith on whose doctrines has never been any controversy among the branches of the great Methodist family in this country. Methodists have had their family differences; but in doctrine they are a unit, differing only in Church polity. In this sense ours too are the fathers. Not only Snethen and Shinn, but Bascom and Soule."

THE DRUIDS.—The various orders of the Druids in England, America, and Australia, seeing the advantages of a member finding himself, as it were, at home wherever his order chances to have a lodge, they have determined, if possible, to re-unite them into one grand order, so that the above advantages may extend to every part of the world where Druids are to be found.—Their privileges not only include the Masonic principle of philanthropy but also embrace the advantages of friendly societies, and extend to paying and receiving money for each other, and also to watching over the necessities and conduct of members when from under the surveillance of their own lodges.

Prussia is the largest exporter of wheat to England, next Russia, and then the United States.

ENTERPRISE AND SUCCESS.

The N. Y. Tribune advertises enormously, and doubtless at enormous prices, the Ledger newspaper. It gives facts respecting the Ledger's advertising policy which are exceedingly suggestive to business men. The Ledger is a weekly paper of but a few years' standing, but its publisher has expended about a quarter of a million dollars in advertising it in the Tribune and other journals; one hundred thousand dollars of it within the last year. The results have justified this magnificent outlay. The Ledger now issues some three hundred and twenty thousand copies regularly; keeping eight single-cylinder power presses running on its weekly edition from Monday morning till Saturday night. The white paper of each issue, dry, weighs thirty-three thousand eight hundred pounds, six hundred and fifty reams, weighing fifty-two pounds each; and each edition, as it comes damp from the press, must weigh from twenty-five or thirty tuns. The publisher's only in obtaining this enormous circulation has, of course, been great; but he has made it all out of his business, and something more. Extensive advertising and cash payments are two secrets of success in business.

ANCIENT WASHINGTONIANS.

The Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Sun gives the following interesting incidents of the visit of the old soldiers to the White House on the 5th inst: "Col. Seaton then took his stand by the side of the President, and as each of the veterans passed he was introduced by name to the Chief Magistrate, who shook hands with each and exchanged a pleasant remark. Of one of them the President inquired, "How long have you lived in Washington?" He said "sixty-eight years." "Why," said the President, "that was before there was a house here." "Yes," said the old man, "I helped to carry the chains of the surveyors when they run the lines of the city through the woods." As the soldiers passed along, the President repeated to another a similar inquiry, when he received for reply, "I worked, sir, on the old capitol—my boy, 54 years old, is now employed on the new."

"Col. Seaton introduced Mr. John Sessford as the "father of the city." "How long have you resided here?" asked the President. "I came," said the venerable man, "before the Government; I entered the office of the National Intelligencer in 1800."

DUEL BETWEEN CLAY AND RANDOLPH.—The cause of the duel between these distinguished men, was the following insulting language used by Mr. Randolph towards Mr. Clay, in secret session of the Senate, in 1825: "This man—(mankind I crave your pardon)—this worm (little insects forgive the insult,) was spit out of the womb of weakness—was raised to a higher life than he was born to, for he was raised to the society of blackguards. Some fortune, kind to him, cruel to us, has tossed him to the Secretary of State. Contempt has the property of descending, but stoops far short of him. She would die before she would reach him; he dwells below her fall. I would hate him if I did not despise him. It is not what he is, but where he is, that puts my thoughts in action. This alphabet, which writes the name of Thersites, of blackguard, of squalidity, refuses her letters for him. That mind thinks on what it cannot express, can scarcely think on him. A hyperbole for meanness would be an ellipsis for Clay.

A LONG PASTORATE.—On the 27th of June, Rev. Dr. Saell, senior pastor of the First Congregational Church in North Brookfield, preached a discourse appropriate to the day as the annual anniversary of his settlement. He is now in his eighty-fourth year, and has lived to see all the church over which he was settled in his youth, swept away by death. Having preached a discourse at the fortieth, and another at the fiftieth anniversary of his ordination, the discourse in the present instance had historical reference only to the last ten years, during most of which period, as senior pastor, the preacher had been relieved from responsibility and active service by the associate pastor, Rev. C. Cushing.

OFFICE HOLDERS.—The baneful effect of the proximity of the Federal Capitol to the adjacent Commonwealth, may be observed upon inspection of the pay rolls of the different departments at Washington. One hundred and seventeen clerks claim citizenship in the "Old Dominion," at an aggregate salary of $166,860. Three hundred and eighty-three belong to the District of Columbia, receiving $425,613 per annum. Eighty-three are natives of Maryland, at an annual salary of $118,780. One hundred claim allegiance to the same State that the President does, Pennsylvania, receiving $140,780 annually. No other State is credited to the amount of $100,000, and none others are so unreliable and doubtful in political position.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.—Rev. Dr. Francis Wayland says of the liquor traffic: "If any one chooses to continue the traffic in alcohol, I have one word to say. My brother, when you order a cargo of intoxicating drink, think how much misery you are importing into the community. As you store it up, think how many curses you are heaping together against yourself. As you roll it out of your warehouse, think how many families each cask will ruin. Let your thoughts then revert to your own fireside, to your wife and your little ones; look upward to Him who judges righteously, and ask yourself, my brother, Is it Right?"

UNION OF PAPERS.—According to the advice of the late General Assembly of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, two of their organs have been made into one. An arrangement has been made to unite the "Watchman and Evangelist" and the "Missouri Cumberland Presbyterian" in one paper, to be published at St. Lous. The new paper is to be edited by Dr. Bird, and called the Observer.

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

FLORIDA RAILROAD COMPANY.—The Madison (Florida) Messenger learns, through a private letter from Fernandina, that the Florida Railroad Company has transferred its entire interest in the road to a company in New York, consisting of Georgia Law, Vanderbilt and others, millionaires; and that they are about to establish an Atlantic and Gulf line of steamers, constructed with all modern improvements, and have the whole under their own control.—It is expected that the work on the road will progress rapidly, and that the whole will be in operation by the first of April next.

THE HARPERS.—In a report of the Committee on Books and Periodicals, made to the late General Conference at Nashville, allusion was accidentally made to the "suspension of the Messrs. Harpers, of New York." It is but just to that well-known firm that it should also be stated, that (showing a balance of over a million and a half of dollars) their suspension proved but a very brief one. They resumed payment in full, with interest, very soon; and their business has been carried on without interruption, and as extensively as ever.

THREE GOOD REASONS.—A correspondent of the "Western Missionary," says that in traveling in the West he recently put up for the night at a house where none of the family could read, but they took the newspaper above named, and when the visitor expressed his surprise that they should take a paper when no one could read it: "Oh" said the man "we take it for comers and goers, and I like to spell out a word or two in it, and besides I want to help support it."

OPENINGS FOR THE BIBLE.—At the late monthly meeting of the Managers of the American Bible Society, communications were read from agents and correspondents in Fuh Chau, China, Buenos Ayres, Peru—Athens, Greece,—Madras, India, and Oregon and California, reporting progress in the work of Bible distribution. In China, the young converts love the Bible, and in California, there has been a great demand for it.—Five new auxiliaries were recognised at this meeting.

SCHOOL NOTICES.—The Southern Christian Advocate declines to publish "communications giving full notices of the examination and attendant exercises of village and neighboring schools." It says: "The plea that the Advocate circulates in that neighborhood will not do.—Precisely there the facts are known before published; and elsewhere they are not considered important."

REV. THOMAS STRINGFIELD, an old, esteemed, and talented minister of the gospel in the Methodist Church, of the Holston Conference, died on the 4th of June last, after an illness of ten days. Only twelve days before, we parted with him at the close of the General Conference. His health then appeared to be perfect. But he is gone!

"His spirit hid with saints above,
His body in the tomb."

THEOPHILUS WALTON, a reply to Theodosia Guest, by Rev. W. P. Harrison, of the Alabama Conference, has been sent us by the author. We have not had time as yet to read it, but hear it very highly spoken of. It is having large sale, and so it should.

REV. H. N. MCTYEIRE, the former editor of this paper, now editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate, received the degree of D. D. at the recent commencement of the Florence Wesleyan University, Ala. An honor well and worthily bestowed. We congratulate our friend and predecessor.

BELGIAN TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE.—A London paper states that a new translation of the Scriptures in Flemish is about to be published in Belgium by a very intelligent Roman Catholic professor. It is expected to be a great improvement on the old one, and may be made instrumental of good.

REV. DR. JOSEPH CROSS has been elected to the Presidency of the Spartanburgh Female College, S. C., in place of Rev. Dr. Charles Taylor, who was chosen by the General Conference Secretary of the Sunday School Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

BISHOP SCOTT, of the Northern Methodist Church, has arrived in California, as we learn from the California Christian Advocate. He will visit various localities, superintending the work generally, and presiding at the Oregon and California Conferences.

HONORARY.—We observe that our friends, Rev. Leonidas Rosser, the new editor of the Richmond Christian Advocate, Rev. S. D. Baldwin, author of Armageddon, and Rev. C. K. Marshall, have had the honorary degree of D. D. conferred upon them.

TENNENT LOMAX, Esq., a valued friend of earlier times, who has for many years past been the editor of the Columbus, (Ga.,) Times and Sentinel, in which post he distinguished himself as a gentleman and writer of high-toned honor, taste, and ability, has recently retired to private life.

YELLOW FEVER AT NEW YORK.—Considerable anxiety has been awakened by the arrival, at the New York Quarantine, within the last few days, of several vessels from Cuban ports, with cases of yellow fever on board, in its most virulent form.

The English papers state that an order has been issued by the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury, that the service in the Prayer Book for the celebration of the Restoration of King Charles II. be discontinued.

COMMUNICATIONS, in abundance, and of all varieties, found on hand on the arrival of the Editor; will be attended to as soon as possible.

The Washington papers announce that the President has taken up his residence at the Military Asylum for the summer.

THE AMERICAN CHAPEL in Paris, for the accommodation of Protestant Americans of all persuasions, as no one denomination is able to have a chapel of its own, is conducted upon the compromise principle. One of the questions which rose at the very outset was—"what forms of worship can be devised, in which these Christians can unite?" Happily the solution seemed to be presented in the Wesleyan Chapel, Rue Royale, where Episcopalians and other sects, Americans and English, united in a service which comprised portions of service in the Book of Common Prayer in the morning, and a purely non-Episcopal service in the afternoon. This plan, the Episcopalians were willing to accept.

OPEN COMMUNION.—A paper under the title of The General Baptist Banner, has been started in Murray, Ky., by J. H. Elliott, to advocate open communion among the Baptists of that and the adjoining states. The following fact proves the need of some such effort in other quarters: The King's Mountain Baptist Association, North Carolina, passed the following, at its last session: "Resolved, that it is inconsistent with the faith of the Baptists to invite into our pulpits Pedobaptists, to exercise with us in religious worship in any way whatsoever; also, to receive persons into fellowship who have been immersed by them, without baptizing them."

RELIGIOUS INTEREST IN NORWAY.—The powerful revival of religious feeling among the people in Norway is making its influence felt even in the councils of the nation. At the recent meeting of the Legislature, an important measure for organizing a lay body in every church to assist the minister in his spiritual labors, was lost by only a small vote. Another bill was adopted for the appointment of twelve ministers at large to render assistance to large and over-burdened parishes.

NEW YORK CITY.—The New York Tribune thinks the city proper has 900,000 inhabitants, Brooklyn 300,000 to 400,000, and that the adjacent suburban population will swell the metropolis aggregate to 1,500,000 of actual or business residents. There are 600 lawyers, who, at a reasonable estimate, must receive $2,500,000 to $3,000,000 per year, while 1,100 physicians receive about as much more.

NEWS FROM THE INTERIOR.

LOUISIANA.

The Banner says that the scarlet fever is prevailing in Franklin. Rev. Mr. Duna is establishing a Female Institute in that place. A new steamer is to run between New Iberia and Brashear. Wind and a rain in superabundance is complained of, though the crops are promising.

Letters from Madison Parish represent the crops as hopelessly damaged by the overflow.

The Morehouse Advocate says that all the streams in that parish are falling, and congratulates the citizens that they have so large a body of alluvial soil entirely above overflow. The crops are represented to be very promising.

The Lake Providence Herald says the river at that place has fallen thirty two inches in all, and has stood at that point for ten days. It earnestly recommends a better levee system for the future.

The Vernon Times speaks of fine rains, and promising crops and recommends an Agricultural Society in Jackson Parish.

The Monroe Register says that the Vicksburg, Shreveport, and Texas Railroad is not at all injured by the overflow, because the plan was adopted of laying the rails above high water mark.

ALABAMA.

It is said that the Coosa river, can be made navigable from Wetumpka to Rome, Ga., a distance of 350 miles.

The Montgomery Mail says: "From all parts of the State we hear of glorious crops of corn, but it is feared that the unusual quantity of rain that has fallen will seriously damage the cotton by shedding, and forming too much of the weed. Since Monday evening the weather has been fine, and the probability is that we shall have dry weather for some time to come. Mr. Smith, a gentleman connected with operations on the line of the railroad in Coweeta, was in our sanctum yesterday, and informed us that the grading in that county is progressing favorably.

The Eutaw Whig reports fine rains, and fine crops, but complains of the incipient ravages of the ball-worm in the cotton.

MISSISSIPPI.

Letters from Sun Flower county, Upper Yazoo and from Bolivar, represent the first as in danger of great damage by the overflow, and the crops of the second as fine.

ARKANSAS.

From Helena and Lacenla we hear of much damage by the overflow.

The Brandon Republican says: "We have had any quantity of rain until a few days past. The weather is fair and warm. Crops have been somewhat injured by excessive rains, but they, nevertheless promise an abundant harvest. The health of the country was never better.

The Marshall Democrat gives a very interesting account of the recent examination of the state Normal College, and expresses great regret that President Stark has determined to resign.

FLORIDA.

The Tallahassee Sentinel says: "During the past week, we have been visited with fine rains, and from all parts of the country, we hear the most glowing accounts of the crop prospects. In fact, the crop prospects of Middle Florida were never known to be better and more promising at this season than at present.

TEXAS.

From almost every part of Texas the reports of the crops are of the most encouraging character.

We learn from the Civilian that the Shippers' cotton press, on the bay on the west end of Galveston, was almost totally destroyed by fire on the 4th inst.

The loss on the press, buildings and fixtures is estimated at $25,000. The owners are Messrs. R. & D. G. Mills, A. P. Lufkin, Allen Lewis, Stacy B. Lewis, and E. B. Nichols. Messrs. Mills and Lufkin were insured, perhaps, to the amount of three-fourths of their interests; but we have not learned whether the other parties had any insurance.

The Houston Telegraph says that there are about one hundred and fifty hands at work on the third section of the H. and T. C. Railroad. The next ten miles will very soon be ready for the iron. The completion of this section will put sixty continuous miles of road in operation. When the remaining fifteen miles of the Galveston road, between Virginia Point and Houston are completed, which will be in time for the fall business, there will be more than one hundred and thirty miles of railroad connection between Galveston Bay and the interior.

Capt. Eli Chandler, an old and well known citizen of Texas, was killed at a celebration on Cedar Creek, in Brazos county, on the 3d inst., by a young man named Jordan.

Mrs. Jane Stoneum, of Grimes county, died on the 2d inst., at the advanced age of 105 years.

The Galveston Civilian says the price of corn, new crop, in the interior, seems to be generally fixed at 25 cents per bushel.

The San Antonio Herald, speaking of the cotton crop west of the Colorado, says:

A well informed commission merchant of Lavaca, largely engaged in the cotton trade, after travelling through the greater portion of the cotton counties, estimates the growing crops of the counties that ship through Matagorda Bay at 30,000 bales. Last year it was less than 10,000 bales.

The Columbia Democrat, of the 13th inst., says:

The reports from the cane are most cheering from all parts of the county. It is now growing very rapidly.

The frequent and abundant rains are having a bad effect upon the cotton. In some fields the rust is killing it out at an alarming rate. A few weeks of dry weather is very much needed.

The Dallas Herald, of the 10th inst., says:

A man named Holloway was killed by his step-father-in-law, Bearden in Collin county, on Friday last. Nine buckshot from a shot gun lodged in the body of deceased; killing him in a few minutes. It was a family difficulty. Bearden has escaped.

DOMESTIC.

Attorney-General Black sustains Minister Forsyth in his protest against the forced contribution by Mexico upon citizens of the United States.

Commander Page, has had an interview with the President relative to the Nicaragua expedition. No commissioner to Nicaragua has yet been appointed.

The Secretary of the Navy is confined to his house by sickness.

The Mormon Peace Commissioners have despatched to the Goverment that they have settled the difficulties with the Mormons by a treaty of peace with them.

The War Department has received official dispatches from Col. Steptoe, announcing his defeat by the Indians in Oregon. He was attacked on the 17th of May by a large body of Indians, eighty miles north of Snake River. The Colonel's force was 157 men. The battle lasted all day, when he retreated, with seven killed and twelve wounded.

Major J. W. Dashiell has been dismissed from the army for defalcation in his accounts.

Official dispatches have been received by the Government from New Granada, to the effect that the latter has appointed J. M. Hartado, Superintendent for the purpose of promoting the comfort and security of passengers over the Panama Isthmus Railroad.

Mrs. Blount has finally agreed to return home with her daughter, having lost faith in De Riviere.

Gen. Harney has encamped seventy-five miles beyond Fort Kearney.

Two cars were smashed on the New York and Erie Railroad on the 16th, at Port Jervis. Two others were killed and forty severely wounded.

The up and down mail trains of the Jackson railroad came into collision on the 16th, near Batula. Several persons were wounded, but none killed.

Col. Steptoe has been defeated by the Indians in Oregon, and is censured by the Government.

The Atlantic Telegraph enterprise is a failure, the Niagara and Agamemnon have abandoned the attempt to lay it and returned home.

W. T. Porter, of the "Spirit of the Times," is dead.

Dispatches from Fort Leavenworth report that Col. Johnston entered Salt Lake City on the 26th of June.

Capt. Marcy was there previous to his arrival. All was quiet, and the Mormons had been invited by Gov. Cumming to return to the city and take possession of their deserted homes.

FROM EUROPE.

The Arabia, which sailed from Boston for Liverpool on the 14th, arrived at Halifax on the 16th.

The Canada also arrived, having been detained by the fog fifty-five hours outside the harbor.

The Canada's advices state that the British revenue for the fiscal year falls short over five millions pounds sterling.

The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council have confirmed the decision of the lower court, which made the steamer North America liable for damages in her collision with the ship Leander.

The demand for money was active, and at full rates.

The Rev. Mr. Spurgeon, the modern Whitfield of London, who has recently attracted so much attention throughout the world contemplates visiting America, this season, and making a tour of the United States.

General Rus de Alano has been appointed Governor-General of Cuba in place of General Concha removed.

The troops in the department at Florida are to be disbanded on the first of August.

The Kangaroo arrived at New York last Wednesday, with Liverpool dates to the 7th, a few hours later than by the North Star. No change in cotton.

The river is still rising at St. Louis. The Camanches, enraged by losses sustained from the Texas Rangers, are troublesome.

Local Intelligence.

PROPRIETORS OF THE DELTA have our thanks for their prompt generosity in striking off our inside last week in consequence of an accident to our press.

The Comptroller has adjudicated the lease of the wharves for four years from the 1st of October next at a total of $601,000 against $544,100 at the previous sale for three years.

NOLAN, who was hung for murder a few days since, had a wake in his honor the following night, and on the following day his funeral train caatalaed between seventy-five and a hundred carriages. Funeral-going is a mania with a certain class of the city population of the United States, and noted criminals, or notorious characters share more than others in the intended honor.

No deduction made for absence of pupils, unless in cases of protracted illness, or by special agreement.

BOARDING, ETC.

In this particular, we would inform the public that a large and elegant Boarding House, capable of accommodating more than one hundred young ladies, has been built in connection with the Academy. This building will be under the immediate supervision of President Hamilton and his accomplished lady—assisted by an agreeable and experienced matron. The rooms are sufficiently commodious, thoroughly ventilated, and handsomely furnished with good beds, mirrors, carpets, tables, wardrobes, etc. And to avoid confusion, as well as for the sake of convenience, the different suites of rooms are supplied with speaking-tubes, bells, and other modern improvements. In addition, the President will employ a sufficient number of trustworthy servants to meet the demands of the house in the very first style, such as cooks, washers, chambermaids, dining room servants, etc. Gentlemen's fires will be charged $5 00 per session of five months, everything included, one half of which must be paid at the beginning of each term.

THE CORPS OF INSTRUCTORS.

The Board of Trustees feel that they have cause to congratulate themselves and the country because of their success in securing the efficient and talented invaluable services of the experienced and reliable President, Dr. A. L. HAMILTON, who unites every grace of mental accomplishment with an integrity of purpose and an energy which insure success in whatever he undertakes. Being a Virginian by birth, he is a fine specimen of the "old Virginia gentleman," and has had large experience in teaching, having been many years principal of the Clarksville Male Academy, in several places in the South, permanent and now flourishing institutions. We would without hesitancy recommend Dr. Hamilton as in every way worthy of the esteem and patronage of the entire community.

As regards the Assistants, we beg leave to state that they were carefully selected by President Hamilton from some of the best Female schools in the South. They are all thoroughly educated, high toned, and accomplished ladies; and, in addition, have had great experience in the school-room. The Trustees take great pride and pleasure in recommending them as eminently well qualified in every particular for their respective departments, to parents and guardians who have daughters and wards to educate.

We have hitherto felt the necessity of a first class Female School in our midst; one that could cope with the most renowned institutions of the North and East; and we now tender to the country our sincere congratulations upon having at last secured so great a desideratum.

THE CITY OF CLARKSVILLE.

Clarksville is situated on the right bank of the Cumberland River, contains about five thousand inhabitants, and is the capital of Montgomery county, Tennessee. Its location is high and commanding; and for health is equal, if not superior to any other point in the United States; being in latitude 36°; —far enough South to be free from the rigors of a Northern winter, and far enough North to be exempt from the dangerous and deadly epidemics of the South. Its society is of the very first order, and the city sufficiently large to furnish every elegance and luxury, without the concomitant expense, extravagance and depravity of a larger city. It has churches of every Christian denomination, and also a good Male College. Finally, Clarksville is accessible from all points of the compass, and therefore we most cordially solicit patronage from abroad.

CONCLUDING REMARKS.—Parents and guardians who may patronize our school will be notified in due time of all examinations, vacations, etc.

For further particulars address the President of the Institution, or, JNO. F. HOUSE Clarksville, Tenn. jy24 3t

The Great Drawback to persons emigrating to the extreme Western country, is the great fear they have of the Fever and Ague—the most dreaded of all diseases. Every day we hear of persons attacked by this disease, and made helpless in a short time without any means of affording relief. In view of the great demand for a remedy, DR. HOSTETTER has presented his celebrated "Bitters," whose curative powers for all diseases of the stomach have been universally acknowledged. The "Bitters," prepared after a long experience and deep study, have received the encomiums of the most eminent physicians, as well as all classes, from every part of our country. To those who doubt their many virtues, all we can say is, to try them, and judge for themselves respectively.

Sold by Druggists every where, and by HOSTETTER & SMITH, Sole Proprietors, 58 Water and 56, Front street, Pittsburg. july 1 4t

LARD.—A lot of 50 bbls. No. 1 sold at 10½c ₱ lb.

MONETARY AND FINANCIAL.

No movement of importance has characterized the market to-day. There were one or two round negotiations of paper at 8 @ 9 ₱ ct, the latter for long dated, but generally speaking, the market is very tame, and not worth alluding to. Money is very abundant for loans inside of January, and even beyond that period there are takers for the little that is offered.

There have been no transactions in Stocks, but there is a partial inquiry for certain descriptions.

Exchange is firm, but the business is quite moderate.

POETRY.

THE WAYSIDE SPRING IN ALABAMA.

Bonnie wayside burnie,
Tinkling in thy well,
Softly as the music
Of a fairy bell;
To what shell I compare thee,
For the love I bear thee,
On this sunny day,
Bonnie little burnie,
Gushing by the way!
Thou art like to fifty fair things,
Thou'art like to fifty rare things,
Spring of gladness flowing
Grass and ferns among,
Singing all the noontime
Thine incess nt song!
Like a pleasant friend,
Like a word in season,
Like a friendly greeting,
Like a happy meeting,
Like the voice of comfort,
In the hour of pain,
Or sweet sleep long vanished,
Coming back again;
Like the heart's romances,
Like a poet's fancies,
Like a lover's visions
Of his bliss to be;
Like a little maiden
Crowned with summers three,
Romping in the sunshine
Beautiful to see;
Like my true love's accents
When alone we stray
Happy with each other,
Through the meads of May!
Or sit down together
In the wintry weather,
By the cheery fire
Gathering in that circle
All this world's desire,
Hope, and love, and friendship,
And music of the lyre!
Bonnie little burnie,
Winding through the grass,
Time shall never waste thee,
Or drain thy sparling glass;
And were I not to taste thee,
And bless thee as I pass,
'Twould be scorn of Beauty,
'Twould be a want of Duty,
'Twould be a neglect of pleasure—
So, some, thou little treasure!
I'll kiss thee while I may!
And while I sip thy coolness,
On this sunny day,
I'll bless thy Gracious Giver,
Thou little baby river,
Go bing by the way!

OBITUARIES.

JOHN M. DURAND, son of Geo. W. and Ann E. Durand, died at his residence in Autauga county, Ala., June 24th 1858, in the 47th year of his age. He had been a member of the M. E. Church, about 18 years, filling the office of class leader and superintendent of the Sunday-school at the time of his death. It was the privilege of the writer to visit him twice, a day or two before his death; found him "quite on the verge of Heaven." He asked for an explanation of the mystery, (viz.) that he should feel no disquietude, no dread alarm, in the certain prospect of entering the dark "valley of the shadow of death," and of standing in the presence of his Judge. The explanation was given, which seemed to confirm him in the consciousness of his Savior. He was a quiet unpretending humble christian, a peaceable neighbor, an affectionate and patient father and husband. His life was remarkable for uniform christian serenity; and his end was in certain hope of a glorious immortality. Thank God for such an impression upon his children, while his memory is like precious ointment to his bereaved and heart stricken wife. May our Father in Heaven comfort the bereaved on earth, and save them in Heaven at last.—Amen.

WILLIAM B. NEAL.

DIED—On 12th April last at the residence of Mrs. Rew near this place, our beloved Bro. ROGER McGRATH, age 66 years. He was born in Ireland and removed to this country in early life and was for many years a resident of Macon county, Ala., was known and beloved as one of our most worthy citizens. He lived without the comforts of religion until about 8 or 9 years ago when he embraced Christ, and lived a faithful and happy member of the M. E. Church. The writer was intimately acquainted with him for 22 years and always found him a warm hearted friend, he was a devoted husband a kind and intelligent master, hospitable and charitable to all. It was our privilege to visit Bro. McGrath frequently during his sickness which continued about four weeks, and we ever found his mind clear, and his faith strong and unwavering.—When we approached his bedside the evening he died he remarked, "Bro. McCrary my last thread is almost spun but I am ready, my faith is in God and all is right." Though he died from home he was surrounded by his friends who gave him every attention that could have been given to any one; his affectionate and bereaved wife was by his side when he breathed his last and closed his eyes, remarking at the time in sorrowful tones O! who can more tenderly close the eyes of a dear dying husband, than his own dear companion. Thus passed away one of earth's noble sons, and a true and faithful member of the M. E. Church. His residence was near Tuskegee, Ala.

P. R. McCRARY.

Pleasant Hill, Alabama Conference, July 6th, 1858.

MRS. SARAH S. CHILDS, was born 14th of July 1820, in Madison parish La., and departed this life July 11th 1858, at the residence of her brother J. M. Carter, in Richmond, Louisiana. Some ten years ago she joined the M. E. Church, as a seeker of religion, often since that time she professed to find great peace and comfort. For about five months before her death she was the subject of deep affliction which she bore with christian fortitude. Her end was peaceful and full of faith. She declared a perfect willingness to depart and be with Christ. She now rests from her toil and sufferings, she has gone to reap her reward in bright mansions above." She leaves two orphan children behind; may God protect and guide them o'er life's tempestuous ocean and ultimately bring them to see their mother in the heaven of eternal rest. J. A. M.

Millikens Bend, La., July 1 th 1858.

MRS. MARY LIPSCOMB, wife of Mr Anderson Lipscomb, died in Sumter county, Ala., June 23d 1858, after a short illness, aged 37 years. Mrs. Lipscomb was a native of South Carolina, having emigrated to this State about twenty years ago. She has been an acceptable member of the M. E. Church South, about 13 years. Mrs. L. was one of those quiet and retiring characters, whose worth can be fully appreciated only by those who knew her most intimately. She was an affectionate wife, devoted mother, and an indulgent mistress; and an humble and consistent christian. She has left a husband, and five children to mourn her loss. She had been in bad health for some time before her death. Her last sickness was short, but exceedingly painful. Her life, and religious experience leave to her husband and friends, the inexpressible consolation that she sleeps with Jesus. J. M. HOOD.

DIED—At the residence of her grand-mothers, in Morehouse parish, LOUISIANA ADELINA HAWIT, aged 11 years and 6 months,

Rest dear L., in gentles lumbers,
Till the resurrection morn,
Then arise to join the numbers
That its triumphs shall adorn.
Once thy presence was endearing;
Now thy absence we deplore;
At the Savior's bright appearing,
We shall meet to part no more. A. B. H.

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

THE INFIDEL'S CHILD.

The following fact communicated by a foreign correspondent of the American Spectator at Albany, shows alike the blessing of Sunday-schools, and the influences which even these "little ones" may exert upon others for good.

In the city of London there lived a little girl, who attended, for three years, and by stealth, the teaching of a Sabbath school. Coming under the same saving influence of truth, she became concerned for her father, a noted infidel and active opposer to Christianity. She obtained a Bible, but knew not how to put it into his hands; for she feared his displeasure, and dreaded any prohibition which might deprive her of the prized advantages of the Sunday-school. She retired to seek Divine guidance. Her father passing the door of the apartment, heard the voice of his child; it was the voice of prayer for him. He became affected, agitated, distressed. After a little while, the family assembled at tea-table; the beverage was handed around, but he could not partake.

"Is there a Bible in the house?" said he.

"My dear," replied his wife, apprehensive of the purposed repetition of the act, "did you not burn every Bible that we had, not leaving so much as one?" Is there any other good book then he inquired. His little daughter, thinking that God might be answering her prayer, arose and took him by the hand, and asked him to go with her; and when they had left the room, looking into his face, said, "Father, sure you won't be angry with me, Come with me, and I will get you one." And she brought him and gave him the Bible which for this very purpose, she had procured. He felt deeply, and trembling, while he handed it back to her, said, "My child, I cannot read this book. Will you read it for me?" She did so. And then taking her in his arms he kissed her, and said, "Tell me, my child where did you get this book, and how you obtained the knowledge of it?"

She told him all—how she attended the Sunday-school, the effect upon herself, and how she became concerned for his salvation. That evening, he accompanied her to the chapel.—As they entered, the minister was engaged in prayer. His manner and address made a powerful impression on the father's mind, for he seemed to talk with God. The sermon aided in deepening the impression. It was an interesting sight, when, two or three Sundays afterward, that father appeared in that chapel, with his wife and nine children, and openly renounced his infidelity. That was the Welsh House chapel; the minister, Thomas Binney; and that infidel, reclaimed through the influence of Sunday-school instruction on the heart of his child was the celebrated author of "The Every-Day Book."

A GRAVE WITHOUT A MONUMENT.

The noblest of cemeteries is the ocean. Its poetry is, and in human language ever will be, unwritten. Its elements of sublimity are soul, issues of feeling, not description. Its records, like the reflection mirrored on its waveless bosom, cannot be transferred to paper. Its vastness, its eternal heavings, its majestic music, in a storm, and its perils, are things which I had endeavored a thousand times to conceive; but until I was on its mighty bosom, looking out upon its moving mountain waves, feeling that eternity was distant from me the thickness of a single plank, I had tried in vain to feel and know the glories and grandeur of the sea. I there first felt what John of Patmos meant when he said of heaven; "There shall be no more sea." But there was one element of mornful sublimity which impressed my mind, and which I should be pleased if I could transfer, in all its vividness, to the minds of your readers.—The sea is the largest of cemeteries, and all its slumberers sleep without a monument. All other graveyards, in all lands, show some symbols of distinction between the great and the small, the rich and poor; but in that ocean cemetery the king and the clown, the prince and the peasant, are alike undistinguished. The same wave rolls over all—the same requiem, by the minstrelsy of ocean, is sung to their honor.—Over their remains the same storms beat and the same sun shines; and there, unmarked the weak and the powerful, the plumed and the unhonoured, will sleep on until, awakened by the same trump, the sea will give up its dead. I thought of sailing over the slumbering but devoted Cookman, who, after his brief but brilliant career, perished in the President—over the laughter-loving Power, who went down in the same ill-fated vessel we may have passed. In that cemetery sleeps the accomplished and pious Fisher; but where he and thousands of others of the noble spirits of earth lie, no one but God knoweth. No marble rises to point out where their ashes are gathered, or, where the lover of the good and wise can go and shed the tear of sympathy. Who can tell where lie the tens of thousands of Afric's sons who perished in the "middle passage?" Yet that cemetery hath ornaments of which no other can boast. On no other are the heavenly orbs reflected in such splendor. Over no other is heard such noble melody. In no other are so many intimitable traces of the power of Jehovah. Never can I forget my days and nights as I passed over the noblest of remeteries, without a single human monument.—Giles.

BE GENTLEMEN AT HOME.

The are few families, we imagine, anywhere, in which love is not abused as furnishing the license for impoliteness. A husband, father, or brother will speak harsh words to those whom he loves best, simply because the security of love and family pride keeps him from getting his head broken. It is a shame that a man will speak more impolitely, at times, to his wife or sister than he would to any other female, except a low and vicious one. It is thus that the holiest affections of a man's nature prove to be a weaker protection to a woman in the family circle than the restraints of society, and that a woman is usually indebted for the kindest politeness of life to those not belonging to her household. Things ought not so to be. The man who, because it will not be resented, inflicts his spleen and bad temper upon those of his own hearth stone, is a small coward, and a very mean man. Kind words are circulating medums between true gentlemen and ladies at home, and no polish exhibited in society can atone for the harsh language and disrespectful treatment too often indulged in by those bound together by God's own ties of blood, and still more sacred bonds of conjugal love.

CHEERFULNESS—Try for a single day, I beseech you, to preserve yourself in an easy and cheerful frame of mind. Be but for one day, instead of a fire-worshipper of passion and hell, the sun-worshipper of clear self-possession; and compare the day in which you have rooted out the weed of dissatisfaction with that on which you have allowed it to grow up—and you will find your heart open to every good motive, your life strengthened, and your breast armed with a panoply against every trick of fate; truly you will wonder at your own improvement.—Richter.

"SWEET HOME," the beautiful song always heretofore said to be composed by John Howard Payne, is now attributed, by a gentleman in Boston, who is vouched for by the Boston Atlas, to Washington Irving.

Never play at any game of chance.

JONAS MICHAELIUS.

We find the following interesting article in the Historical Magazine, written by its editor:

The letter of Domine Michaelius, written from the "Island of Manhattan," on the 11th August, 1628, just brought to light in Holland, and communicated to the Historical Society by Mr. Murphy, our ambassador at the Hague, is a matter of great interest and curiosity, especially to historical students in this quarter. It supplies an important link in the imperfect chain of events going back to the first settlement of this city. It adds a new fact to the annals of the Dutch church, and shows the presence of a respectable and well-educated clergyman among the original colonists, at least five years earlier than the records or any previous reason to suppose. It reveals the name and services of this clergyman, of whom no trace exists in the records of church or state on this side of the water. Yet he was the friend of Saxtorius and Cloppenburgh, (to the former of whom his letter is addressed,) as well as of Selyns, Petr and Triglandius, all ministers of the Reformed Church at Amsterdam, with whose jurisdiction the gemeente, or congregation, here, was placed. Dominie De Witt must now stand at the head of the list of his predecessors at New Amstelodam; and Bachelor with the added dignity of writing a new and 223d page to his valuable history of the Knickerbockers, for "Everardus Bogardus" can no longer be considered "the first clergyman of Manhattan." Michaelius was here certainly two years before him, and is therefore entitled to the honor of all going other representatives of the synod of Dort turns up to pluck the laurel from his brow.

It is now and has been before the American people and their agents for ten years; during that period it has gained a reputation unparalleled by any similar preparation extant. The most reliable testimonials in favor of its virtues can be had gratis of any of his Agents, which are to be found in every section of the country. Should any person entertain a doubt after reading the certificates of the wonderful cures performed by this remedy, a trial of one bottle will be sufficient to convince the most skeptical that this remedy is really deserving the great celebrity it has obtained.

THE LONGEST DAY.

How thy glad lover runneth forth to greet
Each glory, Summer bright, thou bring'st with thee!
A nine enamored sense no'er falls too sweet
The fullness of thy fragrance; not for me
The deeps of azure glow too steadfastly;
With thy noontide fire I gladsome burn,
And for the endless smile of thy sweet evening years.
What has one charm of thine with me most power;
I love thee best for thy long lingering light.
Each beamy moment in each golden hour
I would not lose; O blessed scout of night!
O Summer, clad all o'er in garments bright!
Even to thy very feet they flame and flow,
And now they softly gleam, and now they strongly glow.
Light, sweet early guest! How the gray dawn
Glows into day and reddens! How the beam
Thy young lord pours on the rosy morn
A golden glory! How all things do gleam
Steeped in the splendor of thy noontide stream!
How sweetly follow afternoon's clear shine,
And purple and thy gold, O Summer eve divine!
What softness on thy golden glory creeps,
Sweet, lingering light! How happy all things lie
In the soft splendor of thy rosy deeps!
On thy delicious dying how mine eye
Keeps watch enamored! Yet thou wilt not die.
Midnight half o'ercome—half won to thy
Smiling realm within light's golden empery.
Longest day! thou canst not shine too long
For mine enamored eyes. O golden hours!
Never thro amidst your dazzling throng,
O light! thy glory sweetly overpowers.
Thy lover glad in Summer's noontide bowers,
Shall not faint amid those bowers supernal,
Or bring half-shrinking eyes to the sweet Light Eternal.
Lord! If for such high grace thou hallow me,
How will this lover of pure summer days
Enjoy that day where night shall never be!
What eagle eyed archangel shall ontgaze
This happy wooer of th' eternal blaze?
O heavenly lover, everlasting light,
Still hallow these glad eyes! still stream on them more bright!

PREACHING TO THE BLACKS.

Mr. Editor: It was my privilege, not a great while ago, to attend one of our country churches on the day for preaching to the colored people. It was a beautiful Sabbath morning, in the month of December. Not a cloud could be seen to dim the cheerful sunlight, as it peered through the rich green foliage of the trees. All nature seemed decked in her gayest attire, and there was naught to inspire man with other than feelings of gratitude and triumphant praise to the great and eternal I Am.

Not having had far to travel, I was soon at the appointed place of worship, and a little before the usual hour for opening service. The minister had not yet arrived. Much to my astonishment, however, I did not find the house of prayer containing little else than empty, cheerless benches; but many, even at this early hour, had assembled for worship; and yet in every direction members might be seen, wending their way with anxious steps to the house of God; and still they came, until scarce another could be seated. They seemed not to have resorted to this sacred spot for a mere social interchange of thought and sentiment—to while away the moments which yet remained before service in light and trivial conversation, as, I lament to say, is too much the custom among a more intelligent class. Not a moment appeared to be spent in idleness. Immediately on entering the sacred edifice they engaged in prayer and praise to God; and as the loud hosannas of these sable sons and daughters of benighted Africa reverberated through the dense forest, a voice seemed to echo back that God was not a stranger to their hearts.

When the hour arrived for opening service brother F——, our missionary, after the usual introductory exercises of reading from the word of God, singing and prayer, proceeded to catechise quite a number of children; and I assure you, it was a matter of interest to witness with what aptness they responded to many of his interrogations. He then read a lesson from St. Mark ix, and delivered a searching and eloquent address, from the 17th to the 29th verse inclusive. His discourse was replete with urgent appeals to christian fidelity; nor was it wanting in kindly admonitions to the unawakened sinner.

At the proper time there was an invitation for mourners, when many came and kneeled around the altar of prayer, while others vainly attempted to suppress the emotions of their hearts. Several of the colored brethren were then called on to lead in prayer, when they responded in fervent and touching appeals to a throne of grace. I was indeed struck with the terseness of their style, and with the correctness with which they made use of many scriptural quotations, which are most certainly very precious to every Christian's heart.

A collection was then taken up for the benefit of the church sexton, to which was shown a liberality worthy of a more enlightened race. Immediately preceding the conclusion of this exercise, quite a prominent colored brother arose and very gravely announced that on a certain Sabbath in December he wished to take up a public collection for the benefit of their minister. It was, he said, with much reluctance he made this announcement, but as there had been some delay and considerable interruption, occasioned by not having their money changed to-day, he hoped next time that they would come prepared. But, says he, quite authoritatively, bear in mind, when you have reduced your change to 50 and 25 cents, you have made it small enough, as we do not wish to contribute smaller sums than this. Now, I ask you, Mr. Editor, in how many of our most wealthy congregations is there a spirit of Christian benevolence, equal to this?

Yes, my brother, we would gladly turn away from the consequences of a spirit of selfish, unyielding illiberality, unworthy even the example of the untutored slave, and which, for aught we know, is encroaching with slow but steady tread upon the very threshhold of our Methodism.

And in conclusion I would say, few of us feel the great utility of this Christian enterprise—the cause of missions. What a vast deal of good has already been accomplished in this way; and yet what a field of labor remains to be performed. Is there a Christian man or woman, who feels the burden of souls and can claim exemption from this important duty?

I would ask, "Are there not the very heathens at our doors?" Does not God, to an extent, look to us for the enlightenment of their darkened understanding—for their spiritual instruction? And can these ends be reached—can this noble work be successfully performed by the missionary without the co-operation of master and servant? God grant that there may be renewed interest upon this point, and that every man and woman may make it a subject for deep meditation. Yours in Christ, ALPHA.

Mississippi, May, 1858.

THE CONVERTED LAWYER.

AN EARNEST, PERSEVERING MOURNER.

R. A. C—— is a young lawyer of fine standing, residing in the town of D——, in the State of A——. During a religious awakening in the fall of 1857 he became convinced of his condition as a sinner and commenced seeking salvation, but the meeting closed without his obtaining pardon. Hearing of another meeting some six miles from his town, he went to it immediately and made himself known as a seeker of religion; but this meeting closed without his having "found the pearl of great price." It was not long, however, before he learned that a protracted meeting was in progress in an adjoining county, and to it he repaired at once, and at the first invitation for mourners he presented himself at the altar and gave unmistakable evidence of his deep concern for salvation. Every lineament of his face was a clear indication of his fixedness and earnestness. He persevered—he "fainted not"—and "in due season he reaped." One evening, after the morning services in the church had closed, while at a friend's house, God revealed himself "the fairest among ten thousand and altogether lovely."—All nature assumed to him a most beautiful and lovely aspect.

That night, when he met with the worshipers in the sanctuary, his face beamed with brightness and joy. He had "passed from death unto life," and was happy in God his Savior. He returned to his home with new and unspeakable emotions.

When a suitable occasion presented itself, he attached himself to the Methodist Church, and for nearly twelve months has been "walking uprightly." Let this encourage others. "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted."

J. W. S.

GENIUS OF JOHN HOWE.

Considered intellectually, Howe may be affirmed to have combined many great qualities, the possession of any one of which in an equal degree would have been sufficient to raise him to eminence and fame. Excelled by Baxter in pulpit oratory, and by Owen in theological learning and exegetical tact, he was by far the most profound philosophical thinker of all the Puritans, and perhaps produced a greater number of original and uncommon thoughts than any theologian of his age. Scarcely surpassed by Edwards in logical acumen, or by Butler in ingenuity and depth, how far does he transcend both in pathos and imagination! And yet his imagination does not overlay his thoughts, as is sometimes the case with Jeremy Taylor; it is a trained faculty, the beautiful handmaid of reason, bearing it up into the sunlight "on wings of silver and feathers of yellow gold." His writings abound in sublimity, but are comparatively passionless. In this respect Baxter's style resembles the impetuous flow of the broad river, Howe's is that same river expanded into a calm lake, whose quiet depths are the mirror of innumerable stars. One characteristic effect of his writings is to tranquilize and elevate the soul. You feel yourself seated on some lofty mountain, in a serene air, and looking down upon clouds and storms far beneath your feet. As we read him, he brings up Milton's picture of contemplation to our thoughts,

> "With even step, and musing gait,
> And looks commercing with the skies."

Yet, as a writer, Howe is not without characteristic faults of the Puritan divines. The tendency to dilate on what should only have been touched, and to check the continuous flow of thought and style by minute and perplexing subdivisions, has seriously diminished his popularity as a writer. Often his diction is not equal to his thoughts, and we almost wish, after he has brought out and shaped the marble, that he had invited Bates or Tillotson to add the tracery; though in some of his greatest passages, such as his immortal comparison of the soul of man to a temple in ruins, the flight is nobly sustained, and his words come with all the opulence of Jeremy Taylor's finest passages, and take their place as if guided by a magician's wand. But when all these deductions are made, John Howe must be recognized as one of the primary stars in the firmament of English divines, shining with a serene luster peculiarly his own; and if Jeremy Taylor has been styled the Spenser, Howe may with equal justice be styled the Milton of English theology. Dr. Andrew Thompson in the Encyclopedia Britannica.

Universalism.—Elder Swan very justly says that if the doctrine of universal salvation be true, then the Bible ought to read, "Wide is the gate and broad is the way that leads to heaven, and everybody goes there; strait is the gate and narrow is the way that leads to hell, and you can't find it if you try.

Ethnography.—This science, one of modern creation, describes the customs, religion, and, in fact, everything which is characteristic of a nation. The importance of pursuing it as a study cannot be too highly estimated in this traveling age, and it takes an equal place with geography and history, for without them it cannot be understood, and at the same time its facts throw much light on them.

THE FOUNTAIN OF YOUTH.

A correspondent of the New York Courier and Enquirer, writing from Florida, thus describes the famous fountain Wakulla, which has been rendered historical in the annals of Spanish adventure:

A few days since I returned from a visit to this famous fountain. I can vouch for its existence. I suppose that the efficacy of its miraculous virtues has long since vanished.—But its beauties are so extraordinary, and its whole nature so anomalous as to excite in the beholder no little admiration and wonder.—"Wahalla" Springs, for so the Indians christened them, are situated sixteen miles south from Tallahassee. They form the sources of the Wakulla river, which, flowing directly south twenty miles, mingles with the waters of the great Gulf.

The springs, covering an area of some two hundred yards in circumference, are entirely embosomed in a dense forest of oaks and cypresses, whose limbs are hung with banners of gray moss, which give a solemn, sombre appearance to the surroundings. From the shore you remark at once the singular clearness of the waters and the distinct colors of blue and green which cover in patches its surface. By means of a rough scow and stalwart negro at the sweeps, our party was soon afloat. Not a ripple curled the smooth surface.

Stretched at length upon the boards, we gazed down into the limpid depths. By actual measurement the bottom was two hundred and eighty feet below us, yet we could distinguish the minutest object there with the utmost precision. A bit of silver in gentle undulations, slipped to the bottom, and appeared undiminished in size. At times the white sands were flecked with dancing shadows, or when at rest were tesselated with hues of every variety of shade. Shells and flakes of mica radiated like prisms.

In some places immense trees were reclining upon beds of moss like giants at rest. There were elevations and depressions, huge ranges of a coral-like rock, "and valleys stretching in pensive quietness between." There were abrupt precipices and toppling crags which overhung abysses which no plummet has yet sounded. Mosses and waterplants covered other places like forests of ferns. They waved their tops as if fanned by a gentle breeze. And there were vast troops of fishes whose home life we could look in upon without breach of etiquette.

They seemed entirely unconcerned, looking up at us with perfect indifference, and moveing silently on into the mossy forest beneath. A dozen yards distant was an ugly looking alligator who eyed us wistfully. On a nearer approach he gradually sank into the water and disappeared from view in a bed of rushes.—While skirting along the borders we came over the bones of a mastodon, which we judged to be about eighty feet below the surface.

They consisted of portions of the jawbone, with several of the teeth in good preservation. Several years since, a gentleman in this vicinity, by means of a marine armor, succeeded in recovering a large quantity of these bones.—They are very calcareous, and crumble easily by exposure to the air. These Springs are no ordinary curiosity. To the naturalist and the man of science they afford a subject for investigation and interesting exploration. The sombre forest, the cloudless heavens, the strange water-fowls, associated as they are with the enjoyments and pleasantries of a delightful party, will not soon fade from my memory.

THE KING OF TERRORS.

Like other great monarchs, Death also has his harbingers to proclaim and prepare his approach. He sends before him the most agonizing pains and afflictions; diseases that consume our strength and vigor, and sometimes induce us to expect his arrival every moment. By the trembling joints, the dimness of the eyes, the changed countenance, the breaking of the bowl at the cistern, and the loosing of the silver cord, we know that he is near at hand. There is a shadow cast before him, extending according to the bigbt of his terrible majesty, and stretching over part of the vale of life. Yes, all that precedes our dissolution, all that is preparatory to the last stroke, are harbingers of death, afflictive in themselves, and to be dreaded on their own account, but peculiarly fearful as the precursors of this great adversary. As these are his forerunners, so he has innumerable and dreadful instruments to destroy. The famine and the pestilence are in his hand; he kindles the fury of the battle, and riots in the field of slaughter; he wings the forked lightning, and expands the jaws of the devouring earthquake; the air we breathe, the elements by which we are supplied, and the food upon which we subsist, are often converted into the instruments of death; he levies a contribution upon all, extracts the poison of mortality from that which is given for the sustenance of life. * * * The empire of Death, which it has required so many ages to overflow, which has seemed to recover from its defeats, will at last sink by one powerful stroke, never to rise again. It will not require more than a moment of time to raise all the dead, to lay open every sepulchre, to restore every particle of dust, that is fit to be restored, to its proper body, and for all the bodies of the saints to be prepared for the mansion of eternal glory. How insipid and tame are the histories of all these kingdoms and empires, when compared with the grand and wonderful achievements of the King Immortal, and the fall of death beneath his power, and the giving up of all his prey. Death shall be known and feared no more. Millions of millions shall join in everlasting praises to him whom all the redeemed will acknowledge as their great deliverer.—Robert Hall.

FLOWERS ON THE GRAVE.

The early custom of decorating the grave with flowers prevailed among the Greeks and Romans. The epitaph of the greatest of Grecian poets, the celebrated Sophocles, written by Simonides, proves that such a custom of honoring the illustrious dead then existed:

> "Wind gentle evergreen to form a shade
> Around the tomb where Sophocles is laid,
> Sweet ivy, wind thy boughs and interwine
> With blushing roses and the clustering vine;
> So shall thy lasting leaves, with beauty hung,
> Prove a fit emblem of the days he sung."

This custom, still observed in England, Wales, and Germany, as well as some parts of the United States, is fraught with the most delightful associations, and induces an elevation of sentiment and a poetry of feeling equally calculated to mollify our grief, and to invest the sepulcher with the kindling emotions of hope and immortality.

> "On the earth the thorns and roses are blending,
> And beauty immortal awakes from the tomb."

Good men are human suns! They brighten and warm wherever they pass.

HOW THE PACIFIC WAS DISCOVERED.

On a golden autumn day, almost three and a half centuries ago, near a summit of a mountain on the Isthmus of Darien, a company of Spanish soldiers and native Indians came to a sudden halt. They were the party of the heroic Castilian explorer, Vasco Nunez de Balboa.—Thus far they have marched from the colony on the Gulf of Darien, for many weary days, through dense tropical forests, infested by venomous reptiles and fearful wild beasts—through pestiferous swamps and black slimy streams, and over rocky heights, encountering the most dreadful fatigue, illness, hunger and thirst, in the hope of discovering a new ocean, upon whose shores might lie that country of whose marvels and riches the savages told such wonderful stories—the India of which the great hearted Columbus dreamed, when he set out on that voyage which the wise men of Europe thought would end in a plunge down some ocean cataract, into a black chaos, a thousand leagues below the world.

Balboa had been assured by his Indian guide that from the summit of a certain mountain he would behold the sea, whose waves washed the shores of vast territories veined with gold and silver ore. Rousing their little remaining strength, the daring adventurers toiled up the rough ascent, as eager to behold the promised sea as were the Israelites of old to catch sight of "the promised land." But just before they reached the highest point, their leader commanded a halt, and all paused, breathless, but reluctant. Balboa had resolved to be the first to behold the Pacific, and he proceeded alone to the summit. I do not think that this was a noble act, but a selfish one, quite unworthy a true hero. Surely those brave followers, who had shared with him all the perils and hardships of the expedition, should have had their full share in the first joy of the discovery. But he had it all to himself—the glorious sight of that vast placid ocean—those green and flowery shores—the beauty, the grandeur, the mystery of a new world—and it was more than he could bear unmoved. He sank on his knees and gave thanks to God. Then he called up his followers, and they cut down a large tree and made of it a great cross, which they erected on the spot, in sign of conquest and civilization. They also carved the names of King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella upon several prominent trees—thus taking possession of the land.

They then descended to the sea-shore, and Balboa having waded in, waved his drawn sword, and in the other the Spanish standard, stood in the rising tide and shouted—"Long live the King and Queen of Castile!"—thus taking possession of the sea.

WORDSWORTH AND HIS BOOKS.

One story, thoroughly characteristic of Wordsworth's indifference to every production of modern growth but his own poetry, we recently heard from a friend. When "Rob Roy" was published, some of Mr. Wordsworth's friends made a picnic, and the amusement of the day was to be the new novel. He accompanied them to the selected spot, joined them at luncheon, and then said—"Now, before you begin, I will read a poem of my own on Rob Roy. It will increase your pleasure in the new book." Of course, every one was delighted, and he recited the well-known verses; and the moment he had finished, said, "Well, now I hope you will enjoy your book;" and walked quietly off, and was seen no more all the afternoon. The very rough mode in which he handled books showed how little he cared for them. Southey said, to let him into a fine library was like turning a bear into a tulip garden; and De Quincey tells of his cutting open a "pracht-edition" of Burke with a knife he had just used to butter toast. What a contrast his pious remorse at the ravage of the nut-bough—

> "I felt a sense of pain when I beheld
> The silent trees, and the intruding sky;"— and the earnest reverence of the exhortation that follows:

> "Then, dearest maiden! move along these shades
> In gentleness of heart; with gentle hand
> Touch—for there is a spirit in the woods."

Brimley's Essays.

AUTOGRAPHS.

In a recently published article on "autographs," the writer thus speaks of the handwriting of several of the English sovereigns: "How characteristic is the signature of Queen Elizabeth! stately, tall and queen-like, commanding and imperious, but defaced with ignoble and trivial flourishes; it is a combination of hardness, power, and vanity; her hand varied remarkably at different periods, as her actions did. Henry the Seventh, wrote a cold and formal hand; Henry the Eighth wrote a strong, self-willed; Richard the Third wrote a vigorous, reckless, and dashing; Anne Boleyn wrote a steady, composed hand, not without elegance; Catharine Parr's writing is pedantic, with much cold, persevering energy; Mary, Queen of Scots, a plain and elegant hand, with much clearness and firmness; Edward the Sixth wrote a hand of laborious pedantry; Queen Anne wrote a motherly hand; James the First, a vulgar, obtrusive hand."

Literary Men and their Wives.—I do maintain that a wife, says Sarah Coleridge, whether young or old, may pass the evenings most pleasantly in the presence of the husband; occupied herself, and conscious that he is still better occupied, though he may but speak to her, and cast his eyes upon her from time to time; that such evenings may be looked forward to with great desire, and deeply regretted when they have passed away forever. Wieland, whose conjugal felicity has been almost as celebrated as himself, says, in a letter written after his wife's death, that if he knew she was in the room, or if at times she but stepped in and said a word or two, that was enough to gladden him. Some of the happiest and most loving couples are those who, like Wieland and his wife, are both too fully employed to spend the whole evening in conversation.

Genius and Accomplishments.—Corneille did not speak correctly the language of which he was such a master. Descarts was silent in mixed society. Themistocles, when asked to play on a lute, said, "I cannot fiddle, but I can make a little village and a great city." Addison was unable to converse in company. Virgil was heavy colloquially. La Fontaine was coarse and stupid when surrounded by men.—Hence, it has been remarked, "mediocrity can talk; it is for genius to observe."

A Noble Standard.—The late lamented Rev. Dudly A. Tyng, of Philadelphia, said to his father Rev. Dr. Tyng, as he was dying, "Stand up for Jesus; father, stand up for Jesus; and tell my brethren in the ministry, whenever you meet them, to stand up for Jesus."

As we must render an account of every idle word, so must we likewise of our idle silence.

SLEEP DELICIOUS.

What person of mature years can look on a sleeping child, and not envy the unconscious luxury of that undisturbed repose, especially if it is one's own child. It is none other than a pure delight to the parental beholder.

A lady correspondent writes: "From utter exhaustion, I slept all night like an infant. How ineffably soothing and refreshing was that sleep, three nights since. This power of resting, even for one brief night, encouraged me greatly. I feel even now, wasted as I am, if I could only have refreshing sleep—if I could rest—I could get well."

The excellent writer was suffering from no specially dangerous or critical malady; but from a general derangement of the whole nervous system. The incident is recorded for the purpose of bringing to the reader's mind the duty of habitual thankfulness for any ability he may have to go to bed, to fall asleep within ten minutes, and know nothing more until the gray morning breaks—a deep and warm gratitude should well up constantly from a loving heart to the Giver of all good for the unfelt bliss of a whole night's sleep.

Some persons are put to sleep by having the soles of the feet rubbed gently with a soft, bare hand.

We know of no better plan for securing good sleep to persons not specially invalids, than to observe the following:

1. Take a very light supper, not later than six P. M.
2. Heat the bare feet before a fire, for the last fifteen minutes before bed-time.
3. Occupy a large room, with a window or door partly open, and, the fire-place unclosed.
4. Go to bed at a regular hour.
5. Get up the moment of waking next morning, at whatever time that may be.
6. Do not on any account sleep a moment in the day time.

The result of these observances will be, in all cases where there is not a serious disease of body or mind, that the person will, in a few days, go to sleep promptly, and wake the very moment that nature has had all the repose needed.—Journal of Health.

REVERENCE FOR ROYALTY IN SPAIN.

M. Forcade, a man of consideration among the French literati, has just returned from a journey through Spain to Alicant. He witnessed there the inauguration of the Madrid and Alicant Railroad; he had take the same route as Queen Isabel on her way to the port, and stopped everywhere to observe the popular manifestation. He relates in the Political Chronicle of the Revue des Deux Mondes, that multitudes of the people of the towns and the country traveled from all distances to hail the Sovereign at the railroad stations; they waited hours for her arrival under a burning sun; the greater part knelt as she approached; doves were let loose to fly about the equipages; the Queen herself was astonished at the enthusiastic emotions of the concourse; she repeatedly wept for joy, and held forth the Royal Princess, her youngest child. The diversified and picturesque original costumes of the peasantry—especially of the mountaineers—and the varieties of countenance and stature enhanced the interest of these scenes. M. Forcade remarks: "Royalty in Spain is truly an institution with a deep, vigorous vitality; the politicians of Madrid have no idea of the fervor of the national sentiment in the provinces and along the coasts."

THE MOCKING BIRD.

Many have raised these beautiful birds in the hope of securing a songster, but in most instances disappointment has ensued. For the benefit of such, we will communicate a rule, upon the authority of a lady of long experience, and one who has one of the most fluent and melodious songsters now in her cage we ever listened to, by which a singing bird may always be secured in the nest. All mocking birds have more or less white feathers in each wing. The females never have more than eight, and never sing. Some males also never have more than eight, and they likewise never sing. But whenever a male bird has nine white feathers in each wing, he is sure to become a good songster. Will some of our bird fanciers try the experiment, and give the public the result?—Cheraw (South Carolina) Gazettee.

Humming Birds' Tongues.—The tongue of a humming bird is very curious. It has two tubes alongside of each other, like the two tubes of a double-barrelled gun. At the tip of the tongue the tubes are a little separated, and their ends are shaped like spoons. The honey is spooned up, as we may say, and then it is drawn into the mouth through the long tubes of the tongue. But the bird uses its tongue another way. It catches insects with it, for it lives on these as well as on honey. It catches them in this way: the two spoons grasp the insect like a pair of tongs, and the tongue bending, puts it into the bird's mouth. The tongue, then, of the humming bird is not merely one instrument, but it contains several instruments together—two pumps, two spoons, and a pair of tongs.

Parisian Fashions.—The Paris correspondent of the Journal of Commerce says the most pretty and becoming novelties for summer bonnets, are of crape and tulle, with garlands, tufts of flowers, and a bandeau, in the form of a diadem across the forehead. The fancy straws are extremely elegant, one especially of black and straw colored squares, tastefully trimmed with gold colored velvet and black guipure.—The last style of trimming for the very white and fine Bolgian straws is a large bow of black taffeta ribbon on the top of the bonnet; the barolet is of spotted tulle, and all the edges of the bonnet and barolet are bordered with a fancy colored velvet; cherry forms the best contrast with the black bow; the inside of the bonnet is formed of white blonde, and the strings are of white ribbon.

A Pretty Jeu d'Esprit.—There is frequently piquante and brilliant wit, as well as method, in the madness of insane persons. A short time since, as Church, the American painter, was visiting the retreat in Hartford, he was introduced to one of the female inmates as the artist who had "painted Niagara all but the roar." "Ah," she replied, "the world does that." The loud praise which the prince has elicited, gave the compliment a felicitous appositeness truly remarkable.

Romanism and the Bible.—The Church of Rome has preserved the volume that is destined to destroy her. Like Pharaoh's daughter, she has taken up the child of God, and nursed it as her own, for the destruction of her own kingdom.—Cazson.

HON. THOMAS H. BENTON.

The St. Louis journals, of the 17th ult., come to us full of the Benton obsequies, which took place on that day. In the course of the funeral sermon, preached by Rev. Mr. Cowan, of Carondelet, the following incidents, illustrative of Colonel Benton's religious experiences, were related:

"The deceased has always been a believer in the truth of the christian religion. He was not one of those who supposed it necessary to repudiate the christian religion as an evidence of superior intellect. He was trained by a pious mother, who was an Episcopalian, and to whom he was indebted, in a great degree, for his distinction in subsequent life. In the kind providence of God he has, moreover, been favored in having for his most intimate friends those who feared God, and cared for his soul. His sainted wife was a devoted christian, and always felt a deep concern for his spiritual interests. Your former beloved pastor, Dr. Potts, left no opportunity unimproved in an endeavor to bring him to Christ. He corresponded with him in regard to religion, and doubtless made him the subject of his prayers, as long as God left him on earth to be thus engaged. The mind of the deceased, doubtless, has long been interested, in a greater or less degree, on the matter of his salvation.

"It may not be improper to mention a circumstance which occurred in the year 1851. I was engaged in a protracted meeting in Scott county, in the town of Benton. The deceased visited the place during the meeting. He attended the exercise which took place during his stay in town. He listened attentively to the sermon. My text was, 'Almost thou persuadest me to be a christian.' At the close, he came up and took me by the hand, and placing his mouth close to my ear, he remarked, in allusion to my text, 'It is all my own case;' and burst into a flood of tears. Those, therefore, who have intimately known his history, especially in the later years of his life, have not been surprised at the happy termination of his earthly career. They have been expecting it, and have not been disappointed."

SARAH, OF MARLBOROUGH.

None of the Duchess's charms, when they were at their very proudest height, had been so fondly prized by the Duke, her husband, as her splendid head of hair. One day, upon his offending her, by some act of disobedience to her "sovereign will," the bright thought occurred, as she sat considering how she should plague him most, that it would be a hearty vexation to see his favorite tresses cut off. Instantly the deed was done; she cropped them short, and laid them where he must pass through to enter her department; but, to her cruel disappointment, he passed, cursed, and re-passed, calm enough to provoke a saint, neither angry or sorrowful, seemingly quite unconscious both of his crime and his punishment. Concluding he must have overlooked the hair, she ran to secure it. It had vanished; and she remained in perplexity the rest of the day. The next, as he continued silent and her looking-glass spoke the change—a cruel one—she began to think she had for once done a foolish thing.

Nothing more ever transpired upon the subject until the Duke's death, when she found her beautiful ringlets carefully laid up in a drawer where he kept whatever he held most precious. The Duchess survived her illustrious husband not less than twenty-two years, dying at the age of eighty-four, in 1744. The love she had for the Duke may in no small degree be inferred from the following anecdote: Though in the sixty-second year, she still possessed some attractions, inasmuch that she was sought in marriage by the Duke of Somerset. Her answer is highly characteristic, and greatly to be admired: "Marriage is very unsuitable at my age; but, were I only thirty, I would not permit even the emperor of the world to succeed in that heart which has been, all my life, devoted to John, Duke of Marlborough."

A MAIDEN'S GRATITUDE.

In the year 1844, a native of Montrose took a passage on board a steamer at Liverpool, to proceed to Scotland. Soon after the steamer left the Dook Gates, a young lady accidentally fell overboard, and was rescued by our Scottish friend, who, jumping overboard with a life-preserver, brought her safely on board the steamer. During the passage she was asked what recompense she intended making her preserver, when she modestly replied that all she could do was to bestow upon him her hand; but, much to her grief, she was informed that he was a married man. After a lapse of about fourteen years, ten of which she had been living with her brother at New York, Miss —— felt inclined to return to Scotland; and on her arrival, immediately set to work to find out her kind benefactor, which she succeeded in doing; and, finding him to be a widower, at once offered him her hand and heart; and we understand the wedding is to take place in May next.

GENERAL HAVELOCK TO HIS SON.

In a letter written by General Havelock, of India, to his little son five years old, he says: "They tell me that now-adays, it is the fashion for little boys like you to do no work till they are seven years old; so, if you are spared, you have two more years of holiday; but then you must begin to labor in earnest. And I will tell you what you will have to learn. The first thing is to love God, and to understand his law and obey it, and to believe and love Jesus Christ, since he was sent into the world to do good to all people who will believe in him. Then, as it is likely you will be brought to be a soldier in India, you will have to be taught to ride well, and a little Latin, and a great deal of mathematics, which are not easy; and [illegible] tic, and English history, and [illegible] man, Hindostanee, drawing, and [illegible]cation. Now, you will say this is a great deal—quite a burden, and a vast load of learning. But if you are, from the first, very industrious, and never let any day but the Sabbath pass over without four hours' diligent study at least, you will soon find that the mountain of learning before you is cut down into a very little hill indeed."

A Transcendentalist.—A gentleman of Boston, who takes a business view of most things, when recently asked respecting a person of quite a poetic temperament, replied:—"O, he is one of those men who have cravings after the indefinite, and divings after the unfathomable, but who never pays cash!"

Only a single copy of the London Times is now allowed to enter France, and that is sent to Paris in a sealed envelop, from Boulogne, especially addressed to Napoleon himself.

REVIVAL.

... I describe it? I believe that it is ... slowly but surely in all the churches. The most glorious and powerful fea... of the movement (next to the conversion of souls) is the perfect harmony and union of all denominations in the work. They have been holding union prayer meetings for 10 or 11 weeks past; and up to this present time they seem to grow in interest. I have attended a good many of them and have felt that it was good to be there. They hold one week in one church, and then, by agreement on Friday even... adjourn to another church on Monday—giving out on Saturday where they are to as... for the ensuing week.

The meeting was held on last evening for the first time, in the Methodist Church, South—the week previously in the McKendree charge of the Church, North. An incident, worth not..., occurred on last evening. The Methodist ministers—North, South and Protestant were on the platform—the latter, I think, leading. It had been a good meeting, and, at the close of it, one of the Episcopal ministers begged for three minutes time to say a few words. Com... consent awarded him his request—the church being quite full. He said, in substance, that the three great revivals preceding this, had been all characterized by one striking feature of resemblance to this, viz: That the four gave evident proof to the world that the work was all of God and not of man. On the day of Pente... cost and afterwards under the guidance of the Apostles and Evangelists—at the reformation under Luther and his co-temporaries, and about a century ago under Wesley, Whitfield, etc., the effects of all of which were yet being felt; and now again God was wonderfully at work among people without any particular leader, doing wonders among the children of men. He sat down and notices were given out, but before the benediction was pronounced he quickly jumped up again and begged for a few seconds more. All were ready to hear. He said that after he had sat down a lay brother had whis... pered to him that he had just arrived from Win... chester, Va., where they were holding the Epis... copal convention for that diocese, (I had pre... viously met with Bishop Meade, on his way thither) and this lay brother informed him that the whole people there—to the number of 1500 perhaps—had been engaged in meetings similar to ours, and at this very time of the day the whole convention—bishops, priests, deacons and people—had just held a union prayer meeting similar to that we had just passed through—whereat he glorified God and took courage. I could see the platform smile approvingly, and from the workings of the muscles of the face could not help but surmise that they thought, Now, if the speaker had been a Methodist the people would have said that he had shouted; but, as he was an Episcopalian of course he had only "praised God for his mercy, and for his wonderful works among the children "of men."

I leave for New York to-day, whence I sail on 29th, in the steamer Edinburgh for Glasgow, from which latter place you may hear from me again.

SUBSTANCE OF CORRESPONDENCE.

GERMAN CREEK COLORED MISSION, ALA.

Rev. A. R. Raney writes: Four appointments have been added, with 27 members, one appoint... ment discontinued, 18 joined on probation, 48 adults and children baptized, 3 expelled, 2 with... drawn, and 35 professed conversion.

The work is encouraging; we have regular and punctual attendance upon preaching and general good feeling in our congregations.

One thing is to be regretted: but few of the planters have built Churches.

One (brother Robert Lewis) has promised to build a Church and is making brick for that purpose.

OPELOUSAS CIRCUIT, LA.

Rev. B. F. White writes: Up to this time we have baptized about 40 children; have been blessed with two revivals—one at Opelousas, and one at Plaquemine Brulee—both resulting in some 34 accessions to our Church. I have under my care four Sabbath-schools, all in a prosperous condition. This is a fine field for usefulness, and the preacher does not lack for friends.

CONGRATULATORY.

Rev. J. W. James writes us a letter from East Alabama, full of good things, regarding the interests of the Church and paper. To him, and to the many other brethren who have writ... ten kind words upon our removal to this post, we return our thanks. May we do our duty, and may they do theirs, and may the blessing of God be upon us all, and upon the Advocate.

LETTER FROM REV. R. ABBEY.

TO THE SHAREHOLDERS AND FRIENDS OF THE BOOK AND TRACT SOCIETY OF THE MISSISSIPPI CON... FERENCE.

DEAR BRETHREN AND FRIENDS: Without the slightest expectation or procurement on my part, or on the part of any of my friends in Mississippi, so far as I know, I was elected by the late General Conference to the office of Financial Secretary of the Publishing House. This makes it necessary for me to leave Missis... sippi. But I am much pleased to know that my place as Agent of your Society is so fully and amply supplied as it is in the appointment of the Rev. H. H. Montgomery to that office.

I leave the Society in a healthful and pros... perous condition. It affords me much satis... faction to say that I regard its prospects to-day, better than at any former period.

At the first the enterprise was regarded as somewhat in the light of an experiment by many. It was different, in some of its features from any plan of book and tract distribution hitherto practiced by the Church, but was almost uniformly regarded as an improvement both in safety and efficiency. The more it has been seen the more it has been approved. It has now proceeded so far and has succeeded so well that it has long since ceased to be regarded in the light of an experiment by any who are at all acquainted with its operations.

The plan upon which we have been acting in Mississippi was substantially adopted by the General Conference and is now the settled policy of the Church, recommended to all the Annual Conferences.

Your Society is now worth considerably over twenty thousand dollars. Over seven thousand dollars of the one hundred dollar subscriptions have been paid in and it is hoped that those whose notes are now due will soon take them up and that large numbers of additional sub... scribers will soon be placed upon the list. At least ten thousand dollars ought to be added before next Conference.

You have now a plan of benevolent enter... prise presented for your acceptance and adop... tion worthy the Church, the country and the age. It promises more largely, in the belief of all those acquainted with its operations, than any thing of the sort hitherto presented to the public. It is hoped that, substantially at least, it will soon go into operation in all the Con... ferences.

Let it receive a large and liberal support, and it will tend greatly to place our Church in the position it ought to occupy before the world. We can and we ought to take the lead, far, far away, in the business of book and tract distri... bution. You should do the leading book busi... ness in Mississippi.

The Board of Managers have recently leased one of the best and most eligible stores in Vicksburg and have made other arrangements for a vigorous prosecution of the business. A house will be bought in due season

You have a first rate Agent, a first rate Board of Managers and a good plan of procedure, and I sincerely hope to see the Mississippi Depository lead the other Conferences in this branch of beneficent and religious labor. But I do not hesitate to intimate to you that other Conferences are about entering the field and will offer you a vigorous competition.

I feel authorized to say that the Banner Con... ference, in this field of labor will be suitably complimented by the Publishing House and no doubt will be by the next General Conference.

It must no longer be said that other Churches are ahead of us in enterprises of this sort. But on the contrary it must be said that we are at least as far in the advance of others in benevolent labor as we presume ourselves to be, and claim to be above them in doctrinal and ecclesiastical position.

I still retain my membership in the Missis... sippi Conference and, until Conference, my place as a member of the Board of Managers, and I expect to die a shareholder in your Book and Tract Society. Your friend and fellow la... borer,

R. ABBEY.

THE CHURCH EVANGELIST.

REV. C. K. MARSHALL, D. D.

This gentleman, well known to our readers, was appointed by the General Conference to the Agency of "The Church Evangelist," a paper to be established for general circulation throughout the Church and country. Rev. R. Abbey, in a letter to this paper, says:

The Church Evangelist is in prospect, not in being. The scheme has been ably and exten... sively advocated for several years past. It was presented to the General Conference four years ago, but for lack of time or a thorough understanding of the subject, or perhaps both, it failed at that time.

The plan was adopted by the General Con... ference at Nashville with much more unani... mity than was looked for by many.

It was not in the power of the General Conference to have placed the establishment and building of this great enterprise in better or more efficient hands than those of Dr. Mar... shall. He projected the plan many years ago, and has advocated it, as it has been more and more improved and matured, from that time to the present.

The Church Evangelist is intended to be a paper for universal circulation in the Church and as far as possible out of it. It is to be put into circulation not by individual subscrip... tion, on the general plan of newspapers, but to be supported by endowment, by general fund, and by Church subscriptions in mass for all the members indiscriminately. It ought to commence with an issue of 100,000 copies at least, and it should soon obtain an issue of three or four times that number.

The paper is intended to have no local char... acter, but is to be adapted to one place as much as another. To the local papers of the Church will be left all matters of a local nature—that is—such as are of peculiar interest to particular places. It is to be "A Weekly Tract."

The Baton Rouge Comet has the following in reference to Dr. Marshall: To the city of Vicks... burg, where Mr. Marshall resides, he has been what John Howard was to England. Without the aid and support of charitable associations, and without a word of encouragement or approval for his course, save that of his own conscience, he has walked the streets of that city by night as well as by day, when the plague, with its invisible agents, has grasped her in the chilling embrace of death, offering kind words of consolation to the afflicted—the priceless jewels at such times which all the wealth of Granada cannot purchase. * * * The position which he now occupies as one of the profoundest thinkers of the age—as a man of science as well as an eloquent and learned divine—has been attained by his own exertion and the perseverance of his own indomitable will. C. K. Marshall is a self-made man. What he has received by tuition in "schools and col... leges" is not worth computing in the sum of what he has acquired by his own industry and personal application.

DARK PROSPECTS IN HUNGARY.

A writer says "that the religious condition of the Protestants in Hungary is deplored.—They are oppressed by the government, and divided among themselves, while both minis... ters and members seem destitute of spirituality and enlightened Christian zeal. 'As regards any true conversions of the heart, real godli... ness and scriptural holiness, such are hardly to be met with any where in this country, except, in some rare cases; and where they do exist, they have been mostly brought about by means of foreign influences, as in the case of some few Baptist brethren, and others awakened and converted through the labors of Dr. Schauffler, when staying at Vienna.'"

THE DEFAULTING SUNDAY SCHOOL AGENT.

Mr Fred. W. Porter, the defaulting agent of the Sunday School Union, whose fall made such a sensation a short time since, has at length made a full confession of the great wrong he has done. He stood very high in the Society and in church and he was almost the last man who would have been suspected of so foul a deed. In a letter recently laid before the Board of the Sunday School Union, he has made a full confession. He began his wrong-doing nine... teen years ago! His temperature began with the Mulberry and Silkworm speculation, nine... teen years ago, and under the garb of reli... gion he has for that long time carried on his dishonest plans. He allows that at the start he knew it was wrong; but he hoped to be able to meet the notes as they matured. But he was unable to do so; he was compelled to renew his notes and pay a heavy bonus.

Thus, for nineteen years, he has been tread... ling the thorny path of sin, praised for virtues that he knew he did not possess, and taking of the sacrament, which, according to his own professed faith, was adding damnation to him... self at each unworthy reception. He defraud... ed the Society out of over $80,000 but the Philadelphia broker, who aided him to the dis... honest gain, promptly paid all the notes that his name was on, and the loss was lessened nearly $40,000. Mr. Porter confesses that in the nineteen years of fraud, he had used the name of the Society to the large amount of $600,000, by renewals and re-issues. No won... der he is a sick man, one whom, if the law does not reach, the grave will soon cover up. Nineteen years of fraud and crime, and perpe... trated in the name of religion—with despair looking him in the face—exposure waiting for him at the corners of each street—with re... morse gnawing at his heart—and the worm that dies not hastening to his repast! Mr. Porter's confession will soon be made public.

METHODISTS AND THE BIBLE SOCIETY.

No denomination has been more loyal to the Bible Society than the Methodists. A discus... sion has, however, sprung up between Dr. Holdich, Bible Secretary, and Dr. Floy, of New York, as to what proportion of the funds are contributed by Methodist Churches. Dr. H. supposes that the annual minutes of Confer... ences report all given by our congregations, except about $30 annually for each Conference; and, taking his figures from the reports, under... rates our contributions. Dr. Floy thinks the amount not so reported to be ten times as much as stated. We are of a like opinion, and our late General Conference abolished the require... ment to report money collected for the Bible Society, upon the ground that the report was always far short of the facts. As to the Me... thodist representation in the board, Dr. Floy says: "There is one other point in which I can... not agree with the representative of Methodism at the Bible House. I wish I could. He says: 'That the Board will increase that represenata... tion, (from the Methodist Episcopal Church,) in due season, I firmly believe.' Possibly he gives a meaning to the words, 'in due season,' differ... ent from what I should. Last January, at an unusually large meeting of the Board, this un... fair christian preponderance was brought to their notice, and four months afterwards there was an election to fill nine vacancies in that body. Nine gentlemen were elected managers for the ensuing four years. Not one of them is a Methodist. I will not say, with the secre... tary, 'I firmly believe,' but I will say that, judging from the past, there is reason to be... lieve that Bishop Hobart's prediction, that 'the Bible Society will become the mere tool of the General Assembly,' is likely to be verified—'in due season.'"—Methodism is well disposed to cherish the Bible Society—but it is beyond con... troversy that it should have an equitable re... presentation in its Board.

COMIC RELIGIOUS ADDRESSES.

The British Banner has some remarks on the above subject which are adapted to this coun... try, as well as to the old world. Alluding to the demagogic style too common in the pulpit, it says that if the spread of a style so perni... cious receive no check, we know not what low vulgarities, what indecencies, and what degra... dation of things sacred the pulpit may not ere long have to answer for. We have ever felt, and have not failed to express, our earnest desire that the working classes should be spoken to in their own way, but certainly not in this way. That such chatter should gather thous... ands to listen, or have its multitudes of pur... chasers when published, is by no means ex... traordinary. The clown in the booth, the come... dian on the stage, the cheap John hawking his wares in the public highway, all gather crowds by indulging in rude, coarse, and sharp humor. Only thus, it is said, can the multitudes be gathered. Yet the multitudes heard Jonathan Edwards, and trembled. Richard Baxter, Adams, and Howe effected more than our mod... ern pulpit novelists will ever do. It is not in this way that the problem, now so much talked about, of "adapting the pulpit to the wants of the age," is to be solved. Life in the pulpit needs no more to be accompanied by spasms than torpidity; and a man may weave into his speech the vivacity of Colet, Latimer, and Robinson, without the capers of Santa Clasa, or Friar Gerund.

"THE STAR OF THE EAST."—The "Star of the East," (Aster tes Anatoles,) is a new weekly journal published at Athens, Greece. Its editor is Mr. M. D. Kalopothakes, the accom... plished Greek, who spent four years lately in the United States. The paper is ably conduct... ed and is fully equal, if not superior, to any of its contemporaries in the Grecian Metropolis. Its noble religious stand will call forth the hearty sympathy of all Americans who wish well to the classic land of literature and art. Mr. Kalopothakes is well fitted by his learning, piety, and judgment to benefit largely his native country.

LOCAL PREACHERS' ASSOCIATION.

We have received from an esteemed friend, a local preacher in Alabama, a circular of the "Local Preachers Association in New York and Brooklyn," addressed to all the local preachers, North and South, inviting them to attend their anniversary, Oct. 3d, for the purpose of adopt... ing measures for their greater usefulness. Sec... tionalism is entirely eschewed. Accompanying the circular is a letter to the Alabama friend, from which we make the following extracts.

By the within circular you see our associa... tion sends a fraternal invitation to our brethren throughout the land to meet us in this city the 3d day of October. You will hail this gather... ing with joy. May I depend upon your aid and influence in having this invitation inserted in all your religious papers at the South, and also, to have special notices sent to local prea... chers? I sincerely hope that there will be something done by which a union of lay prea... chers may be effected that will knew none of these walls of separation or local difficulties, but will bind together in the holy work of preaching the gospel to the poor without money or price in every section of our common coun... try. Why should the local preachers of the Church, South, or the local preachers of the Church, North, be parties to the insane cry, "There shall be no dealing between the Jews and the Samaritans." He that has philanthropy enough to keep him in the field as a local prea... cher, proclaiming the riches of Christ without any reward save that which Christ imparts, surely can have a heart large enough to take in all those who are thus laboring for souls. I will not urge you to a hearty co-operation; I will not present arguments to induce you to labor to effect this union. I am sure of your co-operation. If you could come to the city as a delegate, or on your own responsibility, I should be most happy to introduce you to my family, who I know will join with me in making your stay as pleasant as christian friendship can do.

THE CANVAS BEGUN.

In view of the action of the late General Conference in reference to papers authorizing the Annual Conferences to adopt such of the Church papers as are now existing, for their organs, become liable for their pecuniary in... debtedness and realize their profits, if any, Bro. Hicks, editor of the Herald of Truth, announces there will be two or three applicants for the favor and patronage of the Holston Conference. The Southern Advocate, the North Carolina Ad... vocate, and perhaps the Richmond Advocate, will, he thinks, all be asking that Conference for its patronage. And there is also, he thinks, a strong probability that the Nashville Advo... cate will seek to hold on to that field by virtue of some agreement "made and entered into" between the parties when the Holston Advocate was discontinued. Finally, as might have been expected, Bro. Hicks more than intimates they can support a paper of their own, and that the Herald of Truth is, or should be, that paper.

So says the St. Louis Advocate, the editor of which paper no doubt recollects the discussion at the General Conference, in the Committee on Books and Periodicals, in reference to the danger of the very tendency above mani... fested, as inherent in the provision then under discussion, and afterwards adopted, in a some... what modified form. Some rich things will grow out of the matter. Some ecclesiastical statesmen that we wot of will have as much reputation for management for particular ends, as they once had for a sound Catholic polity.

RELIGION IN FRANCE.

A correspondent of the News of the Churches gives a gloomy picture of the condition of France. He says: "It is often believed that we have here 35,000,000 of Catholics; it would be nearer the truth to say that we have 35,... 000,000 infidels. If I wished to give a more exact statement, I would say that one section of the population is infidel, the other deistical. In one section of the deistical, there is one large party which expects nothing after this life, and another party who hope for a future existence; but all those who believe in this fu... ture existence are persuaded that they them... selves will be happy. The idea of eternal condemnation is completely absent; in every case, no person thinks he has deserved it. The type of the French Catholic in our day is some... what of the following: 'I belive neither in the Pope nor the mass; I believe in one God, the Creator; perhaps there is also a future life; but in any case I am neither a murderer nor thief; I am therefore certain not to be con... demned to eternal punishment.' The literary men and the Government, having no faith in the Romish system, look on it as the most con... venient bridle to hold the people, and therefore support it against all attacks from without. He fears that few among the clergy themselves have any profounder convictions."

WESLEYAN METHODIST STATISTICS.

The London Watchman publishes a corrected table of the returns made at the recent district meetings of the Wesleyan body, from which it appears that in twenty-nine districts there is an increase of 7187 members, whereas in three only is there a decrease, amounting in all to but 199; showing a net increase on the year of 6988, with 22,652 persons admitted on trial for membership at the Ministerial Visitation of the Society Classes in March last. The total number of members in Great Britain is now 277,083. The Watchman congratulates the Con... nexion on the unprecedented fact in its history, that no less than 120 young men have offered themselves, and have been conditionally accept... ed, for the work of the Christian ministry.

The Methodist Protestant, Baltimore, begins its twenty-fifth volume. It is an excellent pa... per. Their late General Conference wisely re-elected Rev. Dr. Reese to the editorship.

The New York Christian Inquirer says that the first need, perhaps, of the church at the present day, is not as much mind as muscle.

THE RENOVATION OF MOUNT VERNON.

The Washington Union has the annexed interesting paragraph:

The ladies of the Mount Vernon Association have solicited Mr. George C. Thorburn to take charge of Mount Vernon. It will be gratifying to the people, of Washington, as well as patri... tic citizens elsewhere, to know that it is in... tended to raise a large fund—as much as ... 000, if possible—the interest of which will be appropriated towards beautifying the place from time to time, the cultivation of rare and beautiful trees, flowers, (the seeds and cuttings of which will be distributed through the try,) laying out the grounds in the most ful mannor, and, in a word, making it the ... den of America. Among other improve... contemplated, are the restoration of an ... church on the premises; built by Washington long gone to decay, and the building of a mu... leum to cost from $25,000 to $30,000. We hope the efforts of these noble ladies will be crowned with success, and that they may complish all their undertakings. Every lover of his country cannot but be proud of these ladies for rescuing the "Mecca of America" from the ruin and decay fast settling upon it.

ADVANTAGES OF ST. LOUIS.

Rev. Milton Bird, who is about to remove to Saint Louis, to become the editor of the Cumberland Presbyterian paper, speaking of the advantages of this city as a commercial center, and a point from which news may most rapidly disseminated, says, very truly:

There is a more rapid concentration of East... ern and Western news at St. Louis, than other locality in the world. Every year, Western news is gaining in importance, and already surpasses Eastern news, especially to Western people, the people on the sun-set side of the Alleghenies. Any reflecting person can see how this is working. This tendency will in... crease as the facilities of intercouse with the gulf and the Pacific coast are improved and multiplied. In this St. Louis has a manifest advantage over other localities.

It is now the controlling commercial center in the valley of the West. No rival can rise to take this control from it. If ever the cap... tal of the United States is removed from the district of Columbia, in my opinion it will be established at St. Louis. This is the great cen... ter of influence in the Mississippi Valley. This Valley will soon hold in its hands, and it does not already, the controlling influence of our government. Viewed in this light, no... is of equal importance to St. Louis. The ... vantages of this locality are quite obvious.

RUSSIAN TELEGRAPH TO AMERICA.

The St. Petersburg accounts up to the 8th June mention that, among other schemes ... projected, there is a grand line of tele... between Russia and North America. The ... is to lay the wire through Siberia, thence ... water from the north-eastern point of Asia, to the coast of the Russian possessions on the American continent, and finally to be ... joined to the wires of the United States. Al... though this gigantic undertaking, when men... tioned, may lead many persons to look upon the matter with astonishment, and to consider the project as belonging to the fabulous, yet its execution, after all, may not be doubted as possible, when the vast improvements and inventions of recent times be duly considered.

VALUATION OF NEW YORK PROPERTY.

At the last meeting of the New York City Board of Supervisors, the Committee on An... nual Taxes presented a report on the tax levy. The value of the real estate in the city and county of New York, as assessed this year, is $368,346,296—being an increase over last year of $16,834,219. The assessed valuation of real and personal estate in the city and county of New York is, therefore, $531,194,... 290—being an increase of $10,634,808. The tax levy for 1858 amount to $,740,741 31—an increase over last year of $504,174 79. The principal items in the tax list are: Common schools, $1,126,013; alms-house, $606,000; salaries, $584,490; police, $888,548; cleaning streets, $280,000; election expenses are put down at $50,000 [illegible] monument to Gen. Worth, $10,000; donations, $15,000; and "errors and delinquencies," $5000.

A LONG PASTORATE.

On the 27th of June, Rev. Dr. Snell, senior pastor of the First Congregational Church in North Brookfield, preached a discourse appro... priate to the day as the sixtieth anniversary of his settlement. He now in his eighty-fourth year, and has lived to see all the church over which he was settled in his youth, swept away by death. Having preached a discourse at the fortieth, and another at the fiftieth anniversary of his ordination, the discourse in the present instance had historical reference only to the last ten years, during most of which period, as senior pastor, the preacher had been relieved from responsibility and active service by the associate pastor, Rev. C. Cushing.

OPENINGS FOR THE BIBLE.—At the late monthly meeting of the Managers of the American Bible Society, communications were read from agents and correspondents in Fuh-Chan, China,—Lima, Peru,—Athens, Greece,—Madras, India,—and Oregon and California, reporting progress in the work of Bible distribution. In China, the young converts love the Bible, and in California, there has been a great demand for it. Five new auxiliaries were recognised at this meeting.

LONG ARTICLES.—The Western Christian Advo... cate says: "We are now, as we always have been, of the opinion that nothing will sooner or more thoroughly kill a newspaper than long articles."

THE MISSIONARY TREASURY at Nashville needs replenishing. The treasurer wishes that the preachers should act promptly in view of this fact. Collect brethren, and remit.

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

LITERATURE, EDUCATION, AND ART.

John A. Jackson, the sculptor, is engaged upon a bust of John Howard Payne, the author of "Sweet Home."

It is stated in the French newspapers that Mr. Theirs is about to write his memoirs; but, instead of being so voluminous as those of M. Guizot, they will be comprised in a single volume, and will bear the title of "Simple Notes."

The Rev. Francis Wayland, D. D., of Providence, has a work in press entitled "Sermons to the Churches," which will appear early in the autumn.

Miss Burdett Coutts has given £100 toward the fund for purchasing the late Hugh Miller's geological collection.

Johannes Muller, of the University of Berlin, one of the greatest physiological scholars of the age is dead. He was born in 1801 in Coblentz, and since 1833 has been attached to the University of Berlin; but his fame as a writer and scholar has spread far beyond the limits of his own country.

THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH, by Rev. J. P. Tustin, editor of the Southern Baptist, Charleston, S. C., is a small work of forty-two pages, in which the authority, perpetuity, and sanctity of the Sabbath are set forth.

The oration of Maj. F. M. Capers, son of the late Bishop, at the Commencement of Wofford College, is spoken of as highly chaste and eloquent.

A statement having been made that Washington Irving, the son of John Howard Payne, was the author of "Home, Sweet Home," Mr. Irving has written a letter disclaiming authorship, to the honor of which he thinks Mr. Payne undoubtedly entitled.

Mr. John Shakspeare died at Langley Priory, England, on the 10th of June, in his 83d year. The deceased gentleman will be remembered for his princely benevolence in giving the sum of £5000 for the purchase and preservation of Shakspeare's house at Stratford on Avon.

A work by Martin Luther, never before translated into English, has just appeared in London. It is called "The Exposition; A Commentary on the first five chapters of the Book of Genesis."

It is in contemplation to establish a State Historical Society in Mississippi.

The friends of the College will rejoice to hear that it has been again blessed with a season of religious refreshing. We learn that a meeting has just closed which proved a great spiritual benefit to the Church in the College. Several young men of fine promise were converted, and have joined the Church. The religious influence among the students at this time, is truly gratifying.

The Trustees of the University of Mississippi, have created a professorship of English language and literature, and elected the Rev. W. D. Moore, of Virginia, to fill the chair.

The Huntsville Female College, is under the charge of President George M. Everhart. The course of instruction is very thorough and the domestic arrangements of the Institution well considered and salutary. To such parents as wish to send daughters abroad, this college offers strong advancements, whether we consider health or educational facilities.

Pope Pius IX entered on the thirteenth year of his pontificate on the 17th of June.

Macaulay has announced that he will confine himself in future to his closet as a historian, and take no further part in public life.

Ex-President Millard Fillmore is suffering severely from inflammation of the eyes. They are so weak that he is forced to forego reading almost entirely.

Ex-President John Tyler has purchased a handsome villa near Hampton, Va., between there and Old Point.

Rev. Dr. Murray, the world-wide Kirwan, has been in pastoral connection with the first Presbyterian Church of Elizabeth, N. J., for twenty-five years on the 23d day of July, when he will preach his quarter century sermon.

At the Southern Methodist Episcopal Conference, held recently at Nashville, Tenn., some remarkable tall preachers were present. There was the Rev. Mr. Young, of Missouri, who stands full six feet eight inches in his slippers; the Rev. Mr. Kelley, South Carolina, who stands full six feet six inches; the Rev. Mr. Alexander, of Texas, six feet six inches, and the Rev. Dr. Mitchell, of Alabama, six feet six inches and a half.

Rev. I. S. Kalloch attended an evening meeting at the Baptist meeting-house in Rockland, Me., recently, and got into a sharp discussion with Deacon Wilson, who was a prominent witness in the famous Kalloch trial, and Elder Tucker, a Baptist preacher. The discussion ended in a row very much like a row, which was at length ended by the gas being turned off, leaving the audience in total temporal darkness.

Mexican Vesrucci, who cut some figure in the country many years ago, as the descendant of the great navigator, Americus Vespucius, is residing at Ogdensburg, N. Y. In describing the fifth of July celebrations at Ogdensburg, the Republican says: Madame Vespucci, we hear, threw open her house and grounds to the free ingress and egress of spectators, and thousands visited her fountains and beautiful walks, and very many made her acquaintance and partook of her hospitalities.

It is stated that an interesting report has been received at the Treasury Department from Prof. Alexander, now in England, engaged in endeavoring to secure a uniform currency for the two countries, as authorized by the last Congress. He says the decimal currency will be readily agreed upon by the commissioners.

It is stated that the London Times is about to be printed by beet root paper, at a saving of something like $100,000 per annum. This is the invention of Dr. Collyer, who is well known in this country.

The Belgian Government has decided on having a census taken of all the blind, and deaf and dumb, in Belgium, on the 30th inst.

Mt. Vernon has been selected as the county site of the new county of White, Ga., by a vote of the people.

The Leviathan is no longer to be called the Leviathan, but is to assume her original name—the Great Eastern.—She has been registered in that name, William Harrison, master.

The Illinois Central Railroad is restored to complete order; the trains leave Cairo daily at 6 A. M., and at 5 P. M., for Chicago and the East.

A terrible event occurred on Sunday last at the church of the Rev. Mr. Galbraith, (United Presbyterian) of Freeport, Armstrong county, Pa. The Rev. gentleman was in the very posture and act of prayer when the church edifice where the congregation were worshiping was struck by lightning. A Mrs. Ramaley was instantly killed, and her two brothers, Israel and George Watson, and her unmarried sister, Miss Jane Watson, were severely but not dangerously injured. Mr. Robert Morris, who occupied a seat in front of Mrs. Ramaley, was severely injured, but it was thought he would recover.

A beginning has been made of the Waldensian colony in Illinois, near the Odell station, on the Chicago, Alton and St. Louis Railroad, where 3500 acres have been procured at a reasonable rate, and eight heads of families have become the pioneers of the settlement. They are very poor, and unless American friends do something for them, they will suffer.

NEWS FROM THE INTERIOR.

LOUISIANA.

The Houma Ceres says: While other portions of our State are suffering from the effects of the high water, the parish of Terrebonne is comparatively unaffected. Crops with us never were better, and we may now consider this parish as the Mount Ararat of Louisiana.

The Planters' Banner has from one of its correspondents: We are flooded again! I learn there is a fourth crevasse on that unhappy place near Labadie. There is no doubt of it, for the water is running down upon us like a wild horse without bit or bridle. We shall be drowned—there is no help for us!

In another part it adds: It appears that the high water of the Mississippi will never abate. It falls a few inches, then rises a little, then stands still. People have waited and hoped until their hearts have failed them.—Crevasse after crevasse has opened floods of water upon fields of cane and corn. The waters of these crevasses have backed up wherever it could, and they still remain unchecked and unabated.

The chief Engineer of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas railroad makes a very flattering report of the condition of the road. The high water has not affected the working of the finished portion. The cars continue to make regular trips without interruption, and the business of the road has been very good. The water is now receding, and all doubts of the practicability of the road, even in the highest stages of water ever known in the Mississippi, are now removed.

The Claiborne Advocate reports that the parish has been blessed with fine copious showers. The corn is now considered secure and the cotton looks decidedly promising.

The True Delta estimates the loss by freshets at $33,000,000.

The Franklin Sun, of the 19th inst., speaks of the prevalence of small pox in the Hurricane and Warsaw settlements, in Winnsboro' Franklin parish. An old gentleman named F. A. Henry, and two of his slaves had died of the disease, which has spread to other families.

The early corn that, previous to the rains setting in about three weeks ago, did not promise to yield enough for seed, has come out finely, and now affords a prospect of an abundant crop. And in the meantime, the long continued spell of hot weather has had a very favorable effect upon the cotton crop.

ALABAMA.

A fire broke out in Mobile on the night of the 25th, in the stable of Mr. James Kelly, on St. Joseph street, which was entirely destroyed the stable and the Masonic Hall adjoining. The Custom House was somewhat defaced; the walls of granite being peeled off in many places by the intense heat. The Southern Bank building also sustained slight injury. The property destroyed was mostly insured. A negro man belonging to the stable is missing.

All the grading between Mr. Coleman's contract and the Mobile and Ohio railroad (seven sections) has been let out to contract, on good terms, by the engineer.

TEXAS.

There is a portion of Texas, between the latitudes of 31 and 32°, lying between the Trinity and Brazos rivers, which has made better averaged crops than anywhere in the West, and the health most excellent.

The Texas Baptist mentions a revival of religion in Grimes county, during which twenty joined the Church.

A tri-weekly mail has been started from Quitman by way of Gainesville to Bonham.

The Quitman Herald speaks of copious showers of rain having fallen recently, and says that in those sections which have been visited by these showers, the corn crop will be good should not another rain fall during the summer.

The contract for compiling and publishing the State Digest of the Laws of Texas, has been awarded to Messrs. Oldham & White who have agreed to furnish the State with 5000 copies at $3, per copy.

There was a grand Railroad celebration at Hempstead on the 29th ult., in honor of the completion of the first fifty miles of the Houston & Central Railroad to that place.—There was a turn out of the military of Houston, Galveston and adjoining counties, and an immense concourse of people, the largest perhaps that has ever assembled in the State. There were fine orations and speeches. The trains were crowded with passengers from Houston, Galveston and the lower counties generally.

Wheat is selling at from 40 to 75 cents per bushel in Wood county. The Herald says that a few loads of flour would find a ready market at Quitman, there being none for sale in the place.

The Jefferson Herald thinks the crops in Cass county, will be the finest ever before raised in that section.

It is predicted that the abundant crop this year will bring nearly one hundred thousand immigrants into the State.

San Antonio is to be lighted up with gas, Mr. Dickson, who represents a gas Company in New York, has been in the city some weeks, and has made arrangements to put up the works.

We are informed by the Superintendent of the H. B. B. & C. road that 4000 tons of iron have been purchased, sufficient to complete the road to Columbus. The iron was purchased at a very low price about $60 per ton delivered at Galveston, and will be forwarded as fast as wanted. There are twenty-eight miles graded, and twenty-two remain to be done to bring the locomotive to Columbus. We congratulate this company on their good prospects. Their road is destined to be an exceedingly profitable one.—Houston Telegraph.

MISSISSIPPI.

The Memphis Eagle and Enquirer is informed upon reliable authority that fully three-fourths of the cotton crop has been destroyed by the flood in Coahoma county. The corn crop has suffered even worse. All the plantations from Delta to Island 66 might have been protected from the flood by timely attention on the part of the planters.

The many friends of Gov. McRae, says the Memphis Avalanche, will be pleased to learn of his renewed health.

ARKANSAS.

Emigration to Arkansas is heavy and increasing.

FLORIDA.

The purser of the steamship Atlantic, reports that the U. S. steamboats Grey Cloud and Texas Ranger, belonging to the Quartermaster's Department, were to leave Tampa on the 14th inst., for this port.

He also informs us that the news had reached Tampa that the band of Tallahassee Indians had been met, and they were coming in to surrender.

RELIGIOUS AND ECCLESIASTICAL.

The Boston Recorder reports the revival as still progressing in most of the Churches in that city. Within a few months, 1632 persons have united with the different churches.

Rev. Dr. Meigs, forty years a missionary in India, has returned to this country.

The Union Prayers in New York continue, with considerable success, also in many other parts of the North.

The great revival in Columbus, Ga., continues to be spoken of in the papers.

Rev. H. G. O. Dwight writes from Constantinople that more than a hundred and twenty different books and tracts have been translated and printed in the Armenian language. The Bible was among the first of these, and next came such works as "Pilgrim's Progress," "Saint's Rest," etc. More than thirty evangelical churches have been formed, and the number of Protestants is constantly increasing.

The evangelical Churches in San Francisco are thirteen in number, and their aggregate memberships amounts to 9300.

The missionaries appointed to enter upon the new field of Christian effort opened by the discoveries of Dr. Livingstone, on the banks of the Zambesi, have left London for Cape Town.

The Archbishop of Santiago has issued a pastoral in which he complains of the existence of a Protestant chapel in Valparaiso; this intolerant act, says the Mercurio, has been treated with contempt by the citizens of Valparaiso.

The American Sunday-school Union has been saved from loss by the defalcations of Mr. P. W. Porter. He wronged the society out of $80,000, but by dexterous management, the society has obtained security to the amount of over $40,000, and the balance has been assumed by a Christian gentleman who desires the welfare of the society.

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

A fine rain fell last Monday, which was exceedingly refreshing after several sultry days.

We learn that a private dispatch has been received containing the gratifying intelligence that Mr. Louis Lay, reported by the telegraph among the killed by the accident on the New York and Erie Railroad, had three ribs broken but was not fatally injured. His wife and child, it is said, escaped unhurt. He was returning home when he met with the accident.

Four deaths by drowning, and five inquests, all in one day, we believe, are reported in the city papers.

During the eighteen or twenty days since the new chief of police has been in office, 1377 arrests have been made in the various districts. This argues well. "Be not weary in well doing."

Great complaint exists in reference to the filth and bad drainage in several parts of the city.

The Picayune has the following in reference to the New Custom House: The work upon this massive structure proceeds so slowly, that it is possible only at long intervals to find anything new to describe. The visitor to the premises will, however, now find the grand business hall of the building so near completion as to form some idea of its magnitude and of the elaborateness of its finish. It is one of the largest rooms to be named on this continent. The entire walls of the room consist of paneled marble.—Through it, longitudinally, on either side, at a proper distance from the walls, is a row of marble pillars of majestic proportions. The caps of these pillars, copied in style from those of a Grecian temple, have some additional ornaments which add to their beauty, and change, in some respect, the current of association which they suggest.—These caps cost $6000 a piece.

In the wall of this room nearest the river blocks of stationary are inserted, consisting of a full length of Gen. Jackson, the arms of the State of Louisiana, and a half length of Bienville, the founder of the city. The work was done in this city, and exhibits good taste and a skillful use of the chisel.

There are other points of the building that begin to assume some form of what is designed to be presented when the building shall have been completed; but, at the present rate of progress it is not improbable that the tendency of the public mind towards direct taxation may have changed the whole method of obtaining our revenue, and the Custom House be no longer needed for the object contemplated when its foundations were first laid.

It is stated, that forty thousand dollars worth of tickets of Swan & Co.'s lottery were sold in this city, by one man, last year. The agents for the receipt of the Havana lottery tickets, three in number, in this city, were assessed at fifteen thousand dollars income each, from this source. These sums represent ten per cent. On the tickets sold. From these statistics some idea may be formed of the extent of the contributions to foreign lotteries by the citizens of New Orleans.

CALIFORNIA.

NEW YORK, July 27.—The steamship Moses Taylor arrived from Aspinwall this morning, bringing California dates to the 5th inst., fifteen days later than previous advices. She brings $1,100,000 in gold.

The rush of miners to the Frazer river gold mines continues unabated.

The town of Victoria is crowded with Americans from California, Oregon and Washington Territories. Eligible building lots are selling at the most exorbitant prices—in some instances as high as $20,000 have been paid for a single lot.

The Hudson Bay Company are buying gold dust from the miners at fifteen dollars per ounce.

The miners had experienced some trouble from the Indians in the vicinity, but no serious outbreak is reported.

Almost fabulous stories are told of the richness and prolific resources of the Frazer river diggings, and the great success of the miners now there.

Immense sums are said to have been realized in a short space of time by the earliest discoverers.

During the fortnight which had elapsed since the sailing of the last mail steamer from San Francisco, no less than fourteen steamers and sailing vessels had cleared for the new El Dorado.

The Supreme Court of California had rendered a decision pronouncing the Sunday restriction law unconstitutional.

A destructive fire had occurred at Oroville, by which one hundred houses in the Chinese district had been destroyed.

Another large fire occurred at Stockton on the 4th of July, which destroyed the Massachusetts House, Brown Brothers' establishment, and other valuable property adjoining.

Business at San Francisco had received an unusual impetus, owing to the great demand for goods from Frazer river, and the constant stream of miners from the California diggings emigrating to the Frazer river mines.

Great activity prevailed in the provision market; provisions and mining goods of all descriptions being purchased in advance of their arrival from the United States.

THE LATEST NEWS BY TELEGRAPH.

NEW YORK, July 27.—The Cunard steamship Europa, whose advices were telegraphed from Cape Race yesterday, arrived at Halifax this morning.

From files of English papers we have some additional items of interest.

MAILS TO AUSTRALIA VIA PANAMA.

LONDON, July 17.—It is rumored on what appears to be good authority, that the Government are about to open a mail route from England to Australia via Panama. The mails to be sent alternately via the Isthmus of Suez and Panama.

TURKEY.

The Turkish troops have gained a decisive victory over the Montenegrins. After three severe conflicts with the Turkish troops, the Montenegrins were forced to retreat, and were driven to the mountains.

INDIA.

The Sepoys in India were again collecting a large force in the vicinity of Lucknow, and threatened serious trouble.

A serious difficulty had occurred at Jeddah. The Mohammedans rose on the Christian residents of the place and massacred upwards of twenty.

The French and English Consuls are among the number killed.

Three British men-of-war have been ordered thither to demand redress for the outrage.

The Turkish Government has promised the French and English Ministers at Constantinople that the massacre of the Christians at Jeddah shall be avenged.

It is however reported that the French and English Governments intend to take possession of Jeddah as a guarantee.

BRITISH REVERSES IN INDIA.

Later advices from Bombay and Calpee report that the British colonial forces of Scindia had met with serious reverses at Gwalior.

The rebels had attacked and re-captured the place, and Sir Colin Campbell was preparing a strong re-inforcement to drive the rebels again from the city.

THE INDIA BILL.

The bill for re-organizing the Government of India, which passed the House of Commons, as previously reported, had also passed to a second reading in the House of Lords.

AMERICAN SECURITIES.

There was little activity at London in American securities. The quotations exhibit little change prices.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—The President has appointed Mr. John Nugent, the editor of the San Francisco Herald, United States Agent to Frazer's River, New Caledonia, with the view of preventing outbreaks and collisions.

NEW YORK, July 28.—The steamship Empire City, Capt. Griffin, which arrived off this port to-day, from New-Orleans, via Havana, has been ordered to quarantine.

The Empire City reports that the brig Nancy has been seized at Havana, and her Captain and crew arrested and imprisoned on a charge of smuggling.

Marriages.

MARRIED—In Glenville, Ala., on the 14th instant, by Rev. Wm. A. McCarty, Dr. LEE, of Bainbridge, Ga., and Miss MARY E. GRAVES, of Glenville.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

FEMALE COLLEGE,
Columbia, Tenn.

WE return our grateful acknowledgments to our friends and patrons for the kindness and confidence they have ever manifested towards this Institution, by entrusting their dear daughters to us for instruction; and we are resolved that this trust shall never be betrayed. We will return them committed to our care with their minds accurately and thoroughly cultivated.

Please to consider—

1st. The IMPARTIALITY and THOROUGHNESS of our Examinations, and the superior scholarship of our pupils—their refined manners and lady-like department.

2d. That none of our Classes were examined an hour each by literary gentlemen, in several of the most difficult branches of Mathematics, and came off triumphant.

3d. That Gen. G. J. Pillow, Gen. Lucius J. Polk, Gen. R. H. Allen, Hon. M. H. Bell, Hon. J. Brien, Rev. Bishop Soule, D. D., Rev. Bishop Paine, D. D., Rev. J. H. McFerrin, D. D., and many other distinguished gentlemen in this and adjoining States, have permitted us to refer to them in testimony of the passion which this College holds among the literary institutions of the South.

4th. Our patronage during the year, has been 207 pupils—130 of whom were boarders—the others from town and vicinity. This is one of the largest Boarding Schools in Tennessee, and far larger than any in Columbia.

5th. Our terms are lower than other Schools. All may rely upon this.

OUR PRICES ARE,

Board, Lights, Fuel, Room, Lodging, (every thing) per session	$55 00
Tuition	21 50
[One half in advance]	$70 50
Music and use of Instruments	$35 00
Drawing and Painting, extra	15 00

Latin, Greek and Vocal Music without charge.

No Bills made by the young ladies at stores on credit.

6th. We have educated 60 teachers in this College who now stand at the head of the Profession in Tennessee, for scholarship and skill in teaching.

7th. We have a body of Teachers in the College, for the coming year, equal to any in the South, and such they have proved themselves to be, both in the Recitation Room and in our public Examinations in the presence of a thousand persons who came to witness our performances.

We solicit public patronage and favor, and confident are we that we can do ample justice to those committed to our care, since during twelve years in this School, all our patrons at home and afar have, without one exception, so far as we know, expressed the highest approbation of the institution.

Try us—Your most sanguine expectations shall be gratified.

Next session begins First Monday in September.

MURDEROUS SCAVENGERS.—Shallow practitioners have asserted that intestinal worms are not injurious, in fact that they act the part of scavengers, removing foul and indigestible matter from the alimentary canal. What audacious humbug! What miserable philosophy! Every experienced physician knows that these animals cause inflammation of the bowels and sometimes actually eat through the coating of the stomach and lower intestines, causing inevitable death. Of all the diseases of children this is the most dangerous and distressing. Unfortunately, too, it is one of the most common. In Wheat's Canadian Vermifuge, however, a safe, quick, unfailing remedy is provided. The proprietor challenges the world to show that it ever failed to effect a cure.

☞ Be particular and remember the name "Wheat's Canadian Vermifuge." This is the only article that can be depended on. Remember this. For sale by

COMMERCIAL.

The Picayune of Thursday morning says:

COTTON—There has been some few buyers in the market to-day, but mostly with offers below the views of holders, and the sales have been confined to about 600 bales. Prices are irregular and still in favor of buyers, especially for the lower qualities. Our quotations are chiefly nominal.

NEW ORLEANS CLASSIFICATION.

COFFEE—The sales comprise 1106 bags at 11c, and 63 skimmings at 9¾ @ 10c ₰ lb.

MONETARY AND FINANCIAL.

We have nothing novel to relate to-day. Good paper is getting very scarce, and there is an active competition to secure what little is offered. Rates vary from 6 @ 7 and 8 ₰ ct. Twelve months acceptances 9 @ 10.

There is no movement to notice in Stocks, but the difficulty of procuring good paper investments is gradually drawing attention to these securities.

BOARDING, ETC:

In this particular, we would inform the public that a large and elegant Boarding House, capable of accommodating more than one hundred young ladies, has been built in connection with the Academy. This department will be under the immediate supervision of President Hamilton and his accomplished lady, assisted by an agreeable and experienced matron. The rooms are sufficiently commodious, thoroughly furnished, and handsomely furnished with good beds, mirrors, carpets, tables, wardrobes, etc. And to avoid confusion, as well as for the sake of convenience, the different suites of rooms are supplied with speaking tubes, bells, and other modern improvements. In addition, the President will employ a sufficient number of trustworthy servants to meet the demands of the house in the very first style, such as cooks, washers, chambermaids, dining room servants, etc. Cleanliness about the establishment may be expected. Finally, parents and guardians who have daughters and wards to locate, in sending them to this school may rest assured that every effort will be made to guard their health and morals, cultivate their minds and manners, and have them fed perfectly at home.

In consequence of the high price of labor, eatables, etc.—to say nothing of the considerable outlay of means to furnish the house—boarders will be charged $65 00 per session of five months, everything included, one half of which must be paid at the beginning of each term.

THE CORPS OF INSTRUCTORS:

The Board of Trustees feel that they have cause to congratulate themselves and the country because of their success in securing the efficient and almost invaluable services of the experienced and reliable President, Dr. A. L. Hamilton, who unites every grace of mental accomplishment with an integrity of purpose and an energy which insure success in whatever he undertakes. Being a Virginian by birth, he is a fine specimen of the "Old Virginia gentleman," and has had large experience in teaching, having been mainly instrumental in founding, in several places in the South, permanent and now flourishing institutions. We would without hesitancy recommend Dr. Hamilton as in every way worthy of the esteem and patronage of the entire community.

As regards the Assistants, we beg leave to state that they were carefully selected by President Hamilton from some of the best Female Schools in the South. They are all thoroughly educated, high toned, and accomplished ladies; and, in addition, have had great experience in the school-room. The Trustees take great pride and pleasure in recommending them as eminently well qualified in every particular for their respective departments, to parents and guardians who have daughters and wards to educate.

We have hitherto felt the necessity of a first-class Female School in our midst; one that could cope with the most renowned institutions of the North and East; and we now tender to the country our sincere congratulations upon having at last secured so great a desideratum.

THE CITY OF CLARKSVILLE.
